Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, a man who for thirty long years retained the confidence of the people of his district and held the respect and affection of the members of this House needs no eulogy at the hands of any man, but so long as this honorable House deems it proper to set apart a day for memorial exercises to its deceased members, I can not refrain from laying my tribute on the bier of my late venerable colleague. ALFRED C. HARMER was no ordinary man. He belonged to that class of citizens who entered public life with the strong determination to do what was right and to represent the interests intrusted to his care with energy and fidelity. His career was not of accidental origin. He entered with a fixed purpose to succeed, and his untiring energies, supported by a fine physique, so impressed the people of Philadelphia that they not only retained his services, but rewarded his conscientious performance of his duties by continued promotion.

Mr. HARMER was first elected to the city council of Philadelphia, next as recorder of deeds, a most responsible office, having charge of all the titles to real estate of that city. He was elected to the Forty-second Congress and continually reelected up to the Fifty-sixth. During all this long period he never failed in regular attendance upon the sessions of the House, or of giving his strict attention to the questions under consideration. No constituent ever had to write him a second time to secure attention to his request, and no interview was ever denied an applicant at the Capitol or at his home. Mr. HARMER, so far as I know, never addressed the House during his long incumbency, but as a committee man, where the real work of the session is done, he was most regular in his attendance and took an active part in formulating legislation.

His record as a legislator bears no taint. During his service Congress was besmirched with the Crédit Mobilier and star-route frauds; but no man dare associate the name of Pennsylvania's Representative with these corruptions. During his term of service he had as colleagues Thaddeus Stevens, James K. Moorhead, Edward McPherson, and our still venerable member, GALUSHA A. GROW; Representatives Morrill of Vermont, Dawes of Massachusetts, Logan of Illinois, Windom of Minnesota, Conkling of New York, Garfield of Ohio, and Holman of Indiana. With these men he labored for all the great acts of legislation which reconstructed our country after the rebellion and the great financial questions that preserved the monetary integrity of our Republic.

It was in his private life and actions that he gained so great a hold on his constituents. He loved to see others prosperous and happy. His generous heart had no place for enmity. He was a friend of the poor, their defender and protector, and to-day many a happy household dates its prosperity from some kind act of Mr. HARMER. His agreeable and genial manners drew around him swarms of ardent friends and admirers, adding largely to his popularity as a man of influence and as a politician. His lifelong wish was gratified. He died in harness. His last official act was to administer as Father of the House the oath of office to the new Speaker. After this he failed rapidly in health, and died leaving an example to be added to that of those distinguished sons of Pennsylvania, Kelley, Randall, and O'Neill, who, like him, had outlived all their colleagues, and left long records of usefulness and ability to their city and State.

[Mr. McCLEARY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, there are two periods in the life of every public man which provoke attention. If he has enemies or opponents, when he starts out in his public career, seeking high office and public trust, the worst possible phase of his character is ventilated to the world. The tongues of his maligners will run at rapid pace. The defamer of character will know no limit.

The other important period of a public man's life is when his work is done, death claims its own, and he shuffles off this mortal coil and goes hence. It is then that the virtues of the man's life are portrayed. It is then that his morals are held up in a glittering galaxy of beauty. It is pleasing to note, however, that neither one of these periods will apply to the gentleman whom we are eulogizing here today. His character and life were so pure, his deportment was so upright, his deeds were so honorable, that the vilest enemy, if such he had, dared not raise his voice in calumny or slander against him, even though the would-be office seeker desired the position held by ALFRED C. HARMER.

In the second period to which I have referred, it is not at all necessary for those of us who survive him on this floor to say one word in the least exaggerated term. Perhaps in all that we say we shall not be able to state the half that is due the man and the life that he led. It is true that his voice was not frequently heard, perhaps not at all, in speech making in this Hall. It is true also that a little brooklet that flows down the hillside is noisy; whether profitable or not remains for investigation. It is true that the great placid rivers of the country move with silent majesty to the bosom of the broad ocean, bearing commerce for the utility of nations. The latter applies to Mr. HARMER. He was not noisy, but he was grand, useful, noble, in every instance, and in every purpose strictly honest.

Nations, like individuals, can never properly appreciate the services of their great men until they have been called hence never to return. Man breathes freely the pure air with which he is surrounded, and never thinks of the blessings and life-giving qualities it carries until the supply is shut off. We look as a matter of course for the cherished loved ones in our homes day after day as we return from our toil, but never realize how dear they are until there is a vacant chair at the fireside or at the table. So with nations. We are accustomed to receive the results of great men's public lives and look upon them as matters of right, never properly appreciating the true value of such individuals until we follow them for the last time to their final resting place. We have in the person of the late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER an example in question. For over twenty-seven years his valuable counsel was unstintingly given the nation as a member of this House. No man born and reared as was Mr. HARMER, in the immediate district which he so continuously and so faithfully represented, could hold such a position for the length of time that he was here without having in him the true qualities of honesty, purity of character, faithfulness to friends, unalloying and unswerving fidelity in the discharge of every public trust placed in his hands.

One has said that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country. This adage has been reversed in the case of Mr. HARMER, for nowhere on earth was he honored and respected more than in the midst of those whom he knew longest and knew best.

I shall not attempt to deal with the inner circle of his life, except to say, in passing, that he must have been devoted to all who were near and dear to him, and loved by all who had the honor of his personal acquaintance. The nation loses perhaps one of its oldest and wisest counselors and lawmakers, his native State one of its most devoted and trusted statesmen, his district its ideal Representative, and friends and acquaintances a man of honor and integrity, whose life is worthy the emulation of the young.

With him wrong was a foe; with him right was a duty. He sought to know the right, and always had the courage to do the right; and at the close of a long, eventful, and useful life he was doubtless prepared to receive the divine blessing, "Well done, good and faithful servant," and, looking across the river, to present to the great and good One who rules us all the sheaves of a long and well-spent life, and to receive the benediction of a loving Father in heaven.

Mr. McALEER. Mr. Speaker, we have assembled to-day to express our appreciation of the life, service, and character of our late distinguished colleague, Mr. ALFRED C. HARMER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARMER was born in Germantown, a suburb of Philadelphia, his whole life having been spent in that section. The esteem in which he was held was shown by the people among whom he cast his lot repeatedly electing him to positions of responsibility and trust previous to his election to Congress. Time after time were his services recognized, and for a period of twenty-eight years he worked with untiring zeal and an interest that never flagged, gaining, as did his illustrious colleagues, Kelley, Randall, and O'Neill, through length of service, the proud title of Father of the House.

Though not an orator, his marked ability was shown in another direction—in the committee room. There his influence, through knowledge of legislation, made itself felt and was quick to be recognized. In fact, his ability was so well known I hardly think it requires further mention, it being conceded that Mr. HARMER was one of the most faithful Representatives Pennsylvania ever sent to Congress. He commanded the respect, love, and confidence of the people—a man of magnificent presence, of scrupulous integrity, and of marked strength of mind and will, and, at the same time, of rare kindness and gentleness of manner. This same gentleness always characterized him in all his relations of life. He loved his home and family with an undying love, and often in conversation has he told me of the great interest his beloved wife took in his work and the assistance she had given him. In the death of Mr. HARMER his city, his State, and the nation have lost a most efficient and patriotic public servant, a man whose good deeds will live long in the hearts of a grateful people. To his family we tender our sincere sympathy in their irreparable loss, and, although he has gone from us, we shall cherish his memory as that of a true and trusted friend, and look forward to that union in the great hereafter.

In the poet's words, "What a world were this—how unendurable its weight—if they whom death sundered did not meet again."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, the tribute of respect which the House pays to-day to the memory of ALFRED C. HARMER is more than formal. He had been here so long, he had known so many Representatives, he was known of so many, that it is but natural and proper, now that he has gone, that some should speak feelingly and sincerely of his virtues and his services.

How long he was here, how many he knew, of how much of the history of our country were he and his performances a part! How many great men came here and went hence in the long time from his entrance to his departure! How many stirring scenes did he witness here! And while a quiet man himself, in his own way and effectively he had his part in all of them. As remarked by one of his colleagues and by the eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS], he was not a maker of speeches; he was a performer of deeds. He worked and did not talk.

Mr. Speaker, no one remembers General HARMER except in a kindly way. His course of conduct and his service in the House of Representatives produced none of the heartburnings or annoyances or wounds that so frequently come to us in our public service here. He did nothing to hurt or offend anyone. Believing in transacting the business intrusted to him by his people and by his country quietly and plainly upon the floor and in committee, rather than by engaging in the gladiatorial contests of debaters in the House, in all his long career he escaped the antagonisms, the discomfitures, and the hard feelings which come to so many members who pursue a different course. He went through the many phases of the warfare upon the floor of the House without encountering the obstacles which many others meet, and came from every engagement scathless and serene. He dealt no blows; he fostered no animosities; he received no hurts, for he gave none, and succeeded in securing, as he merited, the good will and affection of his associates here. A pleasant career and a satisfactory one, Mr. Speaker, must we pronounce that of our lamented friend, when we take into consideration all the circumstances connected with his life and service.

That he accomplished much of benefit to his people I have not the slightest doubt. The continued confidence of his constituents, and their love for him; his election time and time again, for fourteen successive terms to this body—how complimentary, how honorable it all appears! Though elected from the same territory, in the main, he was not so often elected by the same constituency; the sons followed the fathers in doing him honor. The unshaken confidence of two generations of electors is a noble tribute to his worth and fitness for the place; to his steadfastness, his truth, and his fidelity. His people were true to him to the end of life, because to life's end he was true to them.

The opinion prevails in many quarters that the public is disposed to be harsh and unjust in its criticisms and judgment of the public services rendered by those elected to public office, and in its treatment of public servants. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that the reverse of that is absolutely true. It seems to me that the great body politic is kind, charitable, and patient in dealing with those occupying positions of trust and responsibility where there is good reason to believe that they are entitled to favorable consideration. When the public finds a man to be faithful—one who can be depended upon in emergencies, who can be trusted in public life—there is a tendency on the part of the public to continue his incumbency; and it is not singular that sometimes, as in the case of General HARMER, there should grow up in the public mind a strong affection for him and a generous disposition to continue his services as long as possible.

The career of our deceased colleague is an evidence of the truth of the statement I have just made. His service in the House of Representatives affords a most striking illustration of the fact I have suggested. In the beginning of his official career, men of his age and generation elected him to the responsible position then intrusted to him. They continued to do so as they grew older, and, when they passed away from the scene of action, their sons and grandsons, who had grown to appreciate his services, recognized his worth and his character and emulated their fathers in sending him again and again to Congress, supporting their fathers' friend faithfully until he was gathered to his own fathers, at the end of a long career of honorable and useful public service.

Many men occupying positions in public life, who must at stated periods go before the people for their support and reelection, are forced into aggressiveness; they must give and take blows in the open arena, and often go down in the storm of political battle. Many of them must retire wounded in the fray. But the steady support of the constituents of our deceased friend, their trust in him, and his long and efficient career here, accomplished silently, kindly, sweetly, constitute a double tribute—a tribute to them, a tribute to him.

He was the Father of the House—the third Father of the House from the same city of Philadelphia. In speaking to his memory I express the hope of all, I think, that the succeeding Father of the House, also from that great city, the courteous gentleman who first addressed the House upon this occasion, may long be spared to render service to his people and to his country.

Mr. Speaker, as we pause to-day to pay our tribute of respect to the friend that is gone, there come to us sentiments and feelings beyond our power to express or control. How little life is, after all! There comes to us the full appreciation of the fact that in this arena, as in all the battle of life, we must encounter obstacles on every hand whenever we strive to accomplish anything. We appreciate more clearly the fact that there are many shortcomings, many vain endeavors, many mistakes in the short period allotted to us for the performance of life's duties; and then comes the end for each of us, in turn, of all things temporal, and then the limitless future of another life or the unending doom of nothingness—extinction. Into the future none can peer save with the eye of faith. Of the myriads gone hence we have no tidings from mortal lips. They are in that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns.

Our friend performed well his allotted tasks here. He was gentleness, modesty, and kindness personified. Having lived graciously, honestly, gently, and kindly, he entered the portals of the unknown country without doubt and without fear; and we who remain behind fondly cherish his memory, and kindly, lovingly, trustfully hope that in a higher and better existence his noble spirit may expand and triumph in achievements far beyond the reach of mortals in this mortal existence.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Speaker, ALFRED C. HARMER is gone to us, it is true; but in the light we can not see, he lives the life that never dies.

Seldom is it that any legislative body mourns the loss of one so mature in its service, so useful in its labors, so fearless amid its turmoils, so gentle and kind amid its discords; seldom one with a record so spotless, a character so pure, an experience so ripe, one so generally known, respected, and beloved; seldom, too, one whose public career was so extended, and whose presence produced such fragrance, whose absence created such void.

My remembrance of him was first as the "Father of the House," standing alone before the first Speaker under whom it was my privilege to serve in this body, as he swore in that exalted officer, in the discharge of which duty his gentleness of manner gave assurance of a "kindlier half to the human heart which kindly deeds might reach."

My last remembrance of him was as he presided over a committee of this body of which I was an humble member, impressing me that his influence was like a gentle tide, making life more pure as it lifted the soul above the sordid problems of life.

My acquaintance with him was incidental; by no means intimate; and far be it from me to attempt any portrayal of his life and character. I knew him only to discern that the life of such a man made life worth living and that the world was better for his having lived. He was embalmed in the innermost shrines of the hearts of those who knew him best, and the honors crowded on him were purchased only with merit. His position, whether high or low, was ever dignified by his good deeds and graced by the fruit of his virtues. As I saw him, and as I knew him, his life reflected the tints of heaven's own light, being clothed in the pure white garment of truth, that effluence of the divine ray which shed light on the paths he pursued.

His great heart was like an exhaustless urn, pouring forth never-ending love, flooding his long and useful days as they rolled nearer and nearer to shine in the beyond.

He was possessed of a governed mind, which had no thought but good, and his self-restraint flowed clear in the tide, widening the waves of peace, good will, and truth.

He was no flatterer, and as an honest man despised the slime of insincerity.

> He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
> Or Jove for 's power to thunder.

Silent in his own praise, he gave freely to others just merit and took none from them that was their own.

His courteous demeanor and gentlemanly bearing paralyzed malice and disarmed resentment.

His wisdom saw and seized right, which knowledge ofttimes feared to own.

Wise in counsel, modest in manner, constant in principle, impartial in method, he was just in judgment. He governed his lips as palace doors, and pure and polished were the words that passed their portals.

The lesson of his life taught that here all was naught, and that though we weep with those who weep, yet it is not the room we love, but the inmate; not the broken shell, but the pearl within. The daily walk of ALFRED C. HARMER absolved a fault and helped a virtue grow. He dared the rugged road of right, and while pursuing perilous paths he lived to find easier ascent and lighter loads till he reached the twin sister peaks of Life and Death, around whose chilling snows the gilded clouds were painted in the warmer colors of love.

The cares of anxious days are past to him; and his sun sank slowly as each parting ray gleamed through the clouds of silent sadness, and he dreamed undreamed the tale untold and reached the day that knew only eternal noon.

We are here to drop a tear and to embalm his memory with our love; to plant a flower in his honor whose fragrance may reach those who were so near and dear to him. I say to them, "ALFRED C. HARMER, whom you call dead, sleeps well, and lives and loves you."

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of joining in the tribute so well and fitly rendered by others to the memory of the late ALFRED C. HARMER, of Pennsylvania. I have known him well during ten years of mutual association as a member of this body, and to know Mr. HARMER well was to hold him in esteem and respect.

Mr. HARMER's term of service began on the 4th of March, 1871, long before I entered this body. With the exception of the Forty-fourth Congress, Mr. HARMER steadily represented the great State of Pennsylvania, and especially the city of Philadelphia, of which he was a citizen. It is no common honor to be thus chosen to represent a city which in the infancy of our Republic was its national capital, the city where the Continental Congress first met, where our Independence was proclaimed, and where our Federal Constitution was framed by the patriots of 1789. This high honor was enhanced by the growth of this city in population, wealth, educational institutions, commerce, and the arts which have contributed so greatly to our national development. That in a city so important and so fertile in men of talent and force Mr. HARMER should be chosen and so long retained in the public service as he was is a fact that is more impressive than a costly monument would be or any words of eulogy that I could utter.

Nothing less than high qualities of personal integrity, fidelity, and business efficiency could have gained for him such a steady and unwavering support from those who knew him best and were most competent to estimate his value. It is creditable to the city of Philadelphia that, probably more than any other great center of population, she has shown a marked disposition to retain in her service in this Hall Representatives of tried efficiency and fidelity. It is a striking proof of what I say that two of her Representatives have been lately known successively as the "Father of the House," a term given to the oldest member in continuous service. I am free to say that in setting this honorable example this great city has sacrificed none of her important interests in our legislation, but has, on the contrary, promoted those interests and also the interests and influence of the whole Commonwealth to which they belonged.

The year 1871, when Mr. HARMER entered the House of Representatives, was an important period in our history. Among his associates on the State delegation was the Hon. William D. Kelley, a gentleman of uncommon industry, ability, and influence; Mr. Leonard Myers, of Philadelphia, who also rendered long and efficient service; and that grand patriot and statesman, Samuel J. Randall. All these have passed away except Mr. Myers. In the same House we find the honored names of James G. Blaine, Michael C. Kerr, George W. McCrary, James B. Beck, WILLIAM P. FRYE, EUGENE HALE, Henry L. Dawes, Samuel S. Cox, James A. Garfield, Charles Foster, Luke P. Poland, and Jeremiah M. Rusk—all active and forceful men in those stirring times. Only two or three of these illustrious men survive, and to speak of them all now is to recall a past generation. Between that and the present epoch Mr. HARMER was, up to the other day, a connecting link.

Mr. HARMER was not a lawyer by profession, nor did he possess special oratorical gifts. He was a merchant and a business man, and as such amply qualified to represent a great commercial and manufacturing center. He was here in a period of unusual party and sectional bitterness; but, while a strong party man, he was personally devoid of acrimony, and he aroused no animosities. In this way, following the natural bent of a kindly, fair, and just disposition, he was able to secure an appreciative consideration for the business interests which he undertook to champion. I think that I may freely assert that he never made an enemy on either side of this House, and that he enjoyed an uncommon measure of its good will and confidence. There was no one whom he could not freely approach in matters of public business, and no one to whom he in turn would have refused a fair hearing and just consideration. His industry, punctuality, and attention to his duties were not confined to his own city and State. They embraced the Union, and every part of it.

In a period of party strife and undue acrimony in debate, and probably an over-tendency to personal conflicts and imputations, I consider it a fortunate thing for the House to possess a body of members, like Mr. HARMER, whose moderation, good sense, and modesty serve to compose strife and pave the road for judicious and patriotic determinations. The sensible and fair member of this House, wherever he may sit, is as apt to wield a good and great influence as the man who exceeds him in oratory.

It is well known here that a very large part of the most effective and valuable work of a member consists in committee work, either as a member of a committee or in presenting to other committees matters specially affecting the representative's constituents. This service is rarely ostentatious, but it is often laborious, and requires industry, order, tact, and personal influence in order to accomplish the best results. During the last ten years General HARMER has served upon the Committees upon Indian Affairs, Naval Affairs, Foreign Affairs, the Library, and the District of Columbia. All these were very important committees. The last two were those on which General HARMER last served, and of late years their duties have become much more varied and difficult. Congress is, in fact, the government of this District. This community is entitled to fair and generous treatment, and the city of Washington has always received it at the hands of our deceased associate.

General HARMER never neglected his public work, but he was of a marked social turn. He enjoyed the society of his family and his friends. In his later life he spent many of his summer hours at Brigantine Beach, a place on the New Jersey coast that he was instrumental in developing and building up, and where he enjoyed in a quiet, simple way the outdoor life and relaxation in which he was to all a most agreeable, cheerful, and hospitable companion.

In this brief and hasty sketch I have endeavored to portray the public life of one who for many years pursued the path of steady and unostentatious duty in this Hall. His memory will abide with us and will be remembered by those of us who were his fellow-members with the affection and respect due to his many virtues, his unvarying courtesy and kindness, and the personal worth which characterized him both in private and public life. He has left us forever, it is true, but he has left us nothing to forgive, nothing that we could wish to forget, nothing in which his State, his constituents, and family may not take a just and honorable pride. He was fit to represent a great Commonwealth such as that which honored and trusted him to his latest hours on earth.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that the members present who have come to honor the memory of their departed brother and friend, the late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER, will accord to me some degree of indulgence, realizing as they must the ordeal through which I have been compelled to pass; first, in presenting myself to the voters of the Fifth Pennsylvania Congressional district as a successor to a man held in the esteem in which they held the late Hon. A. C. HARMER, and, having been elected, in presenting myself to be sworn in at the bar of this House as the substitute in this honorable body of a man who had won so many friends through the love which he inspired during the many years he was a member of this House by his sincerity of purpose and faithful discharge of duty. As they loved him, so, I trust, they will deal gently with my shortcomings.

The late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER belonged to a group of statesmen coming from the great Keystone State, Pennsylvania, whose record for length of service and services performed can not be equaled by any State in the Union. I refer to the Hon. William D. Kelley and the Hon. Charles O'Neill, who each served fifteen terms in Congress; to the Hon. Samuel J. Randall and to our late lamented friend, who each served fourteen terms in Congress, and to the Hon. GALUSHA A. GROW and the Hon. H. H. BINGHAM, who, thank God, are here with us, strong in health and strong in their usefulness in the councils of this body.

It has been well said that it is not greatness simply to have held important trusts; greatness lies in the faithful performance of all duties committed to us. That man is not truly great who does not display homely, honest nobility in the small affairs of life in his daily intercourse with his fellow-man.

In the Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER, the great State of Pennsylvania, greatest in the Union in its history and resources, found a son well adapted to fill the measure of a representative of all the varied elements of her greatness and power.

The distinguished services of the late Hon. A. C. HARMER on the important committees of this House, which numbers among its members so many efficient men, is sufficient to stamp him as a man far above ordinary attainments and ability. He may not have possessed to the same degree as some others the ability to dazzle the public with bursts of oratory, sallies of wit, or biting sarcasm, but in soundness of judgment, and in thorough grasp of the subjects of legislation, and in patient and conscientious discharge of duty, he stands, and deserves to stand, in the foremost rank; while the number of times he was returned as a member of this House is a monument to his integrity as a man and to his ability as a statesman.

The personality of the late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER, not only in his own district, but wherever he chanced to go, won for him friends. His kindly bearing and nobility of character were speedily recognized by all with whom he came into intimate contact. To say that he was beloved by all who knew him is but to feebly express the feelings that were entertained toward him.

In his last years of service he was known as the "Father of the House." He was indeed a father to his constituents in the best sense of the word, for it was his constant aim to care for the fatherless children and widows and all who were desolate and oppressed. He was not a politician in the general acceptance of the term; he never posed as such before either his constituents or this body, of which he was a member for so many years. Just as his path was straight, so were his doings as bright as the noonday sun. Elected by the people, he was of the people and for the people, and his name in his own district was a household word. To one class above all others was he especially a friend. I refer to the old soldier, his widow and orphan. None of those, or none of those that belonged to them, ever appealed to the late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER in vain.

Above all else on this earth, the Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER loved his home. There it was he found his greatest happiness. Can it, then, be wondered that the loss to his widow and children is what it is? We can extend to them sympathy, but only time and that God who is the father of the widow and the fatherless can succeed in his bountiful mercy in assuaging the irreparable loss. It was they who realized the sacrifices made, the truth of the doctrine, "No greater love hath man than this: that he lay down his life for his friend."

So it was that when the death of this statesman and friend became known it was a sorrow that touched all classes and conditions of men; and not the men only, but the women and the children joined with their husbands and fathers in an expression of the loss they had sustained, which lamentation was as sincere as it was outspoken, for "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh."

As I said on a late occasion in Philadelphia, in visiting the different portions of the Fifth Pennsylvania district which my campaign necessitated, I was often touched beyond measure and at the same time brought to realize most forcibly the largeness of the place which I was endeavoring to fill. While of course generalities were always indulged in regarding the capabilities and kindliness of the late Hon. A. C. HARMER, yet here and there this man or that man, perhaps the humblest in the assemblage, would take me aside and say, "Do for us as AL. HARMER did and you will be all right; do not forget us people." In fact, it reminded me of being called home on the occasion of the sudden death of a near friend or relative. Upon opening the front door one perhaps sees the familiar hat or coat still hanging on the rack, and turning aside into room after room first one familiar object and then another greets one. In this room perhaps a book open at some favorite passage; in another a bunch of flowers of the variety especially loved, or some pictures on the wall representing the favorite sport or pastime, and so on until is reached the room familiarly called "the study." There is the writing table, there the books and papers spread out and arranged, the letter half written, the ink scarcely dry on the pen, and there the easy chair in front of the fire, in which at times a few minutes would be snatched from labor.

And so it was as I journeyed through the Fifth Pennsylvania district. Everywhere there was something to remind me of the late Hon. ALFRED C. HARMER. And just as I likened the club bearing his name to the easy chair before the fire, so I might liken his life here to the writing table heaped up on the one side with documents framed for the benefit of the people of the country and his district, on the other side with documents acknowledging services rendered.

His last official act in this House was to administer the oath of office to the present Speaker, the Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON, a duty which he performed when scarcely able to make his way to the desk and raise his arm. Performing this duty, as he did, contrary to the advice of his physician, it might be said that he was "faithful unto death." What a glorious career, what an ending to a long life—one to be envied by the rich or the poor. For as we brought nothing into this world so can we take nothing out. At the last moment we find him, having completed his threescore years, full of honors, mourned by all who knew him. Can we not, therefore, feel confident that the same voice which brought him the last summons went on to say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?"

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of Mr. HARMER'S friends who had desired to make remarks upon this occasion, but who have been for one reason or another compelled to be absent. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all who desire to print their remarks in the RECORD may be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LOVERING). The gentleman asks that permission be granted for all who desire to do so to print remarks in the RECORD. Without objection, it is so ordered. As a further mark of respect, and in accordance with the resolution previously adopted, the House now stands adjourned until 12 o'clock on Monday next.

And accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred by the Speaker as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspections of disbursements by officers of the Army—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Arkansas River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of damages by storm at Sabine Pass, Tex.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 10, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

WILLIAM B. BATE, a Senator from the State of Tennessee; WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, and THOMAS B. TURLEY, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. NELSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

SENATOR FROM MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I beg leave to present the credentials of Hon. Charles A. Towne, appointed by the governor of the State of Minnesota a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Davis, deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be received and read.

The Secretary read the credentials of Charles A. Towne, appointed by the governor of the State of Minnesota a Senator from that State to fill until the next meeting of the legislature thereof the vacancy caused by the death of Cushman K. Davis in the term ending March 3, 1905, as follows:

STATE OF MINNESOTA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

This is to certify that on the 5th day of December, 1900, pursuant to the provisions of section 3 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States and of paragraph 254 of the general statutes of the State of Minnesota of 1894, Charles A. Towne was duly appointed by me a Senator from the State of Minnesota to represent said State in the Senate of the United States to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the Hon. Cushman K. Davis, said appointment to be in full force and effect until the next meeting of the legislature of this State and until a successor is elected and qualified.

Done at St. Paul the 6th day of December, 1900.

ALBERT BERG, Secretary of State.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I have examined these credentials and I also heard them read. They are correct in form, except in one respect. I will ask the Clerk to read the last clause, beginning "said appointment."

The Secretary read as follows:

Said appointment to be in full force and effect until the next meeting of the legislature of this State and until a successor is elected and qualified.

Mr. CHANDLER. The language of the Constitution is that "the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies." The governor of the State by adding the words "and until a successor is elected and qualified" has undertaken to prescribe the length of the term under this appointment. The governor of a State can not do that. The length of the term is determined by the Constitution, and those words should have been omitted. They are mere surplusage; and I therefore make no objection to having Mr. Towne sworn in under the appointment as it reads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator appointed will present himself at the desk and take the required oath.

Mr. Towne was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. NELSON, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with copies of agreements made by Indian Inspectors McConnell and McLaughlin with the Klamath Indians, for the relinquishment of all their rights and interest in and to any part of their reservation in the State of Oregon, as provided by the Indian appropriation act of July 1, 1898, etc.

The communication and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the map of the survey of the reservation accompanying the same will be referred to that committee, without printing.

LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 27, 1898, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a letter from Col. Theodore A. Bingham, submitting a new list of lots in the city of Washington, D. C., the title to which the records in the office of public buildings and grounds show to be in the United States, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in further response to a resolution of January 27, 1898, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, together with a letter from Col. Theodore A. Bingham, submitting a final list of lots in the District of Columbia sold by the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MONETARY SYSTEM FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a compilation of the records of the War Department relative to the establishment of a stable currency in the Philippine Islands; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF BOARD OF ORDNANCE AND FORTIFICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting the annual report of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification for the year ended October 31, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS J. WOODWARD AND HORACE TYLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings filed by the court in the cause of Thomas J. Woodward and Horace Tyler, receivers of the New Orleans Towboat Association, vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. H. L. OVERSTREET, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed resolutions commemorative of the life and public services of Hon. Alfred C. Harmer, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3717) making oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State and Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine; and

A bill (H. R. 12281) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4400) for the relief of Frank E. Kellogg, collector of the Sixth internal-revenue district of Missouri; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers filed in the Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, in behalf of George W. Walden may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate on compliance with the rules governing such action.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE INAUGURATION.

Mr. HANNA submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio request the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HANNA. Not to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

SUBMARINE TORPEDO BOAT HOLLAND.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate, at his earliest convenience, for its information, copies of all reports made to the Navy Department, or any of its bureaus, or to the commanding officer of the torpedo station, Newport, R. I., by officers of the Navy, concerning the performance of the submarine torpedo boat Holland since her purchase by the Navy Department to this date, including the reports made by Admiral N. H. Farquhar, commanding the North Atlantic Squadron; Capt. W. M. Folger, commanding the battle ship Kearsarge; Lieut.

Commander N. E. Mason, in charge of the torpedo station at Newport, R. I.; Lieut. Commander A. C. Hodgson, commander of the naval tug Leyden; Lieut. Robert L. FUNERALS OF THE LATE SENATORS GEAR AND DAVIS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committees appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funerals of the late Senator from Iowa, John H. Gear, and the late Senator from Minnesota, Cushman K. Davis, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CONSIDERATION OF THE PENSION CALENDAR.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to make a request that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, not exceeding thirty minutes be given to the Committee on Pensions for the consideration of private pension bills, unobjected to, on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the completion of the morning business, thirty minutes be given to the consideration of pension bills now on the Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. What was the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That to-morrow, after the completion of the morning business, thirty minutes be allowed for the consideration of unobjected pension cases on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the request to be that the order should go into effect after the conclusion of the routine morning business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the conclusion of the routine morning business. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12281) to amend section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning the distilling of brandy from fruits, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

DANIEL W. LIGHT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield just a moment?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 812) for the relief of Daniel W. Light. It is a case of peculiar hardship, and will involve no discussion.

The bill was read, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out the words "correct the military record of, and grant an honorable discharge to, Daniel W. Light, of Company M, Fifth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, who was court-martialed and dishonorably discharged from the United States service," and to insert:

Review and disapprove General Orders, No. 89, Headquarters District Memphis, October 10, 1863, approving the finding and confirming the sentence in the case of Daniel W. Light, a private of Company M, Fifth Regiment Ohio Cavalry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of date October 10, 1863.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to review and disapprove General Orders, Headquarters District Memphis, October 10, 1863, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE F. BURRAGE.

Mr. TELLER. I will thank the Senator from Massachusetts if he will yield to me for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from Colorado. After that I shall press my motion.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 2037) granting a pension to George F. Burrage. It is a very deserving bill; the old gentleman is in very bad shape and the bill ought to pass at once.

The bill was read; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George F. Burrage, late of the Signal Corps, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to George F. Burrage."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 11, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

INJUNCTION OF SECRECY REMOVED.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the convention (Executive G) signed at Brussels, June 8, 1899, by the plenipotentiaries of certain powers for the regulation of the importation of spirituous liquors into certain regions of Africa.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 10, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House this is District day. I understand there is pressing business, and for that reason I ask that next Monday or Tuesday be assigned for District business instead of to-day, subject to the completion of the war revenue reduction bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks unanimous consent to substitute Monday or Tuesday next week, instead of to-day, for District business, subject to the war revenue reduction bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it for Monday or Tuesday that the gentleman makes the request? I hope that he will not make it for next Monday, as that is suspension day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects to Monday. Is there objection to Tuesday? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills, with the view of taking up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, with the view of taking up the legislative bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the appropriation bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriation for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman who represents the minority?

Mr. BINGHAM. I would state to the House there have been no requests, as I understand from Mr. LIVINGSTON, that have come to him for general debate on that side of the House. There has been one request made on this side, to which I have demurred, and the gentleman accepts my demurrer; and therefore there will be no request for general debate on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands there is to be no general debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No one has spoken to me.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate on the bill, then, is closed, and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Prior to reading the bill, I desire to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is not closed, then.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual annual bill covering almost wholly the question of the salaries of the existing subordinate force of the Departments, together with such necessary increases as may be recommended from the Book of Estimates. Your committee have gone carefully over the estimates of the Departments, which in sum total amounted to $25,399,509.43, of which amount there is recommended in the bill $24,496,308.27. The appropriations for the same purposes for the current fiscal year, including $105,800 carried in the sundry civil and deficiency acts, aggregated $24,257,012.53, being $239,295.74 less than is recommended in the bill for the service of the fiscal year 1902.

The total amount recommended in the bill is $903,201.16 less than the aggregate of the estimates submitted.

You will therefore observe that of the almost $1,200,000 recommended in the Book of Estimates by the Departments in the items increase of salaries and increase of force your committee has simply allowed as increase $239,000 and have reduced the estimates of the Departments $903,000. The whole number of salaries specifically provided for in the bill is 786 less than the number estimated for and 90 more than the number provided for in the law for the current year. It is proper to state, however, that of the 786 specific salaries estimated for in excess of those recommended in the bill 495 were for or in lieu of clerks and others in the War Department now employed and paid from a general appropriation made for the current fiscal year for additional employees rendered necessary in the War Department because of the increased work incident to the war with Spain, which general appropriation it is proposed to continue during the next fiscal year in the same sum as was provided for the current year, and 45 of such specific salaries estimated for were in place of employments in the Navy Department now paid from appropriations "for increase of the Navy."

As your committee did not deem it wise to recommend the repeal at this time of the law authorizing such employments in the Navy Department, they have not provided appropriations in the accompanying bill for them, and leave them under the language, "Increase of the Navy." The number of increases of salaries of the existing force in the pending bill have been but 35, and of that number we have 18 watchmen in the public grounds of Washington, a part of whom are receiving $660 and the other part $720 each, and we have made the compensation of the day watchmen and night watchmen equal, making the division of labor equal and making the pay equal.

I desire to suggest to the committee that both the great political parties in the recent campaign proclaimed for economy in the administration of the Government. This is the first bill coming from the Committee on Appropriations which exhibits upon its face economy in a reduction from the Book of Estimates from the Departments of $903,000; or, in other words, for the next fiscal year we will not have to pay taxes to secure this $903,000, but simply for the increase to secure the $239,000.

In other words, we commence now and here to carry out our pledges to the people; and as all the people during the conditions of war for the last two or three years have been subjected to large taxation to carry on that war, in many cases claiming that hardship and loss were inflicted upon certain lines of trade and business, we make now and here our first effort to keep faith with our promises. On the Calendar of the House, to be considered at an early date, is the bill reducing war taxes $40,000,000. Our contribution to-day to this bill will be almost one million more.

Of course all know that in conditions of war larger taxation runs, for war means the expenditure of the people's moneys as well as the lives and health of the patriots.

Your committee is of the opinion that at this time, when we are reducing taxation, the question of increased compensation for clerical work should have no standing in this House, or, if any, but most limited. No one of this body of clerks not increased has lost anything, because he does not now possess it. Each one of the clerks of the Departments who during the past few years has worked over the normal or regular hours from 9 until 4 has his bill from the Department here before the several committees of the House, claiming additional compensation for every hour of work over the rule of office hours from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. Therefore I say that if this House proposes to make a reduction in taxation, as the bill on the Calendar proposes, to the extent of $40,000,000, the last thing that this House should think of doing, that which it should condemn most emphatically, is a large increase of compensation to the subordinate force. If we refrain from making any such increase, the business of the Departments can go on as it is now going on, and no one will suffer. As I have said, this bill, as drawn, will make a contribution of almost a million of dollars in the way of reduction of taxation for the next year and for all the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, I am cognizant of the fact that gentlemen on both sides of this floor have been importuned by those not appropriated for in this bill either by increase of the subordinate force of the Departments or by increase of compensation. It is, perhaps, perfectly natural that those not carried on the bill should make complaint. This bill has been critically scanned by members of the subordinate force of the Departments, and wherever a man sees that his pay has not been increased as suggested in the Book of Estimates, he immediately goes to his Representative and asks that he may be personally cared for. We have carefully looked into these questions—not as to the individuals, because we did not know them—but we simply looked into the question of the second, third, or fourth class Department clerks, or whatever other class of Government employees there might be. We inquired into the character of the work required and determined whether it was fair at this time to make an increase.

Mr. GAINES. I see that on page 72 of this bill an appropriation is made of $3,000 for the compensation of the governor of Oklahoma. I see also that the governor of Hawaii is allowed a salary of $5,000. I should like to know why this discrimination of $2,000 is made.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will say in reply to the gentleman that the statutes fix the salaries in that way, and the committee has no discretion in the subject.

Mr. GAINES. The salaries paid to the governors of the Western Territories have generally been about $2,500 or $3,000. I was wondering why this distinction should have been made.

Mr. BINGHAM. We simply followed the statutes in both cases.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The salary has been fixed by act of Congress in both instances.

Mr. GAINES. I concur with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his idea in favor of retrenchment and reform. But it will be remembered that when the proposition to raise this salary was before the House I then objected. I repeat that the salaries of the old Territorial governors was usually about $2,500.

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman will understand that the Committee on Appropriations, where the law makes the salary mandatory, had no discretion, but were obliged to report the sum fixed by law.

Mr. GAINES. But I want to remind my friend that we on this side objected to this increase, and now we are paying the penalty for having been defeated in this very matter when we insisted on reform last session, yet to-day you urge retrenchment and reform when it is too late.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I have anything more to say upon the general outline of this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to a subject which has heretofore been before this House, the subject of the sick-leave privilege allowed to clerks and employees in the various Executive Departments in Washington. Under the present law they receive a vacation privilege of thirty days in each year, and in addition a privilege which is much abused—a sick-leave privilege of thirty days in each year. I should like to know from the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether anything in the line of retrenchment and reform has been done in the direction of correcting the abuse of the sick-leave privilege by his committee. It seems to me there is almost a consensus of opinion in this House that this sick leave of thirty days should be withdrawn. As there has been no general debate I may be allowed to state my reasons for this opinion.

In a bill passed at the last session of Congress for the relief of the employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry outside of Washington we granted them fifteen days' leave. The post-office and other employees generally outside of the city of Washington have no vacation or sick-leave privilege granted to them as a matter of right. There is a bill now on the Calendar to grant vacation with pay to the employees of the Navy Department outside of Washington and to the employees of the navy-yard here. Every class of Government employees is about to ask, or is asking, for the thirty days' annual leave with pay. The vacation of thirty days is not now enjoyed by the printing department of the Census Department, nor by the employees of the navy-yard in Washington, nor by the Government employees outside of the city of Washington, except as stated. I think it would be in the direction of retrenchment and reform, and it would save annually nearly one-twelfth of the salaries of these various classes of employees, if the gentleman's committee would at some time take steps to cut off the sick-leave privilege granted to employees of the Executive Departments in Washington. I had hoped that this bill would include some feature of this kind. Knowing that this leave privilege, which was formerly ninety days, had already been cut off to the extent of thirty days, I hoped that there would be a further retrenchment of this kind by the cutting off of this sick-leave privilege altogether. It is greatly abused. It requires troublesome and expensive machinery to carry it out, and it is not popular with many of the employees of the Executive Departments in Washington, and they would be satisfied with the thirty days' vacation per annum which is accorded to them. I think there should be adopted some rule or legislation for the correction of this abused privilege. I should like to ask the gentleman whether anything has been done yet in that line by his committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I will state, in response to the gentleman from Indiana, that the bill which we are now considering has nothing to do with the proposition he submits. We have no jurisdiction of that matter. Some two or three years ago Congress determined that in lieu of the discretion then vested in the Secretaries or heads of the various Departments with reference to leaves of absence, instead of the possibility of allowing ninety days it should be reduced to sixty, thirty days for the annual leave, if desired, and thirty days, under the fixed rules of the Department, in cases of illness, injury, or for other reasons of that character.

Now, as to the existing law, let me say a word. It is not, I will state to the gentleman, as he is well aware, mandatory. A clerk does not of right get a single day of leave from his duties in the Department. The law vests the discretion in the head of the Department. The Secretary is vested with power, and he can refuse every application for leave of absence if he so desires. As I have just stated, the law gives him discretionary power, and it is absolutely within his discretion as to how he shall exercise it.

Now, another question, and that is as to the economy of the proposition to which the gentleman has referred. I have just stated that we are endeavoring in this bill to show the spirit of the House, as promised to the people of this country in the last election, to economize the public expenditures to the greatest possible degree. There are pending before the various committees of the House many bills to increase the compensation of subordinate clerks or officers in the Executive Departments of the Government, as well as enlarged time for leaves of absence. These bills aggregate a total, as I am informed, of some $10,000,000, and possibly more.

I know many members have been importuned with regard to these various bills, because I have received the same character of requests myself. But I can say to the committee that we have resisted absolutely every importunity of that kind, for the reason that the committee knows no individual in the preparation of this bill. We take the bill and make it up from the Book of Estimates submitted to us. We started from the beginning and proceeded throughout its consideration without knowledge of the individual who might be an applicant for an increase of salary. Of course I know what members would desire in various cases of this kind to aid deserving and worthy constituents.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a further question as to whether it would not be strongly and clearly in the interest of economy to cut off the thirty days sick leave now granted to the various employees here in Washington with the addition of thirty days which may be granted, as he states, at the discretion of the heads of these Departments? It has become in many instances a crying evil, and, as the gentleman will remember, when this question was before us on a former occasion he himself took the same view of the matter.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the gentleman must understand that this is a question with which the committee has no power to deal in the way he suggests. As I have stated, the law vests this discretion in the heads of the Departments.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it is the privilege and power of the committee to take cognizance of these matters which are now fixed by statute, for as the law authorizes the heads of Departments to give thirty days with pay in addition to thirty days' vacation it will be granted till limited by law. And in view of the fact that the old abuse of ninety days has been cut down, at least to sixty days, I think that a further reduction in that regard might apply to the officials at Washington. Of course the gentleman knows that this vacation of thirty days and additional thirty days' sick leave does not apply to all the employees throughout the country, but only to those in Washington. There seems to be a special exception in favor of those employed in this city. And, as I have said, we are being importuned on all sides to at least make the thirty-day leave of absence uniform throughout the country. I would ask if it is not a fact that the Government employees outside of the city of Washington do not receive the same privileges with reference to leaves of absence that are accorded to those in this city; in other words, that they have not, to the same extent, that privilege granted to employees here?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes; take, for instance, the letter carriers, numbering, I think, 16,000 in the United States. They have this leave as a matter of right, and we appropriate specially for leave of absence in their cases.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In my city, of 50,000 inhabitants, I will say to the gentleman that they are not granted it as a matter of right, because of some block in the regulation, but get only fifteen days, by doubling up and performing work for each other, while the employees here receive thirty days' leave as a vacation and thirty days of sick leave, making sixty in all. And I again call the gentleman's attention to the importance and necessity of giving exactly the same privilege to all the employees of the Government everywhere that is given them in this city.

Mr. BINGHAM. I can only answer, Mr. Chairman, that the provision to which the gentleman refers has no place in our bill and is not under our jurisdiction.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania wisely, as I think, on a former occasion, cut down the old ninety-day leave to sixty; and I had hoped that something of the same kind would appear in this bill. Is there no such provision?

Mr. GAINES. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me, I think I can answer the suggestion.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that, as he knows as well as I do, the discretion to which he refers is lodged in the heads of the Departments. Now, as to whether or not it is abused is a question of fact, and is a matter of history. But I know, sir, of one bureau here where it has not been exercised soon enough. I know of employees of the Government who have fainted on the floor of the Department where they were employed here because the head of that Department had not exercised that gracious and proper discretion that should have been exercised.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In what Department was that?

Mr. GAINES. To say that these people must be worked all the year round, without giving the little girls and larger girls and the older people some few days of the rest that my friend from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] himself takes, is to say that this Government must be run in an inhuman and harsh way, which is unnecessary for the public welfare. The fact that this discretion may be abused is no reason why it should not be lodged somewhere, as it properly is, and I do not myself agree that this thirty days should be cut off. It is given when the parties are sick and unable to work.

Mr. BINGHAM. On a doctor's certificate?

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is that all they get?

Mr. GAINES. Certainly; when they are sick they should not be cut off.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much is the gentleman in favor of granting them?

Mr. GAINES. Leave that in the discretion of some good man at the head of each Department; not to exceed a maximum time, of course.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They get thirty days' vacation.

Mr. GAINES. We certainly do not want to make ourselves the umpires to decide how much sick leave they shall have. We could not attend to that. We can put a limit in the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. You have done it under the law. You give them thirty days' vacation leave and, in addition, the privilege of thirty days' sick leave, which is much abused by the employees themselves; and neither of these privileges are accorded to employees outside of Washington, and is denied to several classes of employees here.

Mr. GAINES. If an employee gets sick he ought to have his sick leave.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How many days vacation would you give them?

Mr. GAINES. That is a matter in the discretion of the Department, unless fixed by law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much is granted them now?

Mr. GAINES. I do not know.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They get thirty days' vacation.

Mr. GAINES. It is not a matter of absolute right, as I understand from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee [Mr. BINGHAM], but it is a matter of discretion.

Mr. BINGHAM. A matter of discretion only.

Mr. GAINES. It may be a day, a week, or twenty or thirty days.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They got thirty days as a matter of right, and another thirty days' sick leave, in all making sixty days' vacation with pay.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. They must bring a physician's certificate in order to obtain one day's sick leave.

Mr. GAINES. They must obtain a physician's certificate; they get the sick leave when they are actually sick and unable to work, certified to by a reputable physician.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. For the second thirty days.

Mr. GAINES. May they not require it for the first?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; that is a matter of right.

Mr. GAINES. Sick leave is a matter of discretion, and in order to get any they must bring the certificate of a reputable physician.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They have thirty days as a matter of law. I have no objection to their having their vacation of thirty days, but economy requires that they should have but thirty days' vacation in one year.

Mr. GAINES. It is a matter of discretion with the Department and not one of law, as the chairman reporting this bill states, and that is my information.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. While the matter is under consideration I should like to ask the gentleman for an explanation. Why are these thirty days' annual leave and thirty days' sick leave not permitted to employees of the Government outside of the city of Washington, except the letter carriers, who, I understand, obtain some part of it?

Mr. BINGHAM. The only answer to that is that it is not upon the statute books. This bill carries no authority for anything except what is on the statute books.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. But if provision is made for discretion in the Secretary to grant thirty days' leave and thirty days' sick leave to each employee in the District of Columbia, why should not that same privilege extend to employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the various other cities of the country, who obtain no leave?

Mr. BINGHAM. There is but one answer to the gentleman. This bill carries the Executive Departments of the Government, the legislative, executive, and judicial. The Post-Office appropriation bill carries the appropriation for the subordinate force of the post-offices of the country. So the other appropriation bills carry appropriations for the subordinate forces of the Government in other Departments. The proposition of legislation which the gentleman submits would come of right on those bills, but upon this bill we have nothing to do with it. We do not appropriate for the clerks and carriers in the postal service in this bill at all. We appropriate for the Department service.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I am inquiring about a branch of the Department service, not the postal service. Take, for instance, the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Agricultural appropriation bill carries that service.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would suggest to my colleague that that inquiry would properly come up when the Agricultural bill is under consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to suggest that the discrimination to which the gentleman refers, which undoubtedly exists in the law to-day, exists not only in respect to leave of absence, but in every other way. Before the subcommittee the other day, on examination of the chief clerk of the Treasury, it appeared that the salaries paid for services throughout the country in the public buildings were very much smaller than the salaries paid for corresponding services in Washington. The people at Washington are here. They get a chance at members of Congress, and the result is that they have higher privileges than other Government employees have. They have less work and longer leave of absence. I agree with the gentleman that it is unjust, as a general proposition, but we can not, of course, remedy it on this bill.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I was only making the inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining where it could be remedied.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. As regards the Bureau of Animal Industry, I am quite certain that the last Agricultural bill gave the employees of that Bureau leave of absence.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The gentleman is mistaken, or if it did, it has not been carried into effect yet.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I simply say to the Hous that members know the general purpose that governed the Committee on Appropriations in making these reductions, and they have only been made after the greatest care and examination. If we have the aid of that side of the House as well as this side of the House in noncontinuing the demand for increase of pay, and leaving the bill run with the reduction that we have made, for the reasons that I have stated, we ought to get through with this bill to day. I call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. RAY of New York. Before the reading is proceeded with, with the permission of the gentleman, I desire to ask a question in regard to a provision of the bill before I leave the room. I notice on page 130 of the bill, section 4, it says:

SEC. 4. That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the public service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service.

I suppose that is an old provision?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is the usual provision.

Mr. RAY of New York. My attention has been called to the fact that one of the judges of one of the United States courts has become permanently incapacitated from performing his duty. Is this intended to interfere with his drawing his pay, or would it interfere? Of course the salaries of judges are permanent, and there is no provision for retirement under the circumstances I have stated.

Mr. GAINES. There is on page 126 a provision.

Mr. RAY of New York. It would probably depend on this appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is an appropriation only for the judges' salaries.

Mr. RAY of New York. This would restrict the disbursement of that appropriation, because it is a permanent law.

Mr. GAINES. Would it not be covered by the heading "Retired judges," on page 126, "To pay the salaries of United States judges, retired?"

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no provision to retire a judge who becomes sick and permanently disabled.

Mr. BINGHAM. That has to be done by special act.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is done by a special act. It would seem rather dangerous that he should not draw his salary, if that was the intent of this provision.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. If I may be permitted, I will state to the gentleman that this is a provision which I drew some years ago, and was intended to meet an evil growing up in the Departments. The gentleman will recollect that there was an attempt to establish a "roll of honor" in the Treasury Department, and this provision was drawn for the purpose of meeting that which was deemed to be an evil by some of us. It did not have in view what the gentleman suggests. I suggest that there might be at least a question whether officers, clerks, etc., employed by the public service included members of the judiciary; but it would be a legal question.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not suppose that was your purpose.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That was not our purpose at all.

Mr. RAY of New York. It would seem improper that a disbursing officer should become judge of the permanent disability of a member of the judiciary. That was not the intent, I suppose, of the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. It was not; and if the gentleman thinks an amendment is required, it can be inserted.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. An amendment would probably destroy the force of the whole section.

Mr. GAINES. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. On page 125, you provide for the payment of the circuit and district judges of the United States courts. Will you please tell me what provision is made, in this or any other bill, for the payment of their expenses, and what constitutes "expenses?"

Mr. BINGHAM. That comes in another bill, the sundry civil bill. We are simply providing for the salaries, and not for the contingent expenses.

Mr. GAINES. What I mean is for railroad fare and hotel bills and what would be necessary expenses.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have nothing to do with that. We simply provide the salaries of the judges in this bill.

If there is no other discussion desired, Mr. Chairman, or inquiries to be made, I would suggest that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MERCER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CUNNINGHAM, one of its clerks, announced the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. R. 135) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to employ an additional assistant to the attorney; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Comptroller of the Treasury: For Comptroller of the Treasury, $5,500; Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury, $4,500; chief clerk, $2,500; chief law clerk, $2,500; five law clerks revising accounts and briefing opinions, 1 at $2,100 and 4 at $2,000 each; private secretary, $1,800; 4 expert accountants, at $2,000 each; 7 clerks of class 4; 1 clerk of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; typewriter-copyist, $1,000; 2 messengers; 1 assistant messenger; and 1 laborer; in all, $55,900.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is temporarily absent, and he desired me to submit the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 40, in line 1, after the word "each," insert "five temporary clerks during the fiscal year 1902, at $1,600 each, to dispose of accumulated appeals from the Auditor from the War Department."

In line 2, after the word "accountants," insert "to be employed hereafter exclusively on work other than that of revising accounts and briefing opinions."

In line 6 strike out "fifty-five" and insert "sixty-three."

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the purpose of this?

Mr. BINGHAM. This is made at the special request of the Secretary. It pertains to the matter of appeals only, all the other work of the Auditor's office being up and even. These appeals come because of the vast amount of work thrown upon the Auditor for the War Department in consequence of the war. He claims that he has, I think, about seventy-five or more important appeals resting upon his desk, requiring immediate attention, which can not be disposed of with his present force.

Mr. MADDOX. Does that require five additional clerks?

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to say this to the gentleman, also: The Auditor, being under the Treasury Department, can not avail himself, nor can the Department avail itself, of what are called the "war allowances" of the War Department. Otherwise this matter could be readily settled by a simple order. Therefore they ask, in order that this work may be brought up, that this additional force be given. It is made special on that account.

Mr. MADDOX. I understood the gentleman to say that he offered the amendment for some one else who was absent. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has investigated the matter himself?

Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], a member of the committee, went to the Department, made personal inquiry concerning this whole question, and thoroughly satisfied himself of the necessity for it. He is now temporarily absent, and so impressed was he with the importance of it that he asked me if I would submit the amendment which the subcommittee examined and agreed to. I will say to the gentleman that members of the committee on his own side have agreed to it.

Mr. MADDOX. I know nothing about it, and therefore I desired to hear some explanation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish the gentleman from Indiana were here. He could give perhaps a fuller explanation than I have given, but I think I have sufficiently covered the ground to show that the Secretary regards this as all-important. The employment is only temporary—for the next year.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LITTAUER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a bill of the following title:

H. R. 12283. An act in relation to the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Utah, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $8,000; in all, —— thousand dollars.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting in the blank the word "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Office Postmaster-General: For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; chief clerk, Post-Office Department, $2,500; private secretary, $2,250; stenographer, $1,600; appointment clerk, $1,800; 1 clerk of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 4 clerks of class 2; 1 clerk of class 1; 1 clerk, $1,000; curator of Museum, $1,000; 1 clerk, $900; 1 messenger; 1 assistant messenger; 1 telephone operator, $660; page, $360; in all, $33,430.

Mr. FARIS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 113, after the words "nine hundred dollars," insert "one telephone operator, $900."

In line 2, page 113, strike out "one telephone operator."

In line 4, page 113, strike out "four" and insert "six;" and in same line strike out "thirty" and insert "seventy."

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to provide for the telephone operator at the Post-Office Department the same compensation that has been provided in this bill for the telephone operator at the Interior Department and perhaps for telephone operators elsewhere. That is the sole purpose of the amendment, and its language regulates and harmonizes the clauses of the bill to which it applies.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment. It simply makes this telephone operator's compensation correspond with that of those engaged in the same line of work in other Departments under this bill. The special telephone operator referred to is the one standing at the phone with the instrument at his ear the whole day long. This is considered most severe work, and perhaps to a certain degree dangerous to the hearing. This man has parts of the instrument strapped about his head and held to his ears the entire eight hours of daily labor, other than the time casually occupied going to and from the phone. The committee in other parts of the bill took cognizance of the fact that this is a harder line of labor in connection with the phone than the usual use of the phone.

Mr. FARIS. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the fact that perhaps the words in line 3—"six hundred and sixty dollars"—should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, as the Chair understands, modifies his amendment by adding a clause striking out those words.

Mr. BINGHAM. That is correct.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment as modified, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Private Land Claims: For chief justice and four associate justices, at $5,000 each;

For clerk, $2,000;

For stenographer, $1,500;

For attorney, $3,500;

For interpreter and translator, $1,500; in all, $33,500.

For deputy clerks, as authorized by law, so much therefor as may be necessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of this bill. The custom, I believe, has been in these bills to extend the time of the existence of this court for an additional year or for two fiscal years. Is there any such provision anywhere in the present bill; and if not, should there not be such a provision?

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill for the current year makes such an extension for two years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Two years from when?

Mr. BINGHAM. Two years from last year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. So that it is unnecessary to insert such a provision this year.

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; it is in the law for the current year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then it will be necessary to adopt such a provision next year.

The Clerk read as follows:

District court, Territory of Hawaii: For the payment of the salaries of the clerk and the reporter of the United States district court for the Territory of Hawaii, at $3,000 and $1,200, respectively, $4,200.

Mr. GAINES. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman reporting this bill whether it contains any provision, and if there is none, why there should not be a provision for reporting the learned opinions handed down by the distinguished supreme court of Hawaii. I have industriously inquired this morning at several of the departments to get copies of the opinions of that court, and particularly one by which the court swept away a man's property upon the finding of a majority of a jury of twelve—a proceeding which we all know could not be had obeying the law of the land. I wish to see whether that court has assumed divine power to act in such matters. Such an adjudication is contrary to the oath which the judges took to support the Federal Constitution, which gives our people the right to have verdicts agreed on by twelve jurors, no more, no less.

Mr. BINGHAM. On page 126 of the bill will be found this provision:

District court, Territory of Hawaii: For the payment of the salaries of the clerk and the reporter of the United States district court for the Territory of Hawaii, at $3,000 and $1,200, respectively, $4,200.

Mr. GAINES. Would that cover the publication of the opinions of the court?

Mr. BINGHAM. Not necessarily.

Mr. GAINES. In what bill should such a provision be included?

Mr. BINGHAM. The sundry civil bill. This is a salary bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of appeals, District of Columbia: For the chief justice of court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $6,500; and for two associate justices, at $6,000 each;
For clerk, $3,000;
For assistant or deputy clerk, $2,000;
For reporter, $1,000: Provided, That the reports issued by him shall not be sold for more than $5 per volume;
For messenger, $720.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to ask whether or not the salaries provided for by this bill with reference to this court in the District of Columbia are larger than those heretofore paid, or whether there is any change of existing law in this provision?

Mr. BINGHAM. I will state to the gentleman that there is no change whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. While on my feet I would like to ask as to another feature of the bill. I would like to know whether as to the supreme court of the District and its organization there is any change in existing law?

Mr. BINGHAM. None whatever.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is all I desire to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the last clause, for the purpose of making a brief statement, which I think is due to the Committee of the Whole House having this bill under consideration to-day.

The generous confidence which has marked our procedure during the past two hours, carrying a great bill covering almost $25,000,000 through to conclusion without break or opposition of any character at this early stage of the session deserves from me personal thanks, and from the Committee on Appropriations additional obligations for your votes and concurrence in our work. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the formal amendment and move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House favorably with certain amendments, and that as so amended the bill do pass.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments to its passage.

The motion was agreed to; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

There being no separate vote demanded, the amendments were agreed to as reported by the Committee of the Whole.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BINGHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES AND CAPABILITIES OF PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report on investigations of the agricultural resources and capabilities of Porto Rico, with special reference to the establishment of an agricultural experiment station in that island, made in accordance with the act of Congress making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 10, 1900.

The SPEAKER. The message and accompanying papers will be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER ON INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES EXHIBITION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State forwarding the report of the United State Commissioner to the International Fisheries Exhibition of 1898, at Bergen, Norway.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 10, 1900.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted indefinitely to Mr. FITZPATRICK, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. ESCH to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Timothy A. Lewis, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made.

ASSISTANT TO THE ATTORNEY FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Speaker's table a Senate joint resolution for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution No. 135, authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to employ an additional assistant to the attorney.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to taking up this joint resolution for present consideration?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question about that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Who pays the assistant?

Mr. BABCOCK. The assistant will be paid out of the revenues of the District, the same as all other expenses of the District are paid.

Mr. COX. Is that to be paid, one-half of it, by general taxation?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. COX. I do not see why that is necessary at all.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that the form of the resolution was suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON], and that at this particular time street opening and condemnation cases are coming in, and the Commissioners came here in a body and made the request——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman kindly repeat his statement?

Mr. BABCOCK. The necessity for this additional help is caused by the street opening and condemnation cases, particularly Sixteenth street, requiring a large amount of work. The Commissioners came before the Committee on Appropriations in a body asking that they be given this assistant for such time as was necessary.

Mr. COX. How long is this office to run?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is not limited. It will be so long as the Committee on Appropriations may see fit to report an appropriation for it.

Mr. COX. That makes a permanent office, does it not?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no. This does not carry an appropriation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It will have to be paid, though.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] desires to ask a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the question I wished to ask was the question that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] has asked already, as to whether or not this creates a permanent office. So far as I can see from the resolution it does create a permanent office, because it enacts into statute law a provision for the creation of this office, which puts it in just the same position as all other offices in the District that run continually. Of course any other office in the District would be limited if we failed to make an appropriation, although the man holding the office could sue the Government for his salary if he filled the office.

I will ask the gentleman, if this is only brought in here to provide for an emergency which arises for this additional work, why there is not a limitation placed on the bill limiting the term of the office to the time that this additional work is required?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, I suppose there will be no objection to that. It was thought to be an emergency matter only, and was not intended for a permanent thing at all. The view taken of it by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was: "This is a matter of legislation. If you will handle that, I will see that the appropriations are made whenever the necessity arises."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How long does the gentleman think, from the statements made before the committee, this additional work will be required?

Mr. BABCOCK. I should judge this ought to continue for a year at least.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman consent to an amendment limiting it to a year?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COX. How long does this office run?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Wisconsin has just stated that the time necessary would be one year and that he was willing to allow an amendment limiting the term of service to one year, which I think is satisfactory.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, an amendment limiting this term to one year from the date of the passage of the act.

Mr. COX. When you get this man in there for one year you will never get him out.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, this is an absolute necessity now.

Mr. COX. That may be true, but I know how you work these things, and I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

And then, on motion of Mr. BINGHAM (at 3 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, recommending a credit to the account of Maj. T. E. True, for payment made by him to Sheldon Jackson—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Lewis Bonlin, administrator of estate of Charles Hogan, against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Joseph Engle against the United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEAR) and the late Senator from Minnesota (CUSHMAN K. DAVIS) upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I rise to a question as to the order of business; that is, in reference to the proceedings to-morrow, which I think ought to be settled by the Senate when it is full.

Congress passed an act, approved December 7, providing for the entire centennial celebration of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in this District, which is to take place to-morrow, the 12th of December. It has made in the act that day a legal holiday. It provided for "the holding by the Senate and House of Representatives, jointly, commemorative exercises in the Hall of the House of Representatives in the afternoon of the 12th of December, 1900, in honor of the centennial anniversary," and provided further "that the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the 12th day of December, 1900, at the hour of half past 3 o'clock" in the afternoon, and then goes on and details what the exercises shall be.

Now, as representing the committee which has the celebration in charge, I bring the matter before the Senate that it may decide what shall be the order of business of the Senate to-morrow. It has been made a legal holiday and the expectation is that neither House will do business. Of course, I can move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Thursday, leaving to-morrow a holiday, with an informal notice, which I now give, that the Senate is expected to assemble with the House in the Hall of the House of Representatives, where places will be reserved for the entire Senate, or I can move, which I myself rather incline to think is in the best taste, that the Senate shall meet to-morrow here at 3 o'clock and then proceed as a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

It seems to me, in reading over the act, that it is contemplated there shall be a joint session, and that the fitting way would be for the Senate, or Senators who may be here, to go to the Chamber of the House as a body. I should like to have the suggestion of any Senator as to which is the better way.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the law itself contemplate that both bodies shall meet officially?

Mr. HALE. The language is as I have read:

That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on the 12th day of December, 1900, at the hour of half past 3 o'clock p. m.

Mr. COCKRELL. That means as an organization?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes; as a body.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that way.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the House of Representatives has agreed that when it adjourns to-day it shall meet at 3.15 to-morrow, and it seems to me that it would be appropriate for us not to adjourn over until Thursday, but to adjourn to-day to meet at 3 o'clock to-morrow and then go as a body to the Hall of the House.

Mr. HALE. That is what seemed to me to be the desirable course to pursue. If there is no objection, then, I will move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 3 o'clock, giving notice to all Senators present that no business will be done, and that the Senate will be expected as a body to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives. I make that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 3 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 5123) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas Cordingly; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 5124) for the survey and construction of reservoirs on the head waters of the Big Sioux River, in the State of South Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

Mr. KENNEY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5125) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Hayes;

A bill (S. 5126) granting a pension to John T. Thompson;

A bill (S. 5127) granting a pension to Annie M. McHugh;

A bill (S. 5128) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin R. Wiley; and

A bill (S. 5129) granting a pension to Eliza P. Carter.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 5130) providing for the erection of a public building at the city of Fernandina, Fla., and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 5131) for the relief of Capt. Jefferson Dickerson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5132) for the relief of William W. Leake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a bill (S. 5133) for the relief of William D. Rutan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5134) for the relief of Goff A. Hall;

A bill (S. 5135) for the relief of Annie C. Osborne, sole heir of William B. Beall, deceased;

A bill (S. 5136) for the relief of Edward Tearney; and

A bill (S. 5137) for the relief of the estate of Walter Shirley, deceased.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5138) to provide for the establishment of a port of delivery at Saginaw, Mich.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAKER introduced a bill (S. 5139) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Hight; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5140) granting a pension to Mary C. Coombs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 5141) extending the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to homestead settlers on the ceded Indian reservation in Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5142) granting an increase of pension to Emma Foote Glenn; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PETTIGREW introduced a bill (S. 5143) to provide for the acquisition, purchase, construction, and condemnation by the United States of America of railroads lying in the Territories of the United States, the respective States, and the District of Columbia engaged in interstate commerce in carrying the mails, and to provide for the operation of said roads by the United States, and amending the act of Congress of February 4, 1887, entitled "An act to regulate interstate commerce," and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5144) granting an increase of pension to Charles Scott; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5145) granting an increase of pension to John J. Martin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5146) for the relief of Robert H. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5147) for the relief of B. J. D. Irwin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5148) to provide for raising and preserving the hull of the Niagara, the flagship of Commodore Perry in the battle of Lake Erie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PETTUS (for Mr. MORGAN) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5149) for the relief of H. C. Armistead (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 5150) for the relief of the estate of Jonathan Paulk, deceased; and

A bill (S. 5151) for the relief of the estate of William McD. Taylor, deceased.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Librarian to keep open the Library of Congress from 2 until 10 o'clock p. m. on Sundays, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted an amendment proposing to build dams and construct reservoirs on the Sioux River in South Dakota, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate

$150,000 for the construction of permanent buildings at Fort Meade, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NANNIE E. YASTE.

Mr. WELLINGTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Nannie E. Yaste, widow of Daniel A. Yaste, deceased, late a member of the Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months' salary, at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HARVEY R. M'RAVEN.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 5121) entitled "A bill for the relief of Harvey R. McRaven, son of Tranquilla McRaven, deceased," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the vacancies upon the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on the Geological Survey, the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Mines and Mining, the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, the Committee on Territories, and the Committee on Railroads be filled by the appointment of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the vacancies on the several committees which he has read in the presence of the Senate be filled by the appointment of the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. TOWNE]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

THE PURE-FOOD BILL.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I desire to give a notice, and I ask the attention of the Senate.

I wish to give notice that as soon as it may be convenient in the consideration of other bills and treaties, I shall ask the Senate, some time in the coming week, to take up for consideration the bill known as the pure-food bill, what is known in the House as the Brosius bill. I ask Senators to give the matter attention. It is the general legislation recommended by the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate. I think that the Agricultural Committee have also reported a bill, but I have no pride of opinion so far as committees are concerned. I am just as willing to take up their bill as the one reported by the committee of which I am chairman, the Committee on Manufactures.

I will say to the Senate that we have taken several hundred printed pages of evidence; that the subject is one of very great importance; that the matter of pure food and food adulteration has attracted the attention of a large number of people in the United States, and that I most sincerely hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the measure within the next week or ten days, when more important matters, if they are more important, shall have been disposed of. I do not fix any time now, but I shall ask some time in the coming week for a vote upon the bill, the substance of which is the Brosius bill.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE INAUGURATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HANNA was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 4th day of March next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12291) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives and calls the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] to the bill.

The bill (H. R. 3717) making oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State and Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having, on a former occasion, by a majority vote, referred a similar bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Chair would feel obliged, without instructions, to make the same reference.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to say that the Senate, having invariably, as I remember, referred bills in regard to the production and sale of oleomargarine to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I do not object to the reference.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to the reference suggested by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, then, is referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VEST. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The oleomargarine bill, as it is known.

Mr. VEST. Is that a motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Chair stated that, instructed by a former majority vote of the Senate, he felt himself constrained to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VEST. What majority vote was that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was a vote taken at some previous date, I do not remember when, after the matter had been thoroughly discussed on a similar bill, when the Senate by a majority of 1 referred the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GALLINGER. It was in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the statement that it was a similar bill may be correct to a certain extent, but it was a very different bill.

We might as well right now meet the question in regard to the reference of this measure. It is either a revenue bill or it is not a revenue bill. The Grout bill, as it is termed, imposes a tax of 10 cents a pound upon colored oleomargarine without reference to whether it is an article of interstate commerce or not.

Now, if it is an honest bill its object is to increase revenue. If it is a dishonest bill and an attempt to use the taxing power of the United States for the police exercise of the State, then in default of any statement by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, of which I am a member, I insist——

Mr. BERRY. The chairman of the Committee on Finance, as I understood him, said he did not object to its going to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Was that the statement?

Mr. ALDRICH. I stated that in view of the action taken heretofore upon a bill of this nature I did not care to raise a question or make any objection to its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VEST. I did not hear the Senator, for there was great confusion here. I did not hear even the Senator who made the motion or suggested that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, or, if the Chair made the suggestion, I did not even hear that.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that all bills affecting the revenues and finances of the United States ought to go to the Committee on Finance, or else that committee ought to abdicate its functions as marked out by the rules and leave the bills to float promiscuously around amongst other committees at the option of different Senators.

Here is a bill which is unquestionably a revenue bill, or it is a dishonest bill. If it is a police regulation, let us know it; but I see no reason why the rules of the Senate should be set aside in order that this matter should be, to a certain extent, prejudged.

I will say right in this connection that for the first time in my public service I have been inundated—that is the word—with petitions, not only from my own State, but other States, asking that this bill shall be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is no unusual thing for Senators and Representatives to be asked to vote for or against a measure, but this is the first time in all my experience that petitions have been sent here in floods asking that the Senate shall set aside its rules and refer a financial bill, a revenue bill, to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It seems to be the impression of the friends of this measure—I do not propose to discuss its details now—that it would be unsafe to send it to the proper committee, and therefore an exception is to be made.

I shall enter my objection to the reference to that committee, and ask that the Senate shall be called upon to dispose of the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will regard it as an open question.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, it strikes me that the reference of any bill to a committee is determined by its main character. The primary feature of the Grout bill is to prevent the adulteration of food and to prevent the sale of colored oleomargarine. The taxing feature of the bill is a secondary consideration. That being the case, it seems to me that it should go naturally to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The petitions to which the Senator from Missouri refers come from the farmers and the dairymen of the country, and they are very important factors to be considered.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

I have no desire as a member of that committee to bring any measure to it that does not properly belong there. A great number of petitions and remonstrances upon both sides and a great many delegations have come before that committee, papers upon the subject have been referred to it, and it appears that measures of this kind have always gone to that committee.

I do not think it is in its essence and spirit a bill for the raising of revenue. It is for the protection of the agricultural industry that this manufacture shall not sail under false colors, and the tax is only a method of insuring that that shall not be done. It is not a measure for revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, to whatever committee the bill goes, it ought to be investigated pretty carefully. I have always been in favor of stringent laws requiring oleomargarine to be designated so that people may know what they are buying, but this bill, if passed, of course stops the manufacture of it altogether. Whether it is so injurious to health, when, as we know, many poor people buy it, that we ought to stop absolutely its manufacture is a very serious question, and that will be the effect of this bill. It goes beyond anything heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Nevada will permit me, it does not stop its manufacture if it is not colored. It may stop the manufacture of colored oleomargarine in imitation of butter.

Mr. STEWART. As far as that is concerned, I think nearly all butter and dairy products are colored. The investigation of dairy products presents a great field. Undoubtedly there is much of disease in all cities, so all the physicians say, resulting from unclean dairy products. This question might be investigated. Nearly all manufacturers use coloring matter. The butter you see is not of its natural color. That is the fact.

So I say, without discussing the question now, that before a bill of this character is passed, which practically destroys an industry, it ought to be thoroughly investigated to see if we can not have a law passed to protect everybody; that will let us know what we are buying, and still not destroy an industry.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if the Committee on Agriculture is not the proper committee for the consideration of such a subject?

Mr. STEWART. To whatever committee the bill may go, I wish to protest against its being rushed through without being fully investigated. I think it should be investigated. I have received a very large number of petitions from persons living in portions of my State where they have this manufacture. They are all pretty much in the same language, showing that there is an extraordinary effort to push such a bill through without consideration. Whatever committee gets it, I only request that there shall be a thorough investigation had before legislation as radical as that which is proposed shall be adopted.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Finance, but I think this bill ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture in view of the precedents heretofore established by the Senate.

This is no occasion, of course, to discuss the merits of the bill, but whether the bill is rushed through or not as legislation depends not upon any committee of the Senate, but upon the Senate. I do not suppose this bill, or any other bill to which there is opposition, will go through without discussion, analysis, and investigation.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is not quite right, I think, in assuming that a tax, in order to be an honest tax, must be of necessity a tax for revenue. So far as taxation ordinarily is exercised it is, of course, for revenue, but there have been cases, and I presume there will be others, where there is no pretense that the taxation is for revenue. When the 10 per cent tax was levied upon the circulation of State banks, no one pretended that it was a revenue tax.

They exercised the taxing power, which is not limited by the Constitution, in the wisdom of Congress for entirely different purposes. When the oleomargarine bill was before the Senate, I think it was in the Forty-ninth Congress, it levied a tax that no one pretended was a revenue tax. It was a tax to give Congress jurisdiction to regulate—a tax which the authorities show was legitimately exercised by Congress if Congress thought it a proper case. We had a very elaborate discussion at that time as to whether that bill should go to the Finance Committee or to the Committee on Agriculture, and the Senate decided, as the President pro tempore has stated, by a majority vote in favor of the deference to the Committee on Agriculture. When that bill was passed by Congress, I was not a member. The bill was before the Senate committee and contained a tax upon the same theory that the old oleomargarine bill, the present law, contains a tax. That was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and I think this bill should be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It is altogether within the control of the Senate. I hope the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] will be adopted.

Mr. DANIEL. Before the Senator sits down, I should like to ask him a question. Would he be willing to express in this bill that it is not for the purpose of revenue, but for the exercise of the police power?

Mr. SPOONER. I shall not contend, so far as I am concerned, that it is for the purpose of revenue.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the bill?

Mr. DANIEL. The bill is not before the Senate. This is a question of its reference. It is the Grout bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I know that; but I wish to know what is the exact title of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 3717) making oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State and Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, with reference to the remark of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] as to the tax of 10 per cent on State banks, that was construed by the courts, if I recollect aright, as a suppression of a competition with the General Government in the supply of currency to the country; and it was adjudged that they had a right to do it; that when they undertook to issue paper currency they had a right to make it good; and that one means of accomplishing it was to tax the State banks.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me there?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The statement of the Senator does not at all differ from mine that the tax was not a tax imposed for revenue.

Mr. MONEY. I agree with the Senator about that; but I am also talking about the motive. I do not agree with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], who says the primary object of this bill is to prevent the adulteration of food and that the revenue to be derived from it is entirely secondary. I think the primary object of this bill is to tax one interest at the expense of another interest. It is a tax on an industry which is lawful and legitimate in every way, as to the using of a wholesome food product, that another industry may profit by it. That is the real question involved in this bill. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture, I follow the lead of the distinguished chairman, but it is no use for us to go into a discussion of this question upon the reference of the bill, not understanding exactly what is intended.

I do not suppose there is a Senator here who has not gotten thousands of printed cards, issued from some general headquarters—I do not know where—and letters without number praying us to enable the dairyman to make money by suppressing an industry that competes in the market with their product as a food. I am myself willing to protect the dairyman from fraud or imposition, and especially I am willing to protect the consumer. I am willing also to protect the seller of oleomargarine and prevent his deceiving his consumer; but it is as well for the Senate to consider that this is a proposition to tax one industry for the benefit of another. That is the whole thing.

Mr. FORAKER. If that be true, I will ask the Senator, without interrupting him, if the bill should not go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. MONEY. I think it should.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word on this subject. I understand this bill—although I have not examined it with care—proposes to reduce the tax on oleomargarine in one condition and to increase it in another. It is an amendment really to the existing law, which was examined and considered originally by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I believe it is a proper subject for that committee rather than for the Committee on Finance. I think we all agree that the question of the tax is rather incidental than otherwise.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, a single word. I do not want to detain the Senate unnecessarily. If my objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Agriculture has done nothing else, it has elicited the confession, to use that word, or the statement, if that word be preferred, that this is not a bill to raise revenue.

In reply to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] I will say that the salient point, as everybody will admit who wants to be sincere and honest about this matter, is in regard to the second section of the bill. There is no especial conflict in regard to the first, but it is as to that provision which puts a tax of 10 cents a pound upon colored oleomargarine.

I repeat, Mr. President, and I do so at the risk of being sneered at as a constitutional lawyer—which seems to be a most obnoxious phrase at the present time, the Constitution being very much at a discount—I risk the statement that if this bill has for its primary object the exercise of the police power by the Federal Government inside the respective States without regard to the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, it is a plain violation of the fundamental law of the land; and I want to ask any Senator here if this bill could have originated in the Senate? That is the test. Why did it come here from the House of Representatives? Because all bills raising revenue or affecting the revenue, under the Constitution, must originate in the popular branch of Congress.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] frankly admits, as was stated—if I may be permitted to say so without violating the rules of debate—in the other branch of Congress openly, boldly, and unhesitatingly that they care nothing for revenue. They could not very well have said anything else, considering we are now engaged in reducing the revenue, when there is a surplus of $80,000,000, down to $40,000,000. But all argument is unnecessary in regard to that matter, because it is admitted by the friends of the bill that it is not for the purpose of raising revenue, but it is a police regulation; and it is now proposed to turn the Congress of the United States into a State legislature and to treat all the States of the Union as if they were one State.

There are 32 States now in the United States, including my own State, that absolutely prohibit the sale of colored oleomargarine. Not satisfied with the legislation in 32 States, which is entirely in accordance with the Constitution, remitting all police and inspection laws to the plenary jurisdiction of the States, these dairymen now come to Congress and want to take away the jurisdiction of the 32 States that have acted, and all the balance that might act, and to make Congress the sole tribunal for exercising police power within the States. Mr. President, if that is not a violation of the Constitution of the United States I am utterly unable to ever discover one.

I repeat, that the test in regard to this question is whether this bill could have originated in the Senate, and every Senator here knows that it could not, for it is a revenue measure.

Whatever the chairman of my Committee on Finance may do, I feel very much like saying that I would rather have service on some other committee if we are to stand here silent and see the jurisdiction which the rules of the Senate give to the great Finance Committee of this body absolutely destroyed.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is quite as well aware as I am that when this bill is reported back from the Committee on Agriculture, if it should go there—and I believe it will, whether he or any other member of the Committee on Finance desires it—we shall have full opportunity to discuss the bill on its merits. Neither that bill nor any other bill of that nature is likely to pass this Senate in secrecy and without discussion. We all understand what the bill is for—that is, most of us do—and when it gets back here from the Committee on Agriculture, there will be ample opportunity to discuss it and have a reference to another committee if the Senate itself shall think that that action is desirable. I do not, however, see anything to be gained at this stage of the proceedings in antagonizing the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, pursuant to notice heretofore given, I now call up for consideration Senate resolution No. 371, relating to the appointment of a Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana calls up a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER May 25, 1900, as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials showing the appointment as Senator from the State of Montana of William A. Clark, signed by Acting Governor A. E. Spriggs, and the credentials showing a like appointment of Martin Maginnis, signed by Governor Robert B. Smith, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that said committee be directed to inquire whether either of said appointees has been duly and legally appointed to a seat in the Senate as Senator from said State of Montana, and if so, to report which of said appointees is entitled to be admitted to the seat.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the reference of the resolution, but I do not see that it is necessary to give the committee instructions as to what they shall do.

Mr. CARTER. My duty in the matter will be disposed of by a reference, as the resolution requires, of the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PETTUS. If the Senator will merely move that the credentials be referred, there will be no objection, as I understand.

Mr. CARTER. That is the extent of the motion and that is all the resolution provides, as I understand.

Mr. PETTUS. The resolution gives instructions to the committee as to what they shall do.

Mr. CARTER. In that particular the resolution is appropriate in form and does not go beyond the limits of propriety. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. PETTUS. I hope the Senator will not force the committee to do certain things by instruction. As I stated before, there is no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The committee will then do what it thinks right and proper. The chairman of the committee is here present. I do not see that anything is to be gained by ordering the committee to do certain things, and therefore I object to the resolution in that form.

Mr. CARTER. The resolution as presented by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is on the table. I think it is very important that whatsoever of instruction may be found contained in the resolution should be executed. My duty in the matter, as I see it, requires me to ascertain to the extent of my ability what prevents the State of Montana from having at this time full representation on the floor of the Senate.

The lieutenant-governor, in the absence of the governor of the State, sought to make an appointment to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Clark. Thereafter, some objection being urged to that appointment, the governor, upon his return to the State, attempted to revoke the appointment made by the lieutenant-governor, and having performed that act, as he supposed he had a right to do, the governor appointed another person, a different person from the one named by the lieutenant-governor in the previous certificate.

One or the other of these appointments must be effective, legal, and regular. If the appointment made by the lieutenant-governor is for any reason void, then, as a matter of fact, the appointment subsequently made by the governor would be valid. If, on the other hand, the appointment made by the lieutenant-governor was a valid appointment, the subsequent action of the governor in attempting to revoke that appointment raises a serious question requiring investigation. I assume that if the lieutenant-governor had ample authority under the constitution of the State to make the appointment and did make the appointment in regular manner and form, the power of the governor to make a subsequent appointment to fill the same vacancy could not be considered as well founded.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will allow me one moment further, I will yield.

I am not prepared to say, nor can the Senate in the present situation of the case, unadvised by any committee, say, what the very right of the matter is and what the legal status of these respective appointments may be, and I think it eminently proper in referring the credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to advise that committee of the desire of the Senate to be informed as to what it is right and proper and legal to do in the premises. The State of Montana is entitled to full representation on the floor of the Senate, and I feel it my duty to urge such action as will result in securing at the earliest practicable date the representation to which the State is entitled.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator from Montana satisfied that he is accurate in his statement that one or the other of these appointments must be, and is, valid? If the Senate should adopt the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which is on the table and unacted upon, or on the Calendar, in which they declare unanimously that there was no election whatever by the legislature of Montana, would it not follow from the decision of the Senate in the Quay case and in the Oregon case that the governor could not appoint at all?

Mr. CARTER. My statement was made upon the assumption that Mr. Clark was at the time of his resignation a Senator. I did not have reference to the legal proposition raised by the Senator from Wisconsin, which is a very serious one indeed.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator is proposing to instruct the committee to report upon this legal proposition.

Mr. CARTER. The resolution speaks for itself; and I will read it, if the Senator will permit me.

Resolved, That the credentials showing the appointment as Senator from the State of Montana of William A. Clark, signed by Acting Governor A. E. Spriggs, and the credentials showing a like appointment of Martin Maginnis, signed by Governor Robert B. Smith, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that said committee be directed to inquire whether either of said appointees has been duly and legally appointed to a seat in the Senate as Senator from said State of Montana; and if so, to report which of said appointees is entitled to be admitted to the seat.

It was not the purpose of the Senator from Montana to give any instruction to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; indeed, that could not be done, as the resolution if adopted would contain its own warrant to that committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to the resolution; but it seems to me, as the foundation of the whole business, there must be a determination by the Senate of the question whether the Committee on Privileges and Elections was right in its report that no one was elected in Montana. That presents, then, the question which has been so often discussed and which, of course, will be discussed again, whether, after the legislature meets and for any reason fails to elect, any governor or lieutenant-governor under any circumstances has the power to appoint.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask that the resolution No. 284 on the Calendar, the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections on May 30, 1900, may be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. What resolution is that?

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution declaring that William A. Clark was not duly elected to a seat in the Senate of the United States by the legislature of the State of Montana.

Mr. BACON. What is the motion of the Senator?

Mr. CHANDLER. To recommit that resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BACON. Would the Senator object to stating to the Senate what is the purpose of the recommittal, as the matter has been disposed of?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state with pleasure, Mr. President, the object of the motion.

When that resolution was reported unanimously by the committee Senator Clark was here in his seat under the election which had taken place. Before an opportunity was given to the Senate to act upon that resolution the Senator from Montana rose, made explanations, and went through the form of a resignation of his seat in the Senate. That changed the whole aspect of the case. The Senator left the Senate. The seat was undoubtedly vacant from that time on. The Senator did not wait to have an inquiry by the Senate or a discussion by the Senate into the merits of the resolution which had been reported, but forestalled and for the time being prevented any discussion of the merits of that resolution and the question of whether or not he had been legally elected.

In the opinion of some Senators if Mr. Clark had not been legally elected, the seat, in contemplation of law, had always been vacant, and the vacancy occurred by a failure to elect in the proper, lawful, and constitutional method. Other Senators think that the vacancy was created by the resignation of an office to which the incumbent had at the time a legal right. Now, Mr. President, that question becomes material in connection with the reference of the credentials of two persons claiming to have been appointed to fill this vacant place; and it is a proper subject for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to consider in connection with those credentials.

Then, further, Mr. President, to be perfectly frank with the Senator from Georgia, it seems to me that the committee might desire to report a different resolution from the one which they did report. The one which they reported was never acted upon by the Senate. The Senator from Montana went away from the Senate; he did not wait for the consideration of that resolution and the declaration that the seat was vacant. It may be that the committee will now desire to further consider whether a different kind of resolution should not be reported to the Senate for its action. The whole case has not been disposed of by the departure of Senator Clark. The committee has the right to propose and the Senate has the right to take action in view of the methods by which the committee unanimously declared the election of the Senator from Montana had been obtained.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if, in any event, taking his own position in regard to that resolution, or considering the resignation of Senator Clark, whether there is not a vacancy and was not a vacancy when he filed that resignation?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska did me the honor to ask me that question last summer, and the only concession I made was that the seat was undoubtedly vacant. How it was vacated I did not say.

Mr. VEST. Does it make any difference, really, how it was vacated, if it was vacant?

Mr. CHANDLER. Theoretically, perhaps, it does. Undoubtedly it has a bearing uponthe right otf he governor to make an appointment. I should say again, speaking frankly on a question of which I have not a matured opinion, that the Senators who were opposed to the seating of Senator Quay would be obliged to treat what may be the valid one of these appointments as invalid if there never had been a legal election, and to treat it as valid if the vacancy took place by resignation.

These, Mr. President, may be mere academic questions. They may not have any direct bearing upon the proposed action of the Senate.

It seems to me that this resolution ought to go back to the committee—a resolution reported when the Senator from Montana was here; a resolution which may not be the appropriate resolution for the committee to report, the Senator from Montana having gone away.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the resolution which the Senator from New Hampshire now asks to have recommitted to the committee is one which related, if I recollect its terms correctly, exclusively to the question of the right of William A. Clark to a seat in this body. That was the scope of it; that was the beginning of it and the ending of it; and when William A. Clark vacated his seat in this body, that question was necessarily no longer a live question—it was ended.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire says that the contention of some members of this body is that if the position of the committee was correct a vacancy in the office of Senator from Montana in consequence existed from the beginning. I do not think there is any lawyer in the Senate who would take such a position. However true it might be that the opinion of the committee and the conclusion which it reached were correct, no one will deny that while Senator Clark sat in this Chamber he was a de facto member of this body. There is no court which would not uphold any action of this body, even though that action might have been determined by a majority of one and that majority of one been had by the vote of the then Senator from Montana.

Mr. President, another necessary feature of the case is that suggested by the inquiry of the Senator from Missouri, and that is not only that William A. Clark was at one time a de facto officer, a de facto Senator, one whose vote as such counted as much as the vote of any Senator here, but that when he resigned a vacancy was created, and that no longer was he thereafter a Senator in this body. The President pro tempore, so soon as Senator Clark announced to the Senate that he had resigned his seat, directed the Secretary to omit to call his name, and in a roll call had on the same day the name of William A. Clark was not called. Very properly, I think, Mr. President, that direction was given, and it was a full recognition, a recognition acquiesced in by the Senate and continued to this day, of the fact that William A. Clark was no longer a member of the Senate, and that he had ceased to be a Senator by virtue of his resignation.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the last statement of the Senator that I challenge. I submit that the presiding officer recognized nothing but the fact that the seat was then vacant. How the vacancy had been created the President pro tempore of the Senate did not undertake to decide.

I wish to ask the Senator this question, whether, if in contemplation of law that election was void from the beginning by bribery and corruption, the Senator from Montana who sat here under that election could change the quality of the vacancy by tendering a resignation, or would the quality of the vacancy be exactly the same as if the Senate had passed the resolution reported by the committee?

Mr. BACON. The Senator from New Hampshire entirely begs the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg the Senator to state his distinction.

Mr. BACON. I will do so if the Senator from New Hampshire will give me the opportunity. The Senator from New Hampshire begs the question when he avoids the proposition that Mr. Clark was a de facto Senator. If he was a de facto Senator, his acts as a Senator were valid, and his vote counted as the vote of any other Senator; and any act which was passed by a majority of only one was a valid law, and would be so held by any court, although his vote was necessary to make that majority.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment? I have not had time to answer his question. I will take one question at a time, with his permission. If he was a de facto Senator, then necessarily he must cease to be such de facto Senator either by his own act in resigning or by his death or by the action of this body in expelling him or declaring his seat vacant, as the case might be.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; if the Senator will pardon me. I do not, of course, wish to be discourteous, and I will yield to him in one moment. Therefore it necessarily follows that that vacancy was created by the fact of his resignation. If he had never taken his seat and it had been declared to be vacant, that would be one condition; but having taken his seat, having been admitted to a seat in this body, having taken the oath, having become a de facto officer, he was clothed with all the rights of a Senator, and his ceasing to be an officer of this body must in that ceasing and in the cause of it have created the vacancy.

Now, the Senator says that the presiding officer did not indicate upon what ground he based his direction to the Secretary not to call the name of Senator Clark, because of the fact that there was a vacancy, but it is not to be presumed that the President pro tempore would have assumed that the report of the committee would be the judgment of this body, and that he declared a vacancy upon that assumption. There is no possible conjecture of any design on the part of the President pro tempore other than to recognize the fact that the resignation had created a vacancy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Georgia yield now?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Senate had passed the resolution reported by the committee and the Senator from Montana had retired from the Senate; how would the vacancy then have been created? It would not have been by resignation, certainly; but how?

Mr. BACON. It would have been created by the judgment of this body that he was not entitled to sit here.

Mr. CHANDLER. And upon the resolution that he never had been lawfully elected?

Mr. BACON. True.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I ask the Senator whether he thinks that the Senator from Montana when he left the Senate changed the quality of that vacancy and made it a vacancy by resignation, when it would not have been a vacancy by resignation if the resolution reported by the committee had been adopted by the Senate?

Mr. BACON. That does not in any manner alter the character of the issue. The question is whether or not he was a de facto officer. If he was a de facto officer, the vacancy was created when he ceased to be such de facto officer, and even though that vacancy may have been created by virtue of the judgment of this body that his original election was void, still, having sat here as a Senator and exercised the functions of a Senator, the vacancy did not exist until the judgment of this body created it.

Mr. President, that is all preliminary to the point I am coming to, because I do not desire in anything I am saying to trench upon the question suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, as to whether or not there was such a vacancy as would justify the governor in appointing a Senator to fill the vacancy. But the point to which I desire to direct the attention of the Senate is the question of the propriety of the motion now made by the Senator from New Hampshire to have this matter recommitted to the committee. If I am correct in stating that the scope of the resolution originally referred to the committee was limited exclusively and solely to the question of the right of William A. Clark to sit in this body, and if he is no longer a member of this body, what is there of that question surviving which can be properly submitted to the committee?

Mr. President, under the resolution which has just been sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the subsequent appointment of Mr. Clark the committee, I presume, will have the utmost latitude in determining what they will consider in order to bring to the attention of the Senate the matter necessary to show the propriety of the conclusion which may be reached by them; but it is not necessary that a defunct resolution should be sent to them for that purpose; and no purpose is a legitimate purpose with reference to that resolution which does not have in view the practical determination of a question as to the right of William A. Clark to sit in this body. His right to sit in the body under the credentials which he then had is no longer a question, because he no longer sits here. His right to sit in the body under the credentials now on the table can in no manner be determined by the conclusion which the Senators may reach as to the question formerly submitted to them. I submit, Mr. President, that it is not competent for the Senate, if there has been a determination of the question by the vacation of a seat by a Senator, to pursue him into private life for the purpose of determining a question which is no longer within their jurisdiction and which is no longer a living question in this body.

I do not know, Mr. President, what use Senators propose to make of this resolution; I do not know what is in the minds of Senators; but I submit that it is not proper that a resolution relating exclusively to the question of the right of Mr. Clark to sit in this body under the credentials as an elected Senator by the legislature of Montana should now be sent to that committee for any action on its part, he having ceased to be a member of this body and claiming no rights under those credentials.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator from Georgia has made, or has undertaken to make, a large thing out of a small one. Evidently the Senator from Georgia is not in favor of passing this resolution now.

Mr. BACON. Which resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. And I do not know that any member of the Senate desires to have it passed.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that I never was in favor of passing it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator.

Mr. BACON. The Senator emphasizes the word "now."

Mr. CHANDLER. However, I never before heard a Senator oppose the recommittal of a resolution to which he was opposed; but the Senator has a right to make that objection.

The change of circumstances that has taken place in the Senate has led me, as chairman of the committee, to suggest, as there probably was to be no action on this resolution, that it be recommitted, and I did not think there could possibly be any objection to the request of the chairman of the committee for such a little thing as that, especially from a Senator who was opposed to the resolution itself. I hope the Senator from Georgia will let the resolution go back to the committee. If he will not, I will not press the request at this time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, when this resolution was a live subject before the Senate, and when there was, in the opinion of some of us, an intention to proceed with unseemly haste in the determination of the grave questions which were presented to the Senate, with the vast mass of testimony, covering some three volumes, the Senator will remember that some of us were called upon to protest against what we considered to be unseemly haste, and to suggest that in so doing, in place of sitting as judges, we might appear in the attitude of prosecutors. If the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me for saying it, if now, after the matter has been carried beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate, it is still designed and attempted that this investigation shall be proceeded with, and that the committee shall be turned loose to do what they please in the way of a report or in the way of an investigation relative to a man no longer a member of this body, it may not be simply what we apprehended then, a prosecution, but it may appear to be in the eyes of the world a persecution. That may be, in the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire, a very small matter, but in the opinion of others it may be considered a large one.

Mr. TURLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me to say one word? I will take only a moment.

Mr. TURLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was no unseemly haste last summer in connection with this case. The Senator from Georgia made that charge, and then he qualified it, and I thought he withdrew it. I did not feel like sitting under the charge without objecting to the injustice of it, and I only refer to it now——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me, I will call his attention to the fact that it was gravely contended and insisted by the Senator that there should be a consideration of this case within a time when it was a physical impossibility for Senators to read the evidence which had been laid upon their tables. That is what I denominated as unseemly haste.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is not quite a fair way for the Senator from Georgia, and he is always fair, to state the question. There were then three large volumes of testimony. No Senator said, as the Senator now says, that we ought to delay proceeding with the case until every Senator could read through those three large volumes. It was a question of reasonable time. The committee waited a considerable period, and finally asked Senators whom they supposed would object to the passage of the resolution to indicate what they thought would be a reasonable time when the resolution could be taken up; and while that question was pending and being good-naturedly considered among Senators on both sides, the Senator from Montana made what seemed to me unseemly haste to go away from the Chamber and avoid the discussion which the Senator from Georgia had prevented from occurring up to that time. I am sorry the Senator has brought up his old charge against the committee, which was unfounded then and is unfounded now.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator fail to remember that when the attention of the Senator was called to the fact by Senators on this floor that there were three large volumes of testimony, and not only that there had not been any opportunity to read it, but that within the time the Senator proposed that the question should be acted upon it was a physical impossibility for Senators to read it, he still urged the early consideration and determination of the question?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do fail to recall that the Senator's statement is correct. It was simply a question as to what was a reasonable time. The chairman of the committee and every member of the committee were willing to give reasonable delay, and the only question was what would be a reasonable delay; and it seems that reasonable delay was only wanted until Senator Clark was ready to come in and read his speech and retire.

Mr. BACON. But the reasonable time that the Senator then indicated was not the time necessary to read the testimony.

Mr. CHANDLER. No. If the Senator wants to make the point that we were to make an agreement upon this floor that the case should not be proceeded with until every Senator had read every word of the testimony, I say nobody contended for that. I did not understand the Senator to be so unreasonable as that. But that the committee were willing that there should be delay in the consideration of the resolution for a reasonable time, according to the judgment of the Senate, is a correct statement. The Senator from Montana put an end to the question by retiring from the Senate.

Now, the purpose of my request for the recommittal of the resolution, which, manifestly, Senators do not want to pass now, was only that the committee might take into consideration the question of what kind of a vacancy was created, as bearing upon the questions that may arise during the consideration of the credentials of the two persons who appear here claiming the seat. The question as to the quality of the vacancy can be considered when the committee is obeying the instructions of the Senate to make inquiry as to which of the two persons claiming under the two appointments has a right to the appointment. It is not necessary that this resolution should be recommitted; but I think, in view of the fact of the change of circumstances which makes its passage unnecessary, the Senator from Georgia ought not to object to the recommittal of the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him one question? In his opinion, as chairman of the committee, when the credentials of these two gentlemen are before the committee will or will not the committee be restricted in its examination as to the nature and origin of the vacancy by the absence of this particular resolution?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think they will be.

Mr. BACON. Of course not. Furthermore, there is nothing in that resolution which can aid them in that investigation. They are authorized in their investigation of the credentials presented by the present claimants to travel over the same ground, if they wish to take the same testimony as that which they formerly took; but that resolution is one which relates solely to the question of the right of William A. Clark to a seat under the credentials which he claimed as the duly elected Senator from Montana by the legislature of Montana; and what the Senator from New Hampshire asks to have recommitted is that particular resolution, devolving upon the committee the duty to make that inquiry and to make answer to it to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator want that resolution to pass?

Mr. BACON. The Senator trifles with the Senate when he asks that question.

Mr. CHANDLER. No. I will assume that the Senator does not. Will the Senator kindly tell me, if it is not to pass, what objection he has to having it recommitted to the committee?

Mr. BACON. My objection to it is that I can conceive of no legitimate purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire in desiring to have the resolution recommitted, because the resolution relates to a matter which has been disposed of and is no longer before the Senate. Therefore, if there is no legitimate purpose, there must be a purpose which I myself can not possibly divine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I stated to the Senator what it was.

Mr. BACON. And the Senator in the same breath states——

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me, I think I ought to have said, when he asked me before, that this is not an unusual motion. It is a perfectly proper motion. The Senator asked me what my object was, and I told him frankly that as the resolution was not to be passed, the object was to recommit it in order that the committee, the Senator from Montana having resigned, might consider what was the quality and characteristics of the vacancy which exists in the Senate. Is that a legitimate purpose?

Mr. BACON. And the Senator has himself stated in the last five minutes that the reference of the resolution to the committee is not necessary in order to enable them to make that particular investigation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think it is, I will say to the Senator, but I do not see any harm in it. The Senator is very suspicious, too suspicious altogether, certainly of myself.

Mr. TURLEY. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senate that this matter go over until day after to-morrow. I think probably some understanding can be reached about it, and further discussion of it may be avoided.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will be agreeable to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the subject goes over until Thursday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire, in connection with the matter, to offer a resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in making the inquiry directed by the Senate in resolution 371, concerning the credentials and appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senator from Montana, shall have the authority to send for and examine persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, the expenses of the inquiry to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DORA RENFRO.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement reached yesterday in respect to pension bills may now be executed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will announce the first pension bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 4165) granting a pension to Dora Renfro was announced as the first bill in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dora Renfro, former widow of Ferdinand Yeager, late captain Company G, Seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT A. EDWARDS, JR.

The bill (S. 4073) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Edwards, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "of" and insert "second lieutenant;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert A. Edwards, jr., late second lieutenant Company L, Fourth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM FOX.

The bill (S. 4556) granting an increase of pension to William Fox was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on pensions with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Fox, late of Company A, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read third time, and passed.

WILLIAM B. CALDWELL.

The bill (S. 4022) granting a pension to William B. Caldwell was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, after the word "Volunteer," to strike out "Infantry" and insert "Cavalry;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William B. Caldwell, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE P. BEACH.

The bill (S. 4788) granting an increase of pension to George P. Beach was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of George P. Beach, late of Company A, Thirty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES BROWN.

The bill (S. 2107) granting a pension to James Brown was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James Brown, late first lieutenant Company M, Sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, at $30 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to James Brown."

CARROLL W. FULLER.

The bill (S. 2109) granting an increase of pension to C. W. Fuller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Carroll W. Fuller, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Carroll W. Fuller."

MARY A. MORTON.

The bill (S. 3338) granting a pension to Mary A. Morton was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "Infantry," to insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Morton, widow of Alfred Morton, late major, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLIVER W. MILLER.

The bill (S. 2228) granting an increase of pension to Oliver W. Miller was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Oliver W. Miller, late of Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $14 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW REED.

The bill (S. 2102) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Reed was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew Reed, late of Company G, Third Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIRARD WELCH.

The bill (S. 1761) granting a pension to Girard Welch was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Girard Welch, late a member of Company —, Fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting—the company does not appear in the amendment, but no matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Girard Welch, late first lieutenant and adjutant, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

C., widow of the late George S. Fisher, a veteran of the Mexican war and a member of Colonel Harding's regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and to pay her a pension of $50 per month in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move, in line 6, to strike out the words "of Washington, District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 9 I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

And pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 10 I move to strike out the words "the pension" and insert the word "that," so as to read "in lieu of that she is now receiving."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. ALLEN May 29, 1900:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1792) granting a pension to Martha C. M. Fisher, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to increase from $8 to $50 per month the pension of Martha C. M. Fisher, widow of George S. Fisher, late of Company I, First Regiment Illinois Volunteers, Mexican war, who served from June 22, 1846, to June 17, 1847.

Claimant, now 75 years of age, was married to the soldier February 22, 1849, and is receiving a pension under the Mexican-war act of January 29, 1887, at the rate of $8 per month.

A similar bill was introduced in the Fifty-fifth Congress, but no action was taken thereon.

It is recommended that the bill do pass without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if the rate stated in the report is the usual rate allowed in such cases.

Mr. GALLINGER. In all Mexican-war pensions of $8 a month, where the claimant is in advanced years, we have increased the rate to $20, and I have never known an instance where it was placed beyond that figure. This bill seems to have slipped through at $50. I think it would be a very bad precedent, and on my motion the bill has been amended so as to make the rate $20, which is in accordance with our custom.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is but one more. Let it be finished.

Mr. GALLINGER. I hope so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the next bill will be taken up.

MARVIN V. TUFFORD.

The bill (S. 4728) granting an increase of pension to Marvin V. Tufford was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "Artillery," to strike out "Heavy Volunteer" and insert "Volunteer Heavy;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marvin V. Tufford, late of Company M, Fourteenth Regiment New York Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOMESTEADS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I understand that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] desires to address the Senate at this time. I ask the Senator if he will not kindly allow me to call up a bill and have it passed.

Mr. CLAY. If it is a bill that will not lead to any discussion, I have no objection.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not believe it will lead to any discussion. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (H. R. 9140) providing that entrymen under the homestead laws, who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish war, or the Philippine insurrection, shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read in full for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands report to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2304. Every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the recent rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged, and has remained loyal to the Government, including the troops mustered into the service of the United States by virtue of the third section of an act approved February 13, 1862, and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States or in the Marine Corps during the rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the Government, and every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the Spanish war, or who has served, is serving, or shall have served in the said Army during the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines for ninety days, and who was or shall be honorably discharged, and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States or in the Marine Corps during the Spanish war, or who has served, is serving, or shall have served in the said forces during the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines for ninety days, and who was or shall be honorably discharged, shall, on compliance with the provisions of this chapter, as hereinafter modified, be entitled to enter upon and receive patents for a quantity of public lands not exceeding 160 acres, or one quarter section, to be taken in compact form, according to legal subdivisions, including the alternate reserved sections of public lands along the line of any railroad or other public work not otherwise reserved or appropriated, and other lands subject to entry under the homestead laws of the United States; but such homestead settler shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead and filing his declaratory statement within which to make his entry and commence his settlement and improvement.

"SEC. 2305. The time which the homestead settler has served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, or if discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, without reference to the length of time he may have served; but no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements."

SEC. 2. That in every case in which a settler on the public land of the United States under the homestead laws died while actually engaged in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States as private soldier, officer, seaman, or marine, during the war with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, his widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, may proceed forthwith to make final proof upon the land so held by the deceased soldier and settler, and that the death of such soldier while so engaged in the service of the United States shall, in the administration of the homestead laws, be construed to be equivalent to a performance of all requirements as to residence and cultivation for the full period of five years, and shall entitle his widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, to make final proof upon and receive Government patent for said land; and that upon proof produced to the officers of the proper local land office by the widow if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, then his minor orphan children or his or their legal representatives, that the applicant for patent is the widow, if unmarried, or in case of her death or marriage, his orphan children or his or their legal representatives, and that such soldier, sailor, or marine died while in the service of the United States as hereinbefore described, the patent for such land shall issue.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of section No. 2306 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not apply to persons who served in the Spanish war or in the suppression of the insurrection in the Philippines.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like some explanation of the bill. It seems to be a very sweeping measure. Does it give any additional rights to those already vested? Does it include any more in the list of those entitled to homesteads?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all. It simply reenacts the present law in respect to soldiers' additional homesteads, and includes soldiers who served in the Spanish-American war and in the Philippines. That is the sum and substance of the bill.

Mr. THURSTON. I should like to ask the Senator if it changes any of the laws relating to the manner of taking up land or making proof?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is no change whatever in that respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COL. CHARLES B. DOUGHERTY AND OTHERS.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senator from Georgia to yield to me for a moment that I may call up a bill to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. CLAY. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8487) for the relief of Col. Charles B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a serious question as to whether the preamble is any part of the bill, and therefore, that the bill itself may specify the amounts to be paid, I move to amend in line 6, after the word "sums," by adding the words "specified in the preamble to this act."

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator's suggestion is most pertinent, and so far as I am concerned I will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "sums," in line 6, it is proposed to insert "specified in the preamble to this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Whereas on the 17th day of May, 1898, the baggage car in the train carrying the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry from Mount Gretna, Pa., to Camp Thomas, at Chickamauga, Ga., caught fire accidentally and was destroyed, with all its contents; and

Whereas officers and members of said regiment had personal baggage and headquarters property in said car, which was entirely destroyed. The names of said officers and members, with the value of the property so destroyed, are as follows: Charles B. Dougherty, $309.68; George W. Wallace, $112; John S. Harding, $279.05; Frank L. McKee, $364.10; William Sharpe, $197.95; George F. Buss, $259; Robert S. Mercur, $147.95; Walter De F. Johnson, $164.35; Edmund N. Carpenter, $309.68; Walter S. Stewart, $127.25; William G. Weaver, $133.85; Charles H. Miner, $84.35; Frank W. Innis, $40; Samuel C. Chase, $15.75; Claude R. Grosser, $18.25; Richard Generals, $21.50; Harry R. Williams, $175.75; John McCallum, $130.70; Walter R. Phillips, $119.40; Dennison Stearns, $182.90; James C. Kenny, $198.20; John A. Kenny, $127.15; Louis Frank, $6.50; E. G. Gage, $87.12; Fred C. Bennett, $75; Charles S. Colony, $171.37; John H. Mahan, $55; Perry H. Benscoter, $12; O. Hillard Bell, $117.65; Edmund D. Camp, $106; William T. Hart, $53.70; E. L. Solomon, $17.80; Morris M. Keck, $19.35; Darius L. Miers, $137.75; Evan R. Williams, $82.44; Author Everette, $63.19; George S. McCleary, $211.25; Harry G. Boat, $101.20; George R. McLean, $268.70; John T. Flannery, $94; Michael J. Buckley, $81.95; Michael J. Brennan, $83.20; Harry W. Pierce, $211; W. F. Powell, $43.90; Adnah McDaniels, $76.50; total, $5,595.35: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay said officers and members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry as aforesaid, or their legal representatives, the said several sums specified in the preamble to this act, lost by them, respectively, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN OHIO.

Mr. HOAR. In drafting the bill (S. 5076) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio, by inadvertence the words "and consent" were left out, so that the bill reads, "the President, by and with the advice of the Senate," is to make the appointment. I ask unanimous consent that the engrossing clerk be directed to engross the bill by including the words "and consent," so as to read "advice and consent of the Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE AND INCREASE OF TRADE.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays the unfinished business before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, Senate bill No. 727 and Calendar No. 482, now pending in the Senate for discussion, purports to be a bill to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary; but a clear analysis of this measure will demonstrate to the unprejudiced mind that the results claimed by the friends of this contemplated legislation can not possibly follow, viewed from any reasonable standpoint authorized by the different features and phases of the bill as it comes from the Committee on Commerce.

There is one point, however, about this measure concerning which there can not be the least possible difference. When it shall become a law, it will take from the public Treasury, collected by taxation from the people of the United States, $9,000,000 per year for a period of twenty years, making in all $180,000,000, and will donate this vast sum to the owners of ships engaged in carrying foreign trade to aid them in making their private business more profitable. The shipowners, in addition to the amounts they receive from their customers for carrying freights and passengers, will receive from the Government, collected from merchants, farmers, laborers, and those engaged in other callings, $9,000,000 each year to add to their profits and enhance their fortunes. One man's business is to be heavily taxed in order to advance and to make more profitable the private business of another citizen. While the bill comes from the Committee on Commerce with a favorable report, I deem it just to state that every single member of the committee constituting the minority membership of the committee voted against a favorable report and will vote against the passage of this bill.

In the discussion of the bill I propose to be perfectly fair and to make no statement but what can be fully verified. In order to present the objections I entertain against this measure, I shall now proceed to analyze the bill in all its leading features, and then I will proceed to state at length what I conceive to be well-grounded reasons which lead me to oppose this legislation. The analysis which I shall give I believe will stand the test of criticism and be found to be substantially correct. I say this for the reason that I have given the different features of the bill most careful study.

The first section of the bill provides that after July, 1900, there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owner or owners of any vessel duly registered by a citizen or citizens of the United States, including corporations created under the laws of the United States or any State thereof, and being at the time of entry engaged in the foreign trade of the United States, compensation which I will state further on in my remarks. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to contract with the owners of such vessels as above described and to make payment for the subsidy provided for in the bill for a period of ten years for all vessels that have been completed and in existence on January 1, 1900, and for a period of twenty years on all their vessels completed after January 1, 1900.

Now, mark you, Mr. President, the owners of all vessels now in existence engaged in the foreign trade of the United States shall be entitled to draw the compensation fixed in the bill. The bill not only allows those who may build ships hereafter to draw the bounty, but the owners of all ships built and in operation before the passage of this act shall be entitled to draw this bounty; hence it will be seen it is not the principal purpose of this measure to increase the merchant marine, but, on the contrary, to make a large donation and to greatly enhance the business and fortunes of the shipowners of the United States engaged in our foreign trade. Later on I will discuss fully this feature of the bill, clearly showing that this legislation will not promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States.

The compensation fixed in the bill is as follows: On each entry of either a sail or steam vessel, not exceeding 16 entries in every twelve consecutive months, 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles, not exceeding 1,500 nautical miles, sailed outward bound, and 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 nautical miles, not exceeding 1,500 miles, sailed homeward bound; and 1 cent per gross ton for each additional 100 miles sailed. This is the provision of the bill providing for general subsidy for all vessels, both sail and steam. This feature gives to the owners of all vessels duly registered and engaged in the foreign trade of the United States compensation from the public Treasury as above set forth. The owners of these ships engaged in foreign trade now collect fares and freight from their customers and passengers, and, to make their business more profitable, they are given this vast donation from the public Treasury.

The compensation above set forth, which is the minimum amount fixed in the bill, applies to the owners of all vessels, both steam and sail, duly registered by a citizen of the United States and engaged in the foreign trade of the United States. These amounts are paid from the public Treasury to owners of vessels, regardless of speed or freight capacity. However, in addition to these amounts, an additional sum is taken from the public Treasury each year and paid to the owners of vessels with greater speed, regardless of freight capacity. This feature will be found at the bottom of the fourth page of the bill. This additional subsidy is as follows:

First, 12-knot ships and less than 14 knots shall receive five-tenths of 1 per cent per gross ton additional to the general subsidy; second, 14-knot ships and less than 15 knots, 1 cent per gross ton additional; third, 15-knot ships and less than 16 knots, 1.1 cents per gross ton additional; fourth, 16 knots or over, 1.2 cents per gross ton additional; fifth, 17-knot ships and less than 18 knots, 1.4 cents per gross ton additional; sixth, 18-knot ships and less than 19 knots, 1.6 cents per gross ton additional; seventh, 19-knot ships or over, 1.8 cents per gross ton additional; eighth, 20-knot ships and less than 21 knots, 2 cents per gross ton additional, and ninth, 21-knot ships or over, 2.3 cents per gross ton additional, thus increasing the subsidy as the speed increases, regardless of freight capacity. Now, this can be better illustrated by giving the speed of ships ranging from 6 to 21 knots:

Speed of ships, in knots.	Travel per day.	Travel per year.
	Miles.	Miles.
14	336	58,800
17	408	71,400
18	432	75,600
19	456	79,800

It will thus be seen that the subsidy to be given vessels up to 12 knots, which are really our great freight carriers, is only 1½ cents per gross ton, while the subsidy given to a fast steamer, which really carries mostly passengers and fine manufactured goods—for instance, a 21-knot ship—is 3.8 cents per ton.

In other words, a vessel of 12 knots speed, which really carries cotton, corn, oats, and farm products, would receive a little more than one-third of the amount paid to a swift passenger steamer never known to convey any freight except fine manufactured goods. This can be better illustrated by not only giving the speed of ships ranging from 6 to 21 knots, but by also giving the amount of subsidy that each class of vessels would draw from the public Treasury and the quality and quantity of freight usually conveyed by such vessels. The position for which I am contending, however, can be fully and clearly illustrated by beginning with a 10-knot ship and ending with a 21-knot ship:

Speed of ships, in knots.	Travel per day.	Annual subsidy under this bill.
	Miles.
12	288	83,300
14	336	126,426
15	360	141,750
17	408	182,070
18	432	207,900
19	456	235,410
21	504	304,290

Mr. MONEY. I wish to ask the Senator a question for information. For how many days in the year does he make the calculation as to the running of a vessel?

Mr. CLAY. Say 16 entries in one year. The average is about one hundred and seventy-five days a year.

Mr. MONEY. Does the Senator base his statement upon that calculation?

Mr. CLAY. It is based upon the calculation of a vessel running that many days in a year.

These figures demonstrate that a swift passenger steamer that travels 504 miles per day, more than twice the distance that is traveled by a freighter, a 10-knot ship, draws from the public Treasury, under the provisions of this bill, $304,290 annually—more than six times the amount donated by the Government to a 10-knot ship, when in all probability the 10-knot ship will carry more than a dozen times the farm products and heavy freight conveyed in the fast steamer engaged largely in carrying passengers. That the injustice and inequality of this measure might be thoroughly understood and exposed and that the advantage which the 21-knot ship will receive over the great freight carriers, I have taken the trouble to make a comparison of two steamers, one a 21-knot ship and the other a 14-knot ship. Take, for instance, the St. Paul, a swift passenger steamer of the American Line, with a gross tonnage of 11,629 tons. This ship travels 504 miles per day, and will draw an annual subsidy, under the provisions of this bill, of $304,290.

Now, take the Manhattan, which is a great freighter of the Atlantic Transportation Company, with a gross tonnage of 8,004 tons and with a speed of 14 knots. This ship travels 336 miles per day and would draw, under the provisions of this bill, a subsidy of $126,426, a little more than a third of the amount received by the St. Paul. I have before me the manifest of the St. Paul of April 3, 1900, clearly showing what the freight of this passenger steamer was made up of on that occasion. I also have the manifest of the Manhattan of December 16, 1899, and after going through the amount of farm products conveyed by each steamer I am at a loss to know how the friends of this measure can claim that this bill was framed in the interests of the farmers and producers of this country. I give below the freight conveyed by each to illustrate the line of argument which I am now pursuing:

Amount of freight carried by the Manhattan and the St. Paul.

Freight.	Manhattan, 14-knot ship.	St. Paul, 21-knot ship.
Corn ..... bushels	133,644	None.
Do ..... bags	1,380	None.
Oats ..... bushels	50,324	None.
Do ..... sacks	355	None.
Hay ..... bales	4,518	None.
Straw ..... do	262	2
Flour ..... sacks	11,532	None.
Cattle ..... head	800	None.
Horses ..... do	106	None.
Hops ..... boxes	1,946	1
White-oak staves	11,271	None.
White-oak boards	1,519	None.
Tobacco ..... hogsheads	24	None.
Do ..... cases	10	None.
Eggs ..... do	200	None.
Seed ..... bags	212	None.
Tallow ..... casks	441	None.

This is only a partial list of the freight conveyed by each steamer, but it fully illustrates the amount and items of the products of the farm conveyed by these two classes of ships. I have the entire manifest of the two steamers before me, and it is evident that the St. Paul, which receives the highest subsidy under this bill, carried practically no farm products except dressed beef and canned meats, which did not exceed five or six tons. How those who favor this measure, which donates annually to the St. Paul more than $300,000, engaged in carrying passengers, can point out that the farmers and producers of this country are the principal beneficiaries under the provisions of this bill passes my comprehension. I am not surprised that at the hearings before the committee, which consumed weeks of time, which I now have before me, that not a single farmer or producer appeared in favor of the passage of this measure.

I am not surprised that the shipowners alone, either in person or by counsel, monopolized the time of the committee in pointing out the great benefits to accrue to the country, especially to the farmers and producers, from the passage of this measure. A careful analysis of the bill will demonstrate that they alone are the beneficiaries of this legislation, and the zeal and earnestness with which they have pressed their claims is another forcible illustration of the benefits they expect to receive at the expense of the public Treasury. I am not satisfied to let this part of the argument rest with the two steamers above given. I wish to carry it farther. Take, for instance, the St. Louis, a swift passenger steamer of the American Line, which is a 21-knot ship, and would draw the highest subsidy given under the provisions of this bill. The Georgic is a freighter, and 13-knot speed, and belongs to the White Star Line. A comparison of the manifest of the Georgic of March 13, 1900, and of the St. Louis for February 20, 1900, as to the farm products conveyed by each gives the following results:

Amount of farm products carried by the Georgic and the St. Louis.

Freight conveyed.	Georgic, 13-knot ship.	St. Louis, 21-knot ship.
Corn ..... bushels	85,416	None.
Oats ..... do	6,900	None.
Hay ..... pounds	117,290	None.
Straw ..... do	12,005	None.
Flour ..... barrels	355	None.
Cattle ..... head	919	None.
Horses ..... do	127	None.
Wheat ..... bushels	39,917	None.
Cotton ..... bales	10,965	None.
Barley ..... bushels	9,655	None.
Cheese ..... cases	571	347
Bacon ..... boxes	1,624	4,250
Beef ..... quarters	6,661	3,871
Pork ..... boxes	4,306	None.
Tongue ..... barrels	30	10
Tallow ..... tierces	250	None.
Mutton ..... boxes	131	None.
Wood ..... cases	648	None.
Hams ..... boxes	123	12

Mr. President, by a careful examination of the manifest of both ships it will be seen that the St. Louis carried no real farm products and only about 400 tons of partly manufactured products. On the contrary, the Georgic, with a gross tonnage of considerable less than that of the St. Louis, which would receive only 1½ cents per gross ton subsidy, a little more than a third of the amount received by the St. Paul or St. Louis, carried of raw farm products—corn, oats, hay, cattle, wheat, cotton, and barley—about 7,000 tons. Of these products the St. Louis did not carry a ton. Yet, under the provisions of this bill, the amount of annual subsidy paid to the St. Louis would amount to $304,290, while the Georgic, which really conveyed the farm products, would draw a subsidy of not exceeding $90,150.

Of the farm products and semimanufactured products the Georgic appears to have carried at least twenty times as many tons as did the St. Louis, and, if you estimate the subsidy paid in proportion to the farm products carried, the St. Louis would receive eighty times as much subsidy as would the Georgic; and the St. Paul, on the same basis, would get thirty-seven times as much subsidy as would the Manhattan. These illustrations, figures, and facts demonstrate that the subsidy rates provided for in this bill are especially planned, not to promote exports of American products, but to provide luxurious steamers for those who wish to travel abroad and who are amply able to pay first-class cabin accommodations. It can not be successfully disputed that the greater part of our exports, especially grain, tobacco, and cotton, are borne in steamers of less than 11-knot speed, and the engine, fuel, and crew room required by these slow steamers is comparatively small.

The highest subsidy proposed for such a steamer is 1½ cents per gross ton for each 100 miles, not exceeding fifteen hundred miles, and 1 cent per gross ton for each additional 100 miles of the voyage. To illustrate, an ordinary freight steamer or tramp ship, say, of 6,000 tons gross (measured) tonnage would carry 7,500 tons of cargo. Now, the gross tonnage of the St. Louis, one of the international four great steamers, is 11,629 tons, and her net tonnage 5,839 tons, and her cargo capacity 3,500 tons. At the rate of subsidy proposed by this bill the St. Louis, a swift passenger steamer of 21 knots speed, would receive for the first fifteen hundred miles of each of her outward and return voyages $3\frac{8}{10}$ cents per ton per 100 miles, and $3\frac{3}{10}$ cents per ton per 100 miles for the remaining distance, or over $26,000 for the round trip. This sum would be paid to her owners out of the Treasury of the United States. But the actual cargo capacity of the St. Louis is 3,500 actual tons cargo.

The fact, therefore, is that for carrying half the American exports, for which the freight steamer was only subsidized for $4,740, the luxurious, swift passenger steamer is subsidized for over $26,000, or, in proportion to American exports carried, not considering the question of passengers, the passenger steamer receives more than eleven times the subsidy than does the freighter. The cargo of the freighter is made up of grain, flour, pork, cotton, and tobacco, while the cargo of the swift passenger steamer is made up of box and crated manufactured goods. The articles carried by the swift passenger steamers are found not to be farm products, but the surplus products of American manufacturers shipped abroad, sold, in all probability, for less prices than charged to home customers. Still, not being satisfied with the comparison already made as to the amount of subsidy paid swift passenger steamers, devoted almost entirely to carrying passengers and manufactured finished products, as compared with the amount paid freighters which carry the bulk of the farm products, I wish to carry the comparison still further.

I have before me the manifest of the Beatrice of April 10, 1900; the outgoing manifest of the Knight Commander of March 24, 1900; the outgoing manifest of the steamship Nordhvalen of April 4, 1900; the manifest of the steamship Starlight, April 2, 1900; also the steamship Clumbershall, April 12, 1900; steamship Sir W. T. Lewis, March 4, 1900. I have sent to Baltimore and procured this information that I might ascertain accurately what kind of freight these steamers conveyed. All of these ships above mentioned are below 12 knots and are freighters, and under this bill will draw the minimum subsidy fixed and can not possibly draw exceeding $45,000 annually each, while the New York, a swift passenger steamer, would draw an annual subsidy of over $300,000. While all of the freight steamers above mentioned would draw the minimum subsidy under the provisions of the pending bill, these steamers at the same time would carry the bulk of farm products conveyed to foreign markets.

To further illustrate the freight capacity of the ships above set forth, below 12 knots, I give the outgoing manifest of each ship on the date named, and I ask Senators to make the comparison with the New York, St. Paul, St. Louis, and Paris, four swift passenger steamers, that a correct conclusion may be reached as to the farm products conveyed by each class of ships, as well as the amount of subsidy received by the freighters in comparison with the passenger steamers. The outgoing manifest of the steamship Beatrice, April 10, 1900, was as follows: Gross tonnage, 3,334; speed, below 12 knots. Drawn by Howard Steamship Company. Cleared from Baltimore for Havre. Itemized list of freight conveyed is as follows:

705 barrels chopped apples, equal to	pounds..	180,255
15 maple logs	feet..	3,400
48 walnut logs	do....	8,000
3,400 oak planks	do....	65,200

167 bales hogs' hair, equal to	do....	63,163
210 boxes bark extract, equal to	pounds..	12,600

The above gives the line and class of freight conveyed by a steamer below 12 knots and which would draw the smallest subsidy mentioned in the bill. The outgoing manifest of the steamship Nordvalen, April 4, 1900, was as follows: Cleared from Baltimore for Denmark with mixed corn, 192,868 bushels, and 6,000 pounds of cotton bags. The steamship Starlight cleared from Baltimore April 2, 1900, for Southampton with 97,714 bushels corn and 103,449 bushels of oats. Both of these ships are freighters and below 12 knots and are engaged in carrying farm products, and would only draw the smallest subsidy mentioned in the bill. The steamship Clumbershall cleared from Baltimore April 12, 1900, to Rotterdam with mixed corn amounting to 185,142 bushels; yellow corn, 171,142 bushels; wheat, 16,000 bushels; bags of grain, 12,242 bushels. This steamship is a freighter and engaged in carrying farm products, and would likewise draw the minimum subsidy in the bill before us. The steamship Sir W. T. Lewis cleared from Baltimore March 4, 1900, for Havre with freights as follows:

Wheat in bulk	bushels..	24,000
Mixed corn in bulk	do....	51,428
550 bags chopped apples	pounds..	572,000
921 oak planks	feet..	25,000
24 walnut logs	do....	2,000
20 hogsheads Virginia tobacco	pounds..	40,100
775 bales cotton	do....	387,800
760 pieces oak lumber	cubic feet..	17,056
9,626 bars copper	pounds..	14,677
55 cakes copper	do....	11,572
1,670 ingots of copper	do....	33,637
22,249 plates of copper	do....	459,224
38 barrels sulphur copper	do....	22,725
4,748 pieces oak lumber	feet..	68,000
1,000 packages lard	pounds..	187,891
100 boxes evaporated apples	do....	173,113
1,050 barrels cotton-seed oil	gallons..	52,500
Sacks oil cake	pounds..	1,772,204
1,792 bags gluten meal	do....	225,792

These partial items of freight give some idea of the farm products conveyed by ships engaged in our foreign trade. All of the ships above mentioned are below 12 knots, and are engaged almost entirely in carrying farm products. Notwithstanding this fact, the framers of the bill now under discussion have studiously planned to give the smallest subsidy to this class of vessels, reserving the largest share of the bounty taken from the public Treasury for the swift passenger steamers engaged largely in conveying tourists on pleasure trips to foreign countries. I am desirous, however, in carrying this illustration still further, that I may point out the great inequality and injustice of the scheme which we are now considering. I will take another ship; for instance, the steamship Knight Commander. This steamship is likewise a freighter, with a speed below 12 knots, and cleared from Baltimore for London March 24, 1900, with the following itemized list of freight:

1,600 bags chop	pounds..	224,000
250 cases oysters	dozen..	1,000
25 cases oysters	do....	50
75 cases vegetables	do....	100
60 cases ox tongues	do....	720
Live cattle		224
6,150 barrels glucose	pounds..	4,294,944
Chimneys (glass)	boxes..	60
138 hogsheads, 130 tierces, 143 cases, leaf tobacco	pounds..	314,156
5,926 pieces lumber	feet..	22,145
Iron water gates	pieces..	25

95 bales hog hair	pounds..	74,549

A careful inspection of this list will give some idea of the farm products conveyed by this class of ships in comparison with the farm products conveyed by 21-knot ships, fast passenger steamers, which in reality draw the bulk of the subsidy provided by the pending bill. Having illustrated the classes of freight usually conveyed by steamers below 12 knots, which under this bill draw the subsidy named, let us examine with care and ascertain what benefit the farmers and producers of this country receive from the use of these swift passenger steamers.

Let us examine this bill with reason. Let us analyze it and see what is in it. Let us not take it for granted that this bill is framed in the interest of building up the merchant marine of our country simply because it says so. Let us examine its provisions. Let us analyze every section. Let us analyze every feature. Let us see whether or not the real purpose of the bill is to build up the merchant marine of the United States.

To make clear this position it becomes necessary for us to understand what classes of freight these fast passenger steamers usually convey; how much corn, wheat, oats, bacon, lard, cotton, timber, coal, iron, tobacco, and other farm products go to make up their cargo. I have before me the manifest of the steamship New York, March 27, 1900, owned by the International Navigation Company, and I have carefully gone through the itemized lists of her freight of that date, and what do I find? This passenger steamer, that would draw an annual subsidy under the provisions of this bill of more than $300,000, carried neither corn, wheat, oats, rye, bacon, live stock, cotton, tobacco, flour, meal, lumber, logs, or any other farm products. This illustrates what interest the farmer has in this class of ships.

I insert in the RECORD this entire manifest, that we may reach a proper conclusion as to what benefit will accrue to the farmer and producer in conveying his farm products to foreign markets by these passenger steamers whose owners are to be enriched out of the public Treasury at the expense of the people of the United States. The freights conveyed in this swift passenger steamer that would receive an annual subsidy of more than $300,000 out of the public Treasury consists of finished manufactured products shipped abroad. The majority of the Committee on Commerce, in their report favoring the passage of this bill, tell us that our exports of agricultural products for 1898 amounted to nearly 17,000,000 tons; that our total exports amounted to 28,000,000 tons, and that the primary purpose of this bill now before us is for the benefit of our exports, and that as agriculture in bulk and value furnishes much the greater part of our exports the bill is essentially a bill to promote the exports of agriculture.

The majority of the committee also tell us in their report that the most promising field for the future development of our markets for agricultural products is northern and temperate Asia, and that our grain fields and cotton plantations will gain in greater proportion from the enactment of this bill into law than the seaboard shipbuilding and ship-owning States, whose benefits, they say, from its enactment are to the casual eye more clearly manifest. A more absurd proposition was never stated. How our grain fields and cotton plantations are to be benefited in greater proportion than the shipbuilding and ship-owning States by legislation which takes from the public Treasury $9,000,000 annually for a period of twenty years and contributes this vast sum, collected by taxation from the people, to shipowners to aid them in carrying on their private business, I must confess I am unable to see.

By what process of logic or reasoning these gentlemen reach the conclusion that the farmer and producer will be benefited more than the shipowner by the provisions of this measure, thus far they have been unable to tell us. The proposition stated by the majority of the committee is simply this: If you will tax all the people and raise $180,000,000, and take this sum and give it to the shipowners and aid them in developing their private business, you will benefit the people who pay the taxes more than the private individual who receives the donation. I presume the majority of the committee are going on the theory that it is more blessed to give than receive. While the friends of the measure proclaim loudly that its real purpose is to increase our merchant marine, so as to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, a careful analysis of the bill—I desire to reflect upon no Senator who assisted in framing the bill, because the presumption is that all acted honestly—will show conclusively that it was not framed with the view of building up our merchant marine; at least, if enacted into law we can not hope to see such results follow. The bill provides, as I have said heretofore, that the owner or owners of any vessel of the United States now in existence, and completed and in existence January 1, 1900, shall be entitled to make application and draw the subsidy out of the public Treasury without being compelled to build other ships to correspond in tonnage with the ships drawing the subsidy. This provision of the bill is not drawn with the view of encouraging shipbuilding and enlarging our merchant marine.

If those favoring this measure desired such results, why did they simply require the owners of existing vessels claiming such subsidy to build new vessels equal to 25 per cent of the tonnage of the vessel or vessels receiving the benefit of the subsidy? When Congress undertakes to provide that the owners of all vessels now in existence belonging to citizens of the United States and engaged in the foreign trade of the United States shall draw from the Government a large subsidy to aid such owners in carrying on their private business without compelling such owners to build other ships to correspond in tonnage capacity with those ships drawing the subsidy, such legislation can not possibly result in any great increase of the merchant marine.

If the friends of this bill framed it with the view and for the purpose of encouraging shipbuilding, why did they not provide that the owner or owners of any vessel engaged in the foreign trade of the United States, before receiving the benefit of the subsidy provided in the act, should be required to obligate themselves to build new ships to correspond with those receiving the benefit of the subsidy? In such an event every owner of a vessel applying for the subsidy would have been compelled to have built a similar vessel, which would have resulted largely in building up the merchant marine and would have given a great stimulus to shipbuilding in the United States; but clearly, to my mind, this legislation in its present form can produce no such results. If Senators will examine the testimony taken before the committee, the conclusion will be reached that the shipowners have a thorough organization to carry through this legislation.

They were not seeking opportunities to build ships; but, on the contrary, to secure legislation that will enable them to go into the public Treasury and draw nine million annually and divide it among themselves. If it be the sole purpose of the friends of this measure to encourage the building of ships and to enlarge our merchant marine, why is it necessary to pay the bulk of this subsidy to the owners of ships already in existence and engaged in our foreign trade without requiring the owners of such ships to build and put in use other ships of a similar character?

I have reference to American shipowners in discussing this feature of the bill; that is, American shipowners flying under our flag. If the framers of this bill had no other purpose in view except to stimulate shipbuilding in the United States, why did they deem it necessary to take from the public Treasury millions of dollars annually and pay to shipowners now engaged in the foreign trade of the United States, whose ships have already been built and who are not required, as a condition precedent, to build other ships to correspond with those receiving the subsidy? If those who favor this legislation are acting in good faith and are actuated by no other motive except to increase our merchant marine and to encourage shipbuilding in our country, why did they not provide that the subsidy shall be paid to those who will build ships hereafter?

The testimony taken before the committee does not develop the fact that those who have so zealously and earnestly advocated this measure, both in person and by counsel, have any great anxiety about our merchant marine. It does not develop the fact that they were solicitous about new shipyards, or the building of other ships. Their great anxiety was about their present business. The ship owners were not satisfied with the fares they had collected from the customers and the dividends they had divided among their stockholders, and they came to the Treasury of the United States not for aid to build new ships or to enlarge our merchant marine, but to swell the profits of their business at the expense of the public Treasury. The more carefully we study the provisions of the bill and endeavor to reach the results that will follow from its passage, the more we become convinced that its real purpose is to enhance the business, to add to the dividends, and to enlarge the profits of the owner of ships, whether corporations or individuals, now in existence and engaged in our foreign trade.

In all probability the friends of the bill will contend that in the ninth section provision is made to remedy the evil which I have been discussing. This section, which has been amended—and I will discuss the amendment later on—provides that any foreign-built steamship a majority interest in which was owned by American capital on the 1st of January, 1900, may be admitted to American register. That is, as I understand it, a foreign-built ship, the majority of whose capital is owned by American citizens, may apply and receive the benefit of the subsidy, provided they sail under our flag. That is, they get half of the subsidy which is allowed to the owner of a ship already sailing under our flag.

Mr. HANNA. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. HANNA. There are still further conditions connected directly with that provision.

Mr. CLAY. I understand that. They are required to build other ships.

Mr. HANNA. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. I will not misstate the bill. If I do so, it will not be intentional. It also provides—now see if I am correct about it—that foreign-built ships the construction of which for Americans had begun on or before January 1, 1900, and that has been changed, as I understand it, from January 1, 1900, to February, 1899, which, in my opinion, is a very serious objection to the bill, but which I will discuss later on, shall be entitled to American register. This feature of the bill gives to American citizens who own ships sailing under a foreign flag, provided a majority interest in such is owned by American capital, the right to participate in the division of this subsidy under conditions which I shall now proceed to discuss for the purpose of demonstrating that this feature of the bill will not result in any great increase in our merchant marine.

It is true that before the foreign-built steamship can receive any part of this subsidy a majority of the stock in such foreign-built steamship now sailing under a foreign flag must be owned by American capital. It is also true, under the provisions of this bill, that the admission of all these foreign-built steamships is conditioned upon the construction within the United States inside of ten years of vessels equal to the gross tonnage of those receiving the subsidy. In other words, American citizens who have invested their money in foreign-built ships and who are now sailing them under foreign flags are permitted to admit these ships to American register, and to sail them under our flag, and to participate in the subsidy fixed in this bill, provided the American owners of such foreign-built vessels will build other vessels to be used in our foreign trade equal to the gross tonnage of the vessels receiving the benefit of this subsidy. The difference between American citizens owning American vessels and those owning foreign-built vessels is that the former are not required to build other vessels of like capacity and the latter are required to build such vessels in order to receive the subsidy.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator is delivering a very instructive speech, and I wish to ask him a question for information. Will not the foreign-built ship owned by Americans in the ten years make enough out of the subsidy to build the ship required, without requiring anything to be paid out of the pocket of the owner?

Mr. CLAY. I believe they are required to build the ship before the subsidy is paid. That is my recollection. The money is held in the Treasury until the ship is built, and it is then turned over to them.

Mr. MONEY. It is the same thing.

Mr. CLAY. I presume in the course of ten or twelve years, in all probability, they would receive enough subsidy to pay for building a ship, but, to be perfectly fair, the bill does not provide that the subsidy shall be paid until the ship is completed.

This provision of the bill requiring American owners of foreign-built ships before such owners can receive the benefit of the subsidy, to build other ships with equal tonnage capacity to those receiving the subsidy would indicate to the casual eye that the merchant marine would likely be greatly increased by virtue of such provision. But to my mind such result would not follow. It is necessary to understand the entire provision of this bill to reach a correct conclusion. Under section No. 1 and Paragraph D it is provided that a foreign-built vessel admitted to American register, pursuant to the provisions of this act shall be entitled to compensation at the rate of 50 per cent of the rates fixed by this section, and no more. This means the owners of American vessels now in existence engaged in our foreign trade, flying them under an American flag, shall receive the highest subsidy provided in this bill without being required to build other ships of like character, while the American citizen who has placed his money in foreign-built ships and who undertakes to avail himself of the benefits of this act is required to build other ships, and then receives only 50 per cent of the subsidy given to the owners of American ships engaged in our foreign trade.

To state it more plainly, every time the American owner of a ship sailing under our flag receives a hundred-dollar subsidy the American citizen who owns foreign-built ships, under the provisions of this bill, will draw $50. Now, what will be the result so far as increasing the merchant marine? The owners of American vessels registered for foreign trade will draw twice the subsidy for operating their ships that those draw who may bring their foreign-built ships under our flag and register them for foreign trade.

It necessarily follows that American capital invested in foreign-built ships will readily see the disadvantage under which it labors. American citizens who have invested their money in foreign-built ships, and who are sailing them under a foreign flag, will not avail themselves of the provisions of this bill, for the reason that they are not only required to build new ships, but after they have done so they can only draw half of the subsidy allowed ships of Americans flying our flag. They can not afford to come in competition with a class of ships drawing from the public Treasury a sum twice as large as the amount given to American owners of foreign-built ships. As we proceed to analyze the bill, every step we take leads inevitably to the conclusion that, any view you take of the different features of the measure, no great stimulus will be given to shipbuilding in the United States, and consequently our merchant marine will not be enlarged to any great extent by this legislation.

Since I began the preparation of my argument two amendments have been adopted by the Committee on Commerce, which materially change the bill and render it much more objectionable than when the bill first came from the committee. The bill originally provided that no vessel shall be entitled to the full compensation unless she shall have cleared from a port of the United States with cargo to the amount of 50 per cent of her gross tonnage. The bill, as amended, strikes out "gross tonnage" and inserts "capacity for carrying commercial cargo." This is a radical difference. There is quite a difference between the gross tonnage of a steamship and its commercial tonnage, or cargo capacity. Gross tonnage means the entire cargo capacity of a ship, not deducting any space for coal, fuel, crew, etc. Take, for instance, the St. Louis, a swift passenger steamer of 21 knots, and this ship has a gross tonnage of 11,629 tons and a cargo capacity of 3,500 tons.

The bill, as originally reported, required this ship when it cleared from a port to carry cargo equal to 50 per cent of its gross tonnage. The amendment as adopted allows such a ship to draw the entire subsidy when it clears from a port with 50 per cent of its capacity for carrying commercial cargo. In other words, this amendment provides that the swift passenger steamers can first deduct the space consumed by coal, fuel, crew, passengers, etc., and draw the full subsidy, provided such a ship shall convey a cargo equal to one-half of the space left, deducting the space consumed as above set forth. This is another evidence, to my mind, that the bill is not intended to increase our agricultural exports, but that its principal benefit is to go to the owners of the swift passenger steamers, engaged almost entirely in conveying passengers to foreign countries.

The other amendment to which I desire to call attention, radically changing the bill, is as follows:

> Only foreign-built steamships that were on the 1st day of February, 1899, engaged in an established freight or passenger business, or both, and such steamships as were under contract for construction on February 1, 1899, are permitted to avail themselves of the benefit of this act.

That is, foreign-built ships, of which a majority of the capital stock is owned by American citizens and which were completed on February 1, 1899, or were under contract for construction February 1, 1899, are permitted to make application to participate in this subsidy. This amendment is intended to restrict and not to expand our commerce. The bill as drawn and reported by the committee took one step in the direction of free ships by providing for the admission of foreign ships under certain restrictions.

This amendment confines the subsidy to such ships as were completed or in process of construction on February 1, 1899. How easily such an amendment could be utilized for the special benefit of a certain class. This ship-subsidy bill has been before the country for some time. Those who have been expecting to avail themselves of its benefits, and who were largely instrumental in securing its favorable consideration by Congress, and who knew well what would be its provisions could easily have adjusted and prepared contracts for the construction of ships by February 1, 1899, and filed them with the Secretary of the Treasury, preparing to be the beneficiaries of the provisions of this act. It is to be assumed that the ship owners and builders, who control the leading lines and who, it is admitted, were largely instrumental in preparing the bill, knowing what the legislation would be, would so shape their business in the construction of ships as to make all the contracts possible up to February 1, 1899.

Those who were not on the inside of this legislation and not realizing the time that would be fixed for making contracts for the construction of ships, not knowing that the time for such contracts would expire February 1, 1899, two years before the passage of the bill, would be shut out from making contracts for the construction of ships entitled to enjoy the benefit of this subsidy. Persons who may have completed ships since February 1, 1899, or who may have entered into contracts for the construction of ships since that time are not entitled to enjoy the benefit of this subsidy. This amendment, to say the least of it, is suspicious of favoritism, and would indicate that the persons who are to enjoy the benefit of the subsidy under this provision knew before the passage of this legislation that the subsidy would be confined to a certain class, to wit, those who had completed their ships or who had entered into contract for the construction of ships on or before February 1, 1899. Why were not the friends of this measure willing to extend this feature of the subsidy to the owners of ships in existence at the time of the passage of the act or that might be under contract for construction at the time of the passage of the act or for a certain time to be named in the future? Why not give an equal and a fair chance to all ship owners and builders who might be entitled to the subsidy under this feature of the bill?

There is another objection to this bill, to my mind, that carries with it great weight. Under the provisions of the bill any citizen of the United States who applies to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of building a new ship and receiving the benefit of this subsidy must do so within five years after the passage of this act, and American owners of foreign-built vessels receiving the benefit of this act must, within ten years after the registry of any foreign-built vessel, build a new vessel of an aggregate gross tonnage equal to the gross tonnage of the foreign-built vessel receiving the benefit of this subsidy.

Now, American citizens, under this bill, who may desire to build ships to participate in this subsidy must do so within five years. American citizens who do not own ships before the passage of this act, and who build them within the next five years, will enjoy the benefit of this subsidy for twenty years. But ships built after this five years shall have elapsed can not participate in the subsidy. What will be the result? Those who may build ships during the next five years, enjoying the benefit of this subsidy, will have the advantage over those who may build ships after five years, one receiving a large subsidy from the Government every year and the latter class receiving nothing. The result will follow—every American ship built during the next five years will be under a bounty contract for twenty years, longer than it would last, while new ships, built after five years, will not be subsidized and can not compete with the ships built during the next five years enjoying the benefit of this bounty.

The stimulant gives out at the end of five years, but the ships built during this period enjoy the stimulant for twenty years. Americans, realizing that the ships already built during this five years will continue to enjoy this bounty, will see that it is impossible to build new ships, after a lapse of five years, to compete with these subsidized ships built under the provisions of this act. There certainly will then come in the history of our country a period when no American can afford to build a new ship to compete with those ships enjoying this large subsidy for twenty years to come. This is one of the serious difficulties which is always inherited from the bounty scheme and can not be avoided. History teaches us that such has always been the result. A bounty once begun, there is no good place for giving it up. The more bounty you give the more the recipient wants.

In the language of the minority of the House committee against the passage of this measure, "A bounty works on an industry like alcohol on the human system—the more you take, the more you want; and after you have taken too much, it will kill you to stop and kill you if you do not stop." An American marine built up in this way will not remain long at a maximum point, but will decrease and go to decay so soon as the supply of the bounty ceases. If money must be taken from the Treasury to give life and growth to our shipping interest, it will be essential to continue the bounty system; otherwise, retrogression, failure, and ruin will follow. This has been the experience of other nations and will apply to both features of the bill, either the five or ten year limit.

The argument relied upon by the advocates of this measure to secure the passage of this bill is the small per cent of our exports carried in American vessels in comparison with foreign vessels. They claim that in 1839 we carried 33 per cent of our exports in American vessels and in 1879 only 23 per cent; and in 1889 only 14 per cent and in 1899 still less—8.9 per cent. The majority of the committee could have gone further and truthfully stated that the percentage of our exports and imports carried in vessels of the United States from 1855 to 1899 have gradually decreased. From 1857 to 1867, a period of ten years, there was a decrease of from 70 per cent to 33 per cent, and from 1867 to 1881 a decrease from 33 to 16 per cent; or, to sum it up, in 1882, of the goods, wares, and merchandise exported from and imported into the United States American vessels transported only 16.2 per cent and foreign vessels 83.8 per cent.

The way to meet a proposition or an argument, especially an argument which the friends of the measure claimed to be the controlling one in the debate, is to state the truth, draw correct conclusions as to the causes which have produced the results, and then apply a proper remedy. Let us make intelligent inquiry and see why there has been a decadence of the merchant marine of the United States during the last half of a century. There was a time that, without any Government protection whatever, the navigation of the United States challenged the competition of the world and sustained itself. Our shipowners and shipbuilders met and successfully overcame universal competition. It was not sustained by protection and bounties, but by extreme economy, by unshaken perseverance, and by that manly and resolute spirit which relies on itself to protect itself.

Now, in 1851 the foreign steam tonnage of the United States and Great Britain were almost equal, and the prospects were that the United States would overtake her great commercial competitor. Now, why our decadence? When did it begin? How long has it continued? To what causes can we attribute this decadence? How could we have been saved from this great humiliation? The retrograde movement has continued for nearly fifty years. Our exports have increased enormously, but they have been carried by foreign ships. Now, why this condition of affairs? Why is it that the commercial tonnage of nearly every other nation has increased while ours has declined?

They are questions addressed to the intelligence and patriotism of every American citizen. Undoubtedly history teaches us that our gradual decline began when steam was substituted in place of wind and iron in place of wood as a material for the construction of ships. No one can dispute that when wood was the principal article used in the construction of ships, the United States had decidedly the advantage in the cost of material. We all know that when iron was substituted for wood and the steam vessel took the place of the sail vessel, the natural advantage which we enjoyed was swept away. It was soon discovered that the iron ship was in every way superior to the wooden ship and that the steam vessel was to be the vessel of the future. At that time the iron industry of the United States had not been developed—as we were an infant nation—and American shipowners and merchants could not procure the necessary material to compete with England in the construction of steamships, and from the day iron was substituted for wood England had a decided advantage over the United States in the building and operating of ships.

Wise statesmanship demanded that so soon as iron took the place of wood in the construction of ships, and the United States did not have the means and appliances for the construction of iron vessels, then we ought to have availed ourselves of the results of British skill in the construction of steam vessels until the iron industries of our country had been properly developed. On the contrary, by reason of the statutes of our own country, citizens of the United States interested in ocean commerce were absolutely forbidden to take advantage of the superior conditions then existing in England in the construction of steam vessels. We had no idea at that time of the inexhaustible supply of iron in our own country. As said before, our iron industries had not been developed and England had decidedly the advantage of us when iron took the place of wood in the construction of vessels.

Our navigation laws prohibited our citizens from buying steam vessels from England, and we had not discovered the superior advantages which we enjoyed for the construction of iron ships in lieu of wood. Consequently, we could neither buy from nor compete with England, and when steamships took the place of sail vessels, then began and continued the decay of our merchant marine. If our citizens had been permitted to take advantage of the conditions existing in England, the condition of affairs which has confronted us since 1855 would never have existed.

The Revised Statutes of the United States provided that no American citizen shall be allowed to import a foreign-built vessel, in the sense of purchasing, acquiring a registry or title to, or of using her as his own property. I read, as a part of my remarks, the provisions of our navigation laws which, in my opinion, are responsible for the decay of our merchant marine, found on pages 75 to 94, inclusive, of a book by David A. Wells on Our Merchant Marine; How it Rose, Increased, Became Great, Declined, and Decayed; with an Inquiry into the Conditions Essential to its Resuscitation and Future Prosperity:

THE PROVISIONS OF OUR NAVIGATION LAWS.

Having traced the inception and growth of the navigation laws of the United States, let us next inquire into their provisions. They may be, in the main, stated and illustrated as follows:

1. No American citizen is allowed to import a foreign-built vessel, in the sense of purchasing, acquiring a registry or title to, or of using her as his own property; the only other absolute prohibitions of imports on the part of the United States being in respect to counterfeit money and obscene publications or objects. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4132.)

Furthermore, while we are the only people in the world who are forbidden to purchase foreign-built vessels, we freely permit all the world to enter our ports with vessels purchased in any market. Precluded, therefore, by the first provisions of our navigation laws from engaging on equal terms in the carrying trade with foreigners, we wonder and complain that the carrying trade of even our own products has passed from our control.

2. An American vessel ceases to be such if owned in the smallest degree by any person naturalized in the United States who may, after acquiring such ownership, reside "for more than one year in the country in which he originated, or more than two years in any foreign country, unless such person be a consul or other public agent of the United States." (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4134.)

3. If a native-born American citizen, for health, pleasure, or any other purpose, except as a consul of the United States or as a partner or agent in an exclusively American mercantile house, decides to reside ("usually") in some foreign country, any American vessel of which he may be in all or any part owner at once loses its registry and ceases to be entitled to the protection of the flag of the United States, even though the vessel may have been of American construction and have regularly paid taxes in the United States, and the owner himself has no thought of finally relinquishing his American citizenship. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4133.)

To illustrate this provision of our navigation laws, let us suppose Capt. John Smith, not a naturalized citizen, but a native American, is an owner, in all or part, of an American vessel. He becomes afflicted with a disease of the lungs, and, for his health, goes to live in the south of France, on account of the balmy atmosphere that prevails there. The moment that Capt. John thus, under the law, begins to "usually reside" in a foreign country, his vessel is liable to lose its register and the protection of the flag of his country.

4. Every citizen of the United States obtaining a register for an American vessel must make oath "that there is no subject or citizen of any foreign power or State, directly or indirectly, by way of trust or confidence, or otherwise, interested in such vessel or in the profits thereof." (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4142.)

We invite foreign capital to come to us and help build our railroads, work our mines, insure our property, and even buy and carry our Government bonds as investments, but if a single dollar of such capital is used to build an American ship and thereby represents an ownership to any extent of the value received, we declare the ship to be thereby so tainted as to be unworthy of the benefit of American laws.

5. A foreigner may superintend an American factory, run an American railroad, be president of an American college, or hold a commission in the American Army, but he can not command or be an officer of a registered American vessel. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4, 131.)

Notwithstanding this express provision of law it is an indisputable fact that there is hardly an American vessel engaged in foreign trade that has not one or more foreigners employed as officers, and instances, it is said, are not rare of American vessels which have no citizens of the United States on board except the master.

If Capt. John Smith, being a foreigner, took command of an American vessel and falsely swore that he was an American citizen he would "forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000." If one of the owners should take such oath, Captain Smith not being in the district, the vessel would be subject to forfeiture, but no such case of forfeiture has ever occurred. She would, however, not be subject to forfeiture "if Captain Smith had been appointed the lowest officer on the vessel." To be sure, the law requires that "officers of vessels of the United States shall in all cases be citizens of the United States," but there is no penalty whatever imposed on the vessel if they are not.

Many American citizens, on the other hand, undoubtedly own vessels under foreign flags. Some of them transferred their vessels to English colors during the war to escape capture by Confederate war vessels; but there are many who adopt this expedient to obtain cheap ships. They engage a trustworthy English clerk, for instance, and buy the vessel in his name, holding a mortgage for her full value as security.

Some years ago the American consul-general to China, Mr. Seward, in a report to the State Department, stated, as within his personal experience from 1862 to 1875, "that the rigid enforcement of this law would often have forced the owners or agents of those vessels engaged in that part of the world to lay up their ships or transfer them to other flags."

6. No foreign-built vessel, or vessel in any part owned by a subject of a foreign power, can enter a port of the United States, and then go to another domestic port with any new cargo or with any part of her original cargo that has been once unladen, without having previously voyaged to and touched at some other port of some foreign country, under penalty of confiscation. By a compartively recent construction of the law, all direct traffic by sea between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States via Cape Horn or the Cape of Good Hope or across the Isthmus of Panama is held to be of the nature of a coasting trade or voyage in which foreign vessels can not participate. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4347.)

In view of the fact that there has been no attempt in recent times on the part of the English, French, or Dutch Governments to interfere with the transport of merchandise by American ships by the common highway of the ocean between the home ports of these countries and their colonial possessions, this construction of law, not contemplated at the period of its enactment, was regarded by Europe as a bit of very sharp and mean practice on the part of the United States, as it undoubtedly was.

7. An American vessel once sold or transferred to a foreigner can never be bought back again and become American property, not even if the transfer has been the result of capture and condemnation by a foreign power in time of war. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4165.)

8. A vessel under 30 tons can not be used to import anything at any seaboard port. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 3095.)

9. Goods, wares, and merchandise, the produce of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, when imported from countries west of the Cape of Good Hope, are subject to a duty of 10 per cent in addition to the duties imposed on such articles when imported directly. [This provision of law, after an experience of over ninety years, the present Congress (1882) has repealed after January 1, 1883.] This law is interpreted so stringently that old second-hand gunny bags, nearly worn out, do not lose their distinctiveness to an extent sufficient to exempt them from additional duties if they finally come to the United States, in the process of using, from a place west of the Cape of Good Hope. A few years ago a vessel from China, destined to Montreal, Canada, was sent, on arriving, to New York without breaking bulk. It was held that the voyage ceased in Canada and that the new voyage to New York subjected the cargo to an additional 10 per cent. By the original navigation laws (act of 1790) it was provided that the tariff on all articles imported in American vessels shall be less than if imported in foreign vessels. On "Hyson" tea the duty in American vessels was 20 cents per pound; in foreign vessels 45 cents. The present discriminating duties on products of countries east of the Cape of Good Hope, imported indirectly, are a remnant and legacy of these old restrictions. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 2501.)

10. If a vessel of the United States becomes damaged on a foreign voyage, and is repaired in a foreign port, her owner or master must make entry of such repairs at a custom-house of the United States as an import, and pay a duty on the same equal to one-half the cost of the foreign work or material, or 50 per cent ad valorem; and this law extends so far as to include boats that may be obtained at sea from a passing foreign vessel in order to assure the safety of the crew or passengers of the American vessel. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 3114.)

To the credit of former days it should be said that this provision of law was not a part of the original navigation laws of the United States, but was incorporated into them by special statute passed July 18, 1866, entitled "An act to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes." Under the Treasury regulations it is held that, although no part of the proper equipment of a vessel arriving in the United States from a foreign country is liable to duty, such equipment, if considered by the United States revenue officers as redundant, is liable to the payment of duty as a foreign import, although there may be no intent of landing, disposing of, or using such extra equipment, except in connection with the vessel. Thus, for example, when two sets of chains were found on board of a foreign vessel, and one set was held to be all that was necessary, the other set was made chargeable with duty. In another case, where anchors and chains were bonded on importation, and at the same time entered for exportation, and placed on board the vessel as a part of her equipment, it was held by the Treasury that the legal duties should be collected on the same.

11. Foreign vessels losing rudder, sternpost, or breaking shaft and arriving in the United States in distress can not import others to replace these articles here without payment of the duty on the same. In one case of actual occurrence a foreign line of steamers left—during a trip interval—their mooring chains of foreign manufacture on an American wharf. Some overvigilant revenue officer reported the occurrence to the Treasury Department, and it was decided that as the chains were landed, the legal duties should be collected from them as an importation. A foreign vessel can not even land copper sheathing for the sole purpose of being recoppered by American workmen without paying duties on the old copper stripped off and the new copper put on as separate and distinct imports. During the year 1871 the owner of a Dutch vessel entered at Boston, ignorant of the peculiar features of the tariff of the United States in respect to the ocean carrying trade, put on board at the foreign port of clearance a quantity of sheet copper sufficient to sheath the bottom of his vessel, it being intended to have the work done in the United States upon her arrival in order to save time and put the vessel in good order for her return voyage.

The agent, advised of this arrangement, referred the matter to the officials of the Boston custom-house for instructions, only to learn that the new sheathing metal could not be used in the United States as proposed without paying a duty of 45 per cent, while the copper taken off the ship's bottom must also pay a duty of 4 cents per pound as an importation of old copper. The agent signified his willingness to pay the latter and sell the old metal for what it would bring, but requested to be allowed to land the new copper in bond for reexportation, as it would be carried out by the same vessel that brought it in. He was informed, however, that the bond for exportation required for its cancellation a certificate of the landing of the bonded goods in the foreign port for which its export was declared, which could not be obtained if it was entered at the port of destination upon, and not in, the ship carrying it. The consequence was that when the ship discharged her cargo at Boston, she sailed for Halifax, Nova Scotia, carrying her sheathing copper with her, and after having been there coppered by the shipwrights of the British provinces returned in ballast to Boston for her return cargo, all this costly proceeding being cheaper than the payment of 45 per cent duty for the privilege of employing American workmen to take off the old sheathing and put on the new.

12. If a citizen of the United States buys a vessel of foreign build which has been wrecked on our coast, takes her into port, repairs, and renders her again serviceable and seaworthy, he can not make her American property unless it is proved to the satisfaction of the Treasury Department that the repairs put upon such vessel are equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4136.)

The following is an illustration of the working of this statute: In 1871 a citizen of Baltimore purchased a foreign-built vessel wrecked on the American coast and abandoned to the underwriters, and, by spending a large sum in reconstruction, rendered her again seaworthy. He then, being desirous of employing his capital embodied in this instrumentality of trade in the most profitable manner, and assuming that the reconstructed wreck was his lawful property, arranged for an outward cargo, under the flag of the United States. But when the vessel was ready to sail registry was refused by the customs officials on the ground that the vessel was of foreign construction, the sum of the repairs put on the wreck being a little less than three-fourths of the original cost of the vessel; or, in other words, the substance of this decision, which was correct in law, was, that while the citizen, under the laws of the United States, might lawfully buy and acquire title to a wreck, and use it for any purpose other than navigation, as, for example, a dock, a house, or a coal bin, he could not acquire title to it and make it American property lawful to use as a vessel, even after he has paid duties on its old materials as imports, unless he could show that he had expended upon the abandoned construction, for the purpose of restoring it to its original quality for service, a sum nearly equivalent to the cost of building an entirely new vessel. The owner, by law, most mercifully, in such cases is not, however, deprived of the privilege of selling the property to a foreigner.

13. Every vessel belonging to the mercantile marine of the United States engaged in foreign trade—vessels employed in the fisheries excepted—must pay annually into the Federal Treasury a tonnage tax at the rate of 30 cents per ton. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 4219.)

At the commencement of the war there were no tonnage taxes, but, by the act of July, 1862, a tonnage tax of 10 cents per ton was imposed, which was afterwards increased to 30 cents, the present rate. Although there was nothing specific in the recent enactments to warrant it, and American shipping engaged in foreign trade was in such a condition as to demand the kindliest consideration from Government, the Treasury officials, interpreting the statute according to the invariable rule for the benefit of the Government and to the disadvantage of the citizen, were in the habit, up to 1867, of collecting this tax at every entry of a vessel from a foreign port; but by the act of March, 1867, tonnage taxes can now be levied but once a year. On a ship of 1,000 tons the present tax, amounting to $300 per annum, represents the profits or interest, reckoned at 6 per cent, on an invested capital of $5,000, and on a ship of 2,000 tons of $10,000. Mr. F. A. Pike, of Maine, in a speech in the United States House of Representatives, May, 1868, stated that this tax was equivalent, in many instances, to 3 per cent on the market valuation of an inferior class of American vessels employed only in the summer months, and largely owned by his constituents.

Vessels belonging to foreign States between whom and the United States ordinary commercial relations are established pay the same tonnage taxes as American vessels. But if any person not a citizen of the United States becomes an owner to the extent of the merest fraction in a ship of American build, then such ship is not entitled to the privileges accorded to ships owned wholly by foreigners, but must pay on entering a port of the United States a tonnage tax of 60 cents, or double rate, and such vessel at once ceases to be entitled to registry or enrollment as a vessel of the United States. Here, then, we have piled up, as it were, on the top of all other provisions another direct, odius, and stupid discrimination against the employment of foreign capital, provided it should so incline for the developing of the American shipping interest and the employment of labor even in our own dockyards and harbors. Supposing a similar law to be proposed discriminating in like manner against the investment of foreign capital in American railroads, mines, factories, and mercantile enterprises generally, does anyone doubt that the proponent would be at once hooted into contempt? And yet the hypothetical law is no more absurd than the law that actually exists upon the statute book.

Practically the law is a dead letter in the case of ordinary vessels; rigid inquiry as to ownership is rarely or never instituted, and the oath required is regarded and taken as a mere form. In case of incorporated American ocean navigation companies (if there are any such) the president of the company has only to swear to the ownership of any vessel by the company and the Federal officials will not care if the ownership of one or a majority of the shares of the corporation vest in citizens of foreign nationalities, the provision of the statute as with a view of making the law of noneffect being that, in this swearing to ownership by a company, it shall not be necessary to designate the names of the persons comprising such company. The result of this is that any foreigner can purchase shares in any American navigation company and not a vessel of their fleet will thereby lose American registration and American protection; but if a foreigner became the owner of the smallest fraction of a hundred-ton steamboat, plying between Key West and Habana, the registration of such vessel would be immediately vitiated.

If a Sunday school or a picnic party, out on an excursion, happen to come into an American port on a foreign (Canadian) vessel (as was recently the case on one of our upper lakes), for mere temporary and pleasure purposes, the vessel is liable to a tonnage tax; and a libel against the vessel instituted by an overzealous official for its payment was decided by the Treasury Department (August, 1876) to be a proceeding which the Government must enforce.

14. By the act of June 6, 1872, all materials necessary for the construction of vessels built in the United States for the purpose of foreign trade may be imported and used free of duty. But no American vessel receiving the benefit of this act can engage in the American coasting trade for more than two months in any one year without payment of the duties which have been remitted.

15. The several ports of the United States are classified by districts, and in each district one port is designated by statute as a "port of entry" and others as "ports of delivery." All vessels on arriving from a foreign country in any district must first report at the established port of entry and there conform to the details of the custom-house service; after which the vessel, if American, can proceed, if desired, to any port of delivery in the district for the purpose of unloading. But if a vessel be foreign it can only discharge at the port of entry, even though its cargo be imported exclusively for the use of American citizens at a port of delivery. A ship, therefore, may pass almost within hail of the point of destination of its cargo and yet be compelled to unload many miles away, thus necessitating reshipping and repeated handling at much additional expense. Thus the customs district of Boston and Charlestown comprises only one port of entry—Boston—while Cambridge, Medford,

Hingham, Cohasset, etc., are all ports of delivery only. If a foreign vessel arrives from abroad with a cargo of hemp for Hingham, instead of proceeding direct to the wharf in that port, she must first sail right by, enter herself and cargo in Boston, and then unload at a Boston wharf, when the goods may be reshipped by packet or railroad for Hingham. Again, if a foreign vessel is loaded with a cargo for Saybrook, a port of delivery at the mouth of the Connecticut River, she must pass directly by her destination and proceed 40 miles up the river, often with difficulty navigable, to Middletown, the port of entry for the district, and there discharge and provide for the reconveyance of her cargo by some other method of transportatian to the place where it is wanted.

The following will also illustrate in some degree the manner in which the navigation laws of the United States have been executed:

All vessels of the United States engaged in the coasting trade are required to be enrolled and licensed, and vessels engaging in trade and transportation without previously procuring such enrollment or license are liable to seizure and heavy penalties. On the east bank of the Hudson, in the city of Troy, State of New York, there are extensive ironworks, the coal and ore supplies for which are largely transported over the Erie and Champlain canals. Boats coming down these canals, loaded with such supplies, are locked into the Hudson at West Troy, a point on the west bank nearly opposite to the furnaces; then, after crossing the river, delivering their freight, and recrossing, reenter the canal, and return on their route for another similar cargo. Some years ago the officials of the United States Treasury Department decided that under our navigation laws this temporary entry of boats from the canals into the Hudson for the purpose of delivering cargo, and their subsequent return into the canal, constituted a coasting voyage, for the engaging in which it was obligatory on the owners of the canal boats to have previously taken out a license. Of course the owners, not anticipating any such interpretation of the law, had not provided themselves with licenses; but this, nevertheless, did not prevent a large number of boats from being seized and libeled for violation of the navigation laws, from which they were only released after expensive and annoying litigation and the payment of considerable sums in the way of costs or penalties.

Take another illustration of more recent date: It has of late years been customary for merchants and shippers on our Northern lakes to buy and use for transporting grain large barges or hulks built in Canada, and as such constructions are not capable of moving or navigating except as they are towed, and are not provided with the usual appurtenances for navigation, they have not been regarded as subject to the provisions of our navigation laws relative to foreign vessels. During the summer of 1880, however, the collector of the port of Erie, Pa., on Lake Erie, called the attention of the Treasury Department to the circumstance that a certain barge, The William H. Vosburg, had been guilty of the heinous offense of hoisting a sail on its apology for a mast—whether for the sake of avoiding a dangerous rock or a lee shore was not stated—and asked for instructions. The Department promptly replied "that the only condition upon which that barge could continue to navigate those waters was to hoist her sails temporarily; any attempt to keep her canvas up beyond that would get her into trouble. Being Canadian built she could not be enrolled, and, by consequence, the permanent use of sail upon her would entail forfeiture of cargoes and the payment of double tonnage tax at every point of arrival." The official correspondence does not inform us what the result was; but it is safe to presume the little barge had to take down her little sail, as otherwise she would have been simply taxed out of existence, in accordance with the statutes in such cases made and provided.

In August, 1875, the Canadian yacht Oriole, of less than 50 tons burden, owned in Toronto, but belonging to the International Yacht Club, and also to the Yacht Club of Detroit, arrived in Chicago from Toronto with a pleasure party of seven gentlemen for the purpose of participating, on invitation of the Chicago Yacht Club, in a regatta at the latter port, having previously made a tour of the lakes, stopping at various points of interest, and taking on board on several occasions pleasure parties of ladies and gentlemen, who were entertained in part by transportation from port to port. On arrival at Chicago the Oriole was complained of to the Treasury Department as having violated the navigation laws of the United States, which forbid foreign vessels from participating in the coasting trade and from conveying passengers from one American port to another; and proceedings looking to seizure and confiscation were contemplated.

This penalty the Secretary of the Treasury graciously remitted, inasmuch as there was evidently no intent on the part of the owners of the Oriole to violate the law; but owing to the absence of proper papers showing the nationality and occupation of the yacht, although these were well known, the privilege of exemption from tonnage taxes accorded by law to foreign pleasure yachts was not granted. The Chicago Yacht Club therefore paid on account of their guests, into the Treasury of the United States, the sum of $15, which doubtless helped to liquidate the public debt; while the owners of the Oriole, not knowing what other legal difficulties they might encounter from a prolonged sojourn, slipped out of port in the early morning and returned home as soon as practicable.

We are accustomed, as we read of the sumptuary laws and arbitrary restrictions on commercial and personal freedom in years long passed, to congratulate ourselves, as it were, involuntarily, that we live on a higher and different plane, and that among nations calling themselves civilized and enlightened such things are no longer possible. It would be difficult, however, to find in any record of past experience more absurdities and iniquities than are embodied in the so-called navigation laws of the United States at present existing and in the details of their administration during the last quarter of a century. And yet it was in respect to these same laws that a convention of one of the great political parties, held in Maine in August, 1877, unanimously resolved that "enacted in the infancy of the Republic, they have proved their wisdom by long and varied experience. They embody the mature judgment of three generations of commercial men. Any radical change in these laws would be detrimental to the highest interests of American commerce and a damaging blow to the national independence of the country."

In answer to the questions which must naturally suggest themselves to every thoughtful mind—How is it that such a code of laws, which no other civilized country would permit to remain upon their statute books, can at this period of the nineteenth century be maintained and defended in the United States; and How happened it that a convention of presumably more than average intelligence could make public declaration of such nonsense and untruth as were embodied in the resolutions of the Maine convention above quoted?—it may be said that upon no one public matter have the American people, until within a very recent period, been so little acquainted as in respect to our commercial laws and regulations. Scattered through statute enactments for over ninety years, and with court and Treasury interpretations for the same period forming a part of the law and all of its administration, though not embodied in the statute, it has not been an easy matter for even those engaged in the business of law and lawmaking to know what the navigation laws actually were; and it is exceedingly doubtful whether in the convention referred to there was one single man that had any clear and definite knowledge of how these laws originated, what they embody, and what is the sphere of their influence.

And to-day, notwithstanding recent discussions of their nature, it is doubtful whether, out of the 378 members of Congress, as many as 50 can at once define the difference between a vessel "enrolled" and a vessel "registered," or if any of the officials of the customs service or Treasury Department can at once and correctly tell in detail how to transfer the license of a merchant ship or pleasure yacht from one collection district of the United States to another.[1] And it is further curious to note that not a single writer or speaker of note who within recent years has undertaken to advocate the navigation laws of the United States or oppose their repeal or essential modification—possibly from lack of knowledge or fear lest a full exposition would of itself defeat and neutralize his argument—has ever ventured to tell his readers or hearers what the code really embraces or provides for in detail.

Other nations saw the advantages which England enjoyed; and, with the exception of the United States, granted permission to their own citizens to buy and use such ships constructed of iron as could be obtained in the cheapest markets of the world. Other nations said to their citizens, if England can build cheaper and better iron ships for ocean commerce than you can yourselves, and will furnish them to you on as favorable terms as granted to her own citizens, your government will interpose no obstacles to your so doing. Other nations recognize that iron vessels had superseded sail vessels and gave to their citizens the right to purchase steam vessels wherever they could be obtained on the best terms possible; and those governments which permitted their citizens to act without restraint have never had any such results as the United States has experienced.

In my opinion the cause of the decay of our merchant marine has been clearly and forcibly set forth by Mr. Wells, from whom I have quoted liberally. Under our navigation laws we have permitted other nations to go into the cheapest and best markets and buy ships and engage in carrying our foreign commerce, while we have denied to our own citizens this same privilege. Take, for instance, Germany and Norway. They have gone to England and purchased ships in abundance, and have not only maintained but have largely increased their steam tonnage, and have taken away a large percentage of the exports and imports carried in vessels of the United States. Norway gives no subsidy, and she pays less than $150,000 per year for the transportation of her mail, and her steam tonnage has increased during the last quarter of a century nearly 1,500 per cent.

If Germany and Norway had pursued the policy followed by us as a nation they would have destroyed, or at least seriously reduced, the tonnage of imports and exports carried in their own vessels; but these nations realized the advantage which England enjoyed in the production of iron at the time iron ships took the place of wood, and immediately availed themselves of the privilege of purchasing the iron ships in those markets where these ships could be obtained on the best terms possible. These, summed up, constitute the reasons of the continued growth of the merchant marine of these nations; and a similar policy pursued on our part would have produced most gratifying results. Happily, Mr. President, we can now congratulate ourselves that natural conditions have changed the material out of which ships are constructed. Both iron and steel can be obtained in the United States as cheaply as in any country in the world and, regardless of restricted navigation laws, we will become at no distant day the shipbuilding nation of the world. It can be substantiated by unquestionable evidence that our shipyards on both the Atlantic and Pacific are now enjoying a degree of prosperity and a period of activity in business unparalleled in the history of our country. I am informed, Mr. President, that it will take these shipyards from three to five years to comply with and fulfill the contracts now on hand for the building and equipping of new ships.

Our great virgin forests, coupled with our inexhaustible supply of iron, give us the best and cheapest material in the world for shipbuilding. Our ingenious and skillful artisans, with the superior advantage which we enjoy in material, enable Americans to construct cheaper and better ships than any nation in the world, and we have at last begun to realize these superior advantages which we enjoy. When steamships took the place of sail vessels and iron took the place of wood in the construction of ships, we had not discovered the wonderful natural advantages which we enjoyed in the construction of iron ships. Our iron industries were in their infancy, but the growth and development of this industry within the United States has been unprecedented. I hold in my hand an article in Cassier's Magazine, written by Mr. John Fritz, giving an account of the development of iron manufactures in the United States during the last seventy-five years.

He gives the production of pig iron in the United States from 1810 to 1898. In 1810 we produced only 53,908 tons pig iron; in 1820, only 20,000 tons; in 1856, only 788,515 tons; in 1883 we produced 4,595,510 tons pig iron, and in 1898 we produced 11,773,934 tons. I insert, as a part of my remarks, the table from this article showing the total production of pig iron from 1810 to 1898, that we may get a proper conception of the quantity and quality of material we have at our doors for the construction of ships. No country in the world furnishes a larger quantity and a better quality of both wood and iron for the construction of ships. I do not suppose any intelligent man will contend that God charged more for growing our forests and for putting our iron in the earth on American soil than he did in the soil of Europe. It requires no argument to sustain the proposition that if we have the quantity and quality of raw material for the construction of ships and can transform it into a manufactured article as cheaply as other nations, then we ought to be able to compete with any other nation in the world in the construction of ships.

[1] It required some of the best legal talent in the city of New York, a few years since, to effect this result in the case of a pleasure yacht, and the owner of the yacht writes that although he has done his best and incurred considerable expense and no end of trouble to find out the law and comply with it, he is in daily expectation of a visit from the revenue officials of the United States and a notification of a fine for some violation of the statutes.

As to the cost of the construction of ships in the United States, in comparison with England, I quote from the minority report of the House committee a statement made by Mr. W. I. Babcock. This statement is found in an article written by Mr. Charles E. Naylor in 1898, and is as follows:

The ability not only to build good ships but to build them as cheaply as any competing nation can is one of the prime essentials, and it is therefore a great pleasure to be able to say that it is my deliberate opinion, after a careful inspection of the various shipyards thrown open to us, that, given work enough to keep our yards (meaning the United States) occupied all the time, our larger and more modern shipyards could build ships and make money at English prices, and this notwithstanding the fact that the wages paid on the Clyde—taken from an official list I obtained in Glasgow—average about 55½ per cent of the wages we pay. He said: "This is due to the much greater use of labor-saving machinery in our yards, to their better arrangement for handling material, to, in many respects, better tools, and, last, by no means least, to the fact that we manage our own business, that the union and walking delegate are not all-powerful with us, that master and man work together in America with mutual respect and esteem, that our mechanics are better and brighter workmen, more intelligent, and take more pride in their work."

Mr. HANNA. May I interrupt the Senator to ask from whom he is quoting?

Mr. CLAY. I have been quoting from Mr. Babcock.

Mr. HANNA. Who is he? The Senator knows him?

Mr. CLAY. No, sir. I said he was an engineer.

Mr. HANNA. Where is he from?

Mr. CLAY. I should have said the article I just read was written by Mr. Naylor.

Mr. HANNA. Is he a citizen of the United States?

Mr. CLAY. Yes——

Mr. HANNA. I am more anxious about the other gentleman.

Mr. CLAY. I was quoting from Mr. Naylor.

Mr. HANNA. Oh!

Mr. CLAY. As has been well said heretofore, we all know that the pendulum of advantage which has swung so long in favor of England is swinging our way at last. The changed conditions in the production of iron and steel, now produced more cheaply in the United States than anywhere else in the world, will enable us to build ships more cheaply than they can be built in England. Many years ago Mr. John Roach and Mr. Charles H. Cramp, two of our greatest shipbuilders, testified before a committee from the House of Representatives investigating the cause of the decline of our shipping interest, that if Congress would take off the duties from American iron, reducing it to the price of foreign iron, then we are prepared to compete with foreign shipbuilders.

The labor question is misstated. We are prepared to meet that difficulty and to ask no further legislation on the subject. Congress began the policy of free material for shipbuilding for the foreign trade in 1872 and has steadily pursued and expanded that policy. We all know that by sections 7 and 8 of the tariff act of 1894, which were repeated in sections 12 and 13 of the tariff act of 1897, the free list was extended so as to include all materials for the construction of ships. We all know that articles of domestic production, when used as supplies for vessels of the United States, are exempted from internal-revenue taxes. In view of these special favors enjoyed by the shipowners, is it just and right that they should continue to clamor for additional assistance at the expense of the public Treasury? I hold in my hand the North American Review of 1892, containing an article written in January of that year by Mr. Charles H. Cramp, one of our largest shipbuilders, in which he discussed the cost of building and maintaining ships in the United States in comparison with foreign-built ships. I quote his exact language, which is as follows:

The proper form in which to put the question is, Can you build a ship to do the work of the City of New York, or the Majestic, or the Columbia, in all respects, for the same cost? To that question I would reply: Yes, or within as small a margin as would be likely to prevail in a similar case between any two British shipyards. It is the fact that the first cost of ships is not only not a prime factor, but it is not even a serious factor in any competition that may occur between this country and Great Britain for a share of the traffic of the ocean. American shipyards have built or are building about 40 naval vessels of numerous rates and types, all of the very highest and most effective class in the world, and this development has been crowded into a space of about seven years. The disparity of cost of naval ships between our yards and those of Great Britain, ton for ton, gun for gun, and performance for performance, has dwindled in seven years until, in the case of the three latest battle ships, the margin between our classes and those of similar construction abroad may be expressed by a very small figure. If the current policy of construction be pursued for another decade (1902), coupled with a vigorous and persistent execution of the measures recently enacted in behalf of the merchant marine, the question which forms the subject of this paper will be asked no more, unless, indeed, its point should be reversed and Englishmen be asking one another, Can we build ships as economically as they can in the United States?

Mr. Cramp predicted that by the year 1902 England and Englishmen would be asking and debating the question, How can we build ships as cheaply as the United States? In connection with the line of argument which I am now pursuing, pointing out the wonderful progress we are now making in the construction of ships, and pointing out the further fact that ships can be built as cheaply in this country as in England, I read part of an article published in The Statist, London, October 7, 1899, which is as follows:

But it is not realized in this country—

how much iron shipbuilding has already developed in the United States under the stimulus of the war. Of course, we all know how America took the lead in the good old days of wooden ships, but all do not realize how vigorous an infant now is the iron shipbuilding industry there. The Government's building yards have grown enormously since the United States began, in 1894, to build her own war ships.

At the present time there are between 40 and 50 steel vessels of various classes in the process of construction for the United States Navy in no fewer than 16 different yards, of which there are 3 on the Pacific coast. These vessels range from first-class battle ships to small torpedo boats, and all the material till now has been of American manufacture, though of late some purchases have had to be made of Great Britain. The American official returns are difficult to compare with our own, because the American fiscal year ends June 30; but in the last fiscal year the amount of steel tonnage alone, built in the United States, was 134,000 tons. In the present fiscal year the tonnage will be at least doubled, and may reach 300,000 tons. Now, this means both great and rapid development. Besides the naval work we have mentioned, every shipyard in the United States is reported to be full of merchant work, and is extending its area. Camden, N. J., is putting up an entirely new establishment, which when completed will rank as the largest building yard on the Atlantic coast. This new yard will cover an area of 125 acres; it will be adapted to building first-class war ships of the largest size, and it will have a graving dock 800 feet long for the reception of ocean liners, of which a specialty is to be made.

All the Atlantic shipyards are now engaged on naval-construction work, as well as the repair work at the three Government yards at Norfolk, Va., Philadelphia, and Brooklyn. The Norfolk yard is an old establishment, dating back to the days of wooden frigates, and during the civil war it was the object of severe contention between the rival forces. It has been reconstructed. It has been reconstructed on modern lines, and is now adapted to the construction of war ships of the latest type, though it has not been able to make much of some of the damaged vessels captured from the Spaniards. The Norfolk yard is, however, chiefly used for repair purposes; and, indeed, there has been comparatively little building in any of the Government yards of late years, Congress seeming to prefer to encourage private enterprises by letting out all new work on contract. There is little doubt that this has had material effect in attracting capital to and stimulating development in the shipbuilding industry within the last year or two; and it is to be remembered that the private yards are not subject to the wage and labor conditions applied by Congress to the Government establishments, though an effort was made last Congress to make them applicable to all Government work, wherever done.

The Philadelphia (League Island) yard has also been used almost exclusively for repairs, but it is declared to be an ideal place for building, and will be so utilized in the future. At the Brooklyn yard are the largest dry docks in the country, though at League Island a still larger one is in course of construction under a vote of last Congress.

Meanwhile, however, all the additions to the United States Navy are being made by private builders under Government inspection, and fifty vessels of all sorts is a large order. Pending the completion of the Camden yard, the largest shipbuilding establishments now in operation are those of the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, Virginia, of the Cramp Company, at Philadelphia, and of the Harlan-Hollingsworth Company, at Wilmington. But another large yard is being brought into operation on the Pacific coast, at Seattle, in the State of Washington, for the building of steamers for the Pacific trade. The obstacle to the development on the Pacific coast is, of course, the long carriage on material, the nearest base of supply for which is in Chicago.

Notwithstanding this difficulty, shipbuilding is developing steadily there. Two battle ships are now being built in the San Francisco yard which turned out the famous Oregon, and which has also built war ships for Japan. A large fleet of merchant vessels is wanted for the Pacific, and it is found cheaper to build them of deported material on the Pacific coast than to build them on the Atlantic and send the ships around Cape Horn. At San Francisco, as well as at the new yard at Seattle, quite a number of high-class large ocean steamers for the Pacific trade are being built—the largest merchant steamers, we believe, as yet built in the States.

The United States Commissioner of Navigation recently estimated, whilst gathering material for his annual report, that not fewer than 1,000 vessels were added to the American register during the last fiscal year, including, of course, vessels purchased from foreigners and vessels intended for the inland waters only. We can not yet tell how much of that tonnage comes into the ocean carrying trade, but the Commissioner of Navigation has prepared tables to show the effect which the proposed shipping legislation will have upon shipping, on the assumption that the subsidies will merely "offset" the higher cost of construction and operation in the United States. He also regards the subsidies as an "offset" to payments under British mail contracts, which is a fallacy, for under our mail contracts we merely pay for services rendered—that is to say, the so-called mail subsidies are just freightage for goods carried. Of more importance, to our mind, than the subsidies proposed by Senator HANNA is the fact that the cost of production of iron and steel in the future promises to be considerably lower in the United States than in this country. We do not refer to present conditions, which are abnormal, but to the conditions which will prevail when the present excitement has abated.

The question that concerns us, with an abundance of cheap steel and iron in the United States, is, How are we in the future to compete with that nation in the building of ships? Well may England be alarmed about the situation, for an examination of our exports, consisting of material in the construction of ships, points unerringly to the conclusion that we are to-day producing iron and steel cheaper than any country in the world. In an article written by Mr. George Wenlersse, taken from the report of the House committee, found in Consular Reports, March 3, 1900, he truthfully says:

Gradually the Americans are pushing their way into the British colonies. The last railroad built in India has American rails. American manufacturers export their iron and motors, their machinery and galvanic wires, to Cape Colony. Egypt, too, has Philadelphia bridge builders on the scene. Three hundred railroad coaches have found their way from Jersey City into the land of the Pharaohs, and electrical tramways are forged in the foundries of Pittsburg to connect Cairo with the Pyramids. Even Europe is not safe against the invasion of American iron and steel. Russia, France, Germany, and Italy must pay tribute. England herself buys American locomotives, steel rails, railroad coaches, and even coal from the United States. Sheffield, England, the home of the steel industry, has been dethroned by Pittsburg. It would be frivolity to remain indifferent to the expansion of this leviathan people.

In the same article the writer makes this striking statement:

To-day ships may be built at Bath, San Francisco, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Chester, and Newport News as cheaply as anywhere in the world.

The argument presented by the majority of the committee that the American shipowners pay better wages to labor can be easily answered. We know previous to 1855, when American ships competed successfully with British ships in our foreign-carrying trade, we then paid better wages to our sailors than the English paid. Still we successfully met the keen competition of our rivals. An examination into the scale of wages paid by us, in comparison with British wages, coupled with the food and comforts of the sailors of both nations, show a decided advantage to our sailors. While this is true, the nutritious food and superior treatment received by our sailors enable them to do much more efficient work than the British sailors perform. It is estimated that our sailors do from 17 to 28 per cent more work than British sailors.

Another illustration of the wonderful progress we have made in the iron industry may be found by a careful examination of both our imports and exports of pig iron during the last twenty years. In 1880 21¼ per cent of the pig iron consumed in the United States came from foreign countries; in 1882 10.64 per cent of the pig iron used by us as a nation came from foreign countries; in 1885 only 3.57 per cent of the pig iron used by us came from foreign countries; in 1891 less than 1 per cent of the pig iron consumed by the United States came from foreign countries, and in 1899 we produced more than 11,000,000 tons of pig iron, and of the amount consumed by us only one-fifth of 1 per cent came from foreign countries. We exported of domestic iron and steel railroad bars in 1880 only 1,008 tons; in 1882, 3,351 tons; in 1885, 7,956 tons; in 1890, 10,236 tons; in 1893, 15,698 tons, and in 1899, 277,885 tons. There was an increase from 1893 to 1899, a period of six years, of over 1,500 per cent. (See Statistical Abstract, 1899, page 362.)

The Commissioner of Navigation, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, says that the last fiscal year has been not only the most prosperous known to American shipping interests during recent years, but measured by absolute, not relative, statistical standards, it has been the most notable year in the history of American shipping. He tells us that the returns for the first quarter of the current fiscal year and reports on vessels under construction or contract give promise that the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, will surpass even the remarkable record of the fiscal year just closed. He tells us that our total documentary tonnage on June 30, 1900, comprised 23,333 vessels of 5,164,839 gross tons, and that this total has been exceeded but three times in our history, and that if the tonnage of our canal boats and barges was included the actual tonnage of the United States for last year was unquestionably greater than ever before in our history. I also insert, as a part of my remarks, on page 25 of his last report, the steam vessels built in the United States from 1891 to 1900.

We know that Congress has been most liberal in making appropriations to enlarge our Navy. This we all approve. We increased the appropriations from $15,000,000 to $65,000,000 in a period of three years; and it is estimated that the total expenditures of the Navy Department, including the cost of construction of new ships, for the year 1902 will be $87,172,630.06. So it can not be said that we are likely to need auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use. This bill is not designed for any such purposes. Private parties, anxious to advance their own interests, are the real beneficiaries under its provisions. Before I conclude my remarks I desire again to call attention to another feature of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, who seems to be the special champion of the measure we have under consideration. On page 31 of that report he gives us the price of steel plate used for ships, both in the United States and Great Britain, for 1899, which I desire to insert as a part of my remarks:

He tells us in this report that in 1898 we exported to Great Britain some of the steel plates for the British steamship Oceanic, the largest vessel afloat, and that during the past summer American steel ship plates have been quoted in British markets, though ocean freights have been $5 and, in some instances, more. While he says special causes have, of course, been at work in both countries to produce the marked fluctuations in the prices of steel ship plates, it is doubtless within bounds to assert for the future, under normal conditions, the price of steel ship plates in the United States will usually be lower than in Great Britain.

But, Mr. President, thus far I have endeavored to point out the inequalities and favoritism running through the entire measure, but my objections to such legislation go still further; because, in my opinion, the bill is vicious in principle, and bounties have always been repugnant to the spirit of our free institutions. The $9,000,000 donated to a certain class of shipowners is necessarily taken from the entire people by taxation. If the shipowner is entitled to a bounty to aid him in his private business, can not the farmer, with equal justice, demand a bounty from the public Treasury on his corn, his wheat, cotton, or other products?

Can not we, with as much propriety, take from the public Treasury 20 cents a bushel for all grain raised by the farmer and donate it as a bounty, and with equal consistency, as we can make this donation to the shipowners? It is manifestly unequal and unjust to tax farmers, shoemakers, carpenters, blacksmiths, masons, dairymen, miners, and railroad men to pay a bounty to shipowners for every mile they sail upon the sea, unless you go into the public Treasury and give a bounty to all forms of industry, which is impossible. In the United States, with our free institutions, the people have a right to expect that all legislation will tend to equalize the conditions of human life. This bill, if enacted into law, will tend to build up a moneyed aristocracy and to reproduce in the United States the method of government which has for centuries controlled Europe. Our Republic has always stood for equality of rights and against discriminating legislation.

History teaches us that the governments of Europe seek through unjust legislation to build up great estates and have little regard for the masses. Is it possible that we have arrived at a period in our history when we are willing to forsake that spirit of justice and equality which has characterized our Republic in the past and follow in the footsteps of the monarchs of Europe? We are constantly reminded, when we undertake to legislate for the people of the United States, that we are justified in pursuing a certain line of policy because England has pursued such a policy.

In the argument thus advanced we have already been told that England subsidizes ships. She subsidizes lines of ships connected with her outlying possessions just as we pay star lines of our postal system to deliver mail within our territorial limits. There is a difference between our system of government and England and a difference between our territorial possessions. England's territorial possessions extend around the globe, and she needs speedy and prompt postal communication with her outlying possessions. The United States, notwithstanding the fact that we have made departure from the teachings of our fathers, are still a compact nation with few outlying possessions.

An examination of the expenditures of foreign nations for merchant shipping will show that the amounts contributed by each are for the purposes of paying for carrying the mail. I insert as a part of my remarks the marked tables of the report of the Commissioner of Navigation for 1899, showing the amounts contributed by foreign nations and for what purposes used. These tables will be found on pages 24 and 25 of the Report of the Commissioner of Navigation.

EXPENDITURES BY FOREIGN NATIONS FOR MERCHANT SHIPPING.

The following table shows the current annual expenditures of the maritime nations of Europe and Japan, so far as they have been ascertained, in behalf of their respective merchant navies. The latest available official reports, reports of steamship companies and mail contracts, copies of which are on file in the Bureau, have been used. The statement is not complete, but it is believed to be accurate as far as it professes to go. Complete figures for the current year would probably increase the total of $26,355,641. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899, the United States paid for ocean mails to American vessels $998,211, and to foreign vessels $487,038, of which the British Cunard and White Star lines received $245,620 and the North German Lloyd $157,057.

[1] Government report or statute. [2] Steamship report or contract. [3] Estimate.

The last few years Providence has blessed us with plentiful crops, bountiful harvests, and in consequence almost unparalleled commercial activity. Congress meets surrounded with these favorable conditions. Let us not make this occasion the beginning of a carnival for extravagance and the profligate and shameful squandering of public money. Let us not make it the beginning of a policy founded on favoritism in legislation and with subsidies to favored classes. Let us not crush the farmer, the artisan, or the plowman by bounties granted to others by exactions upon them. These classes are entitled to as much consideration at the hands of the Government as the shipowners. If the shipowner, by the contribution of the taxpayers, is to enlarge his business and increase his profits, why is not the cotton and grain grower entitled to equal consideration?

Is the financial success of one class of our people of greater concern than that of another? What special service has the shipowner conferred upon his country that he should have the right to tax the farmer, the merchant, or the laborer to build up his private business and to enhance his private fortune? The principles of this bill are unjust, undemocratic, and absolutely indefensible. The Democratic party stands for a government that shall protect all, and grant favors to none. In the history of our country we have seen political parties rise and fall, and we can not always point out the forces that control results. No political party can afford to forsake principle in order to obtain victory. The Democratic party will remain true to the principles of our Government, and will rally around its standard the aspirations and hopes of all men who love liberty and justice. The Democratic party sympathizes with all men in the hard struggles of life, and will never oppress one class to enrich another. The party stands for absolute justice, equality of rights, economical and honest government, and equal opportunities for all men under and before the law.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, it had been my intention to make a few remarks on the subsidy bill this afternoon, but the hour is late. On Thursday I shall ask unanimous consent to take up the matter immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, so that I may conclude before 3 o'clock.

Mr. TELLER. I do not wish to object, but there is a special order for Thursday.

Mr. HANNA. I thought I could conclude before 3 o'clock if I could be permitted by unanimous consent to commence at the time indicated.

Mr. TELLER. I will not make any objection.

Mr. HANNA. I shall not commence if there will not be time to conclude.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OSCAR L. BOOZ.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[House Report No. 2018, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 307, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Amend the resolution to read as follows:

"Whereas it is alleged in newspapers of the United States that Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, Pa., formerly a cadet at the United States Military Academy at Westpoint, died at his home from injuries purporting to have been the result of hazing inflicted upon him by certain unknown cadets of the said Military Academy; and

"Whereas the Secretary of War is now making investigation of the facts:

"Resolved, That said Secretary be requested to report the result of such investigation to the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as he may see fit to make."

The report of the Secretary of War, together with the report of the Superintendent of the Military Academy, is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas it is a matter of general knowledge, published in many reputable daily newspapers of the United States, that Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol Pa., formerly a cadet at the United States Military Academy at Westpoint, died at his home from injuries purporting to have been the result of hazing inflicted upon him by certain unknown cadets of the said Military Academy: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be made a searching investigation of the circumstances attending the said hazing of Oscar L. Booz while a cadet at the Military Academy at Westpoint, and to report the result of such investigation to the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as he may care to make by which the practice of hazing may be stopped.

RESOLUTION.

Whereas it is alleged in newspapers of the United States that Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, Pa., formerly a cadet at the United States Military Academy at Westpoint, died at his home from injuries purporting to have been the result of hazing inflicted upon him by certain unknown cadets of the said Military Academy; and

Whereas the Secretary of War is now making investigation of the facts:

Resolved, That said Secretary be requested to report the result of such investigation to the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as he may see fit to make.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the report from the Secretary of War.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 10, 1900.

SIR: I return herewith House resolution No. 307, relating to certain alleged hazing of former Cadet Oscar L. Booz in the Military Academy at Westpoint, referred to me to-day for remark.

The newspaper articles which, I suppose, are referred to in the resolution were immediately, upon coming to the notice of the Department, referred to the Superintendent of the Military Academy, who has already made and completed a searching investigation and has reported the results to the Department to-day. The report is transmitted herewith.

Pursuant to the request with which this report closes, I have made the following order:

"A board of officers composed of Maj. Gen. John R. Brooke, Col. George L. Gillespie, and Lieut. Col. John W. Clous is hereby convened to meet at Westpoint on the 15th of the present month, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to inquire into and report upon the alleged treatment of former cadet Oscar L. Booz at the Military Academy, and upon the measures taken to prevent such treatment of new cadets at the Academy, and the extent to which new cadets are now subject to such treatment. The board will have authority to visit such places as may be necessary for a complete ascertainment of the facts, including the home of the late Oscar L. Booz."

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT, Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Statement of the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy in regard to Oscar L. Booz and charges made in the public press of his alleged ill treatment while he was a cadet at the Military Academy.

I have no personal knowledge of Cadet Booz, he having left the Military Academy October 4, 1898, shortly after I assumed the duties of Superintendent, September 20, 1898. Any ill treatment he may have received at the hands of older cadets must have occurred after his admission and during the summer encampment, which ended August 28, 1898.

The following is Cadet Booz's official record: Admitted to the Military Academy from the Seventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania June 20, 1898; submitted his resignation as a cadet September 28, 1898; left the Academy October 4, 1898, having been granted leave of absence pending acceptance of resignation by the War Department; cause of resignation recorded as weak eyes; resignation accepted by War Department to date October 31, 1898. Cadet Booz was on sick report July 30, 1898, and was excused by surgeon from drill for that day on account of acute diarrhea. He was at no other time on sick report. His recorded demerit from July 15 (when demerits of new cadets commence to count) to October 5, 1898, is 38. In his studies his total mark in English is proficient; in mathematics it is deficient.

From the nature of the assertions in this case, I have been obliged to seek information by instituting a general inquiry, and I have accordingly made a careful and thorough inquiry among officers and cadets to ascertain all possible facts concerning Cadet Booz's career at the Academy. Officers who were on duty here at the time have, with but one exception, no distinct recollection of him, and there appears to be nothing, beyond what his record shows, to have specially impressed his individuality upon any of them. Cadets have freely come forward to give all the information in their possession.

Among them Cadet Booz was known by the members of the present first and second classes, the latter being his own class. I have carefully questioned the cadets of both classes who have been able in any way to give light on the matter. The answers of all have been free, frank, full, and free from the slightest apparent desire to hold in reserve anything pertaining to the inquiry. As the result of this inquiry, I am convinced that until Saturday, August 6, 1898, there occurred nothing to draw the special attention of older cadets to Cadet Booz, and I can find nothing to show that he was in any way treated differently from his classmates, or cruelly or violently hazed.

On the day mentioned he engaged in a fist fight with a cadet of the then third class, now present here in the first class. This fight appears to have had its origin as follows: On August 2 Cadet Booz was a member of the cadet guard, and about 10 p. m. was on post as a sentinel on post No. 5, about the cadet encampment. Several other cadets in the vicinity noticed that he was not walking his post as his orders required. They claim they cautioned him about the matter and advised him what he should do. Cadet Booz, however, they say, did not act on the advice they gave him, but replied in a way to incense them, and the fight followed at the first opportunity thereafter—the next Saturday. The fight was witnessed by six cadets, all of whom are at the Academy now, four being in the first class, and two, classmates of Cadet Booz, in the second class. These latter state that Cadet Booz invited them to attend the fight, and that he went to it and engaged in it willingly, and in the beginning was the aggressor.

All these witnesses unite in stating the encounter was of short duration, of little severity, and that Cadet Booz was in no way injured in it, and bore away no preceptible marks of having been in a fight. The cadet with whom he fought was not an adept in fighting and had not before engaged in a fight. Another cadet, who had occasion to speak to Cadet Booz on his return to camp immediately after the affair, has stated to me that beyond a red mark below one eye Cadet Booz showed no appearance of having been engaged in a fight, and that he laughed when the matter was referred to. The words of these cadets, which I believe are worthy of full credence, regarding the injury done Cadet Booz in the fight are corroborated by the absence of his name from the sick report that day or any subsequent day, where it surely would have appeared had he suffered injury or been disfigured to any extent to be noticed by the officer under whose almost constant observation new cadets are held. In view of the above I believe that the charge so often reiterated that "Cadet Booz was dragged out and made to fight, and was brutally pounded by an older and stronger cadet" is false and unfounded.

The additional specific charge that after the fight a fluid was poured down Cadet Booz's throat, from the effect of which he was afterwards a sufferer, is earnestly denied by all the witnesses of the fight. The charge, to one familiar with cadet customs, is an absurd one. I do not hesitate to assert that it is untrue.

Immediately following the encounter referred to, I find that Cadet Booz fell into the contempt of his fellow-cadets, in consequence of a report which gained circulation among them that he had been guilty of an untruth and a feeling that he had displayed but little spirit in his fight. The origin of the former report was as follows: When Cadet Booz was on guard on August 2 he was reported by the cadet corporal of his relief for failing to take his post properly when posted as a sentinel.

In a written explanation to the commandant of cadets, Cadet Booz denied the correctness of the report given him. The cadet corporal, becoming aware of this denial and finding it to be false, consulted the president of the first class as to the best action to take in the matter. It was decided between them that instead of reporting to the commandant of cadets that Cadet Booz had told an untruth, which, if found to be the case, would have led to his dismissal, he was to be admonished regarding his action and warned that a recurrence of it would not be tolerated. It was this question of Cadet Booz's veracity which became known to the cadets, with the result as stated, as is always the case in the corps of cadets in such matters. In consequence of this position with older cadets he was not hazed, interfered with, or molested during the remainder of his stay at the Academy.

In no statement have I been able to obtain the slightest foundation for the many charges printed in the press to the effect that Tabasco sauce or other liquid was poured down Cadet Booz's throat or otherwise given to him in quantity by any cadet. I believe the charge has its origin in instances that have occurred at meals in the cadet mess hall, when cadets have invited new cadets, ignorant of the nature of a pepper sauce sometimes used on their mess tables, to put a drop or two on their tongues. Such action has at no time been a regular practice or custom, and it is too much to believe that physical harm to any cadet has ever resulted from the prank.

The various other charges made, to the effect that Cadet Booz was called "Bibles" by other cadets, and was made by them to suffer ridicule and persecution on account of his religious belief, are denied by all cadets, many of whom are men of strong religious convictions and members of the Cadet Young Men's Christian Association, a flourishing organization of large membership and strong influence for good in the corps of cadets.

For the correct information of persons not familiar with the conditions at the Academy, it ought to be here stated that the full and free information given by all cadets now who have any knowledge of the fight in which ex-Cadet Booz engaged is given on account of the untrue statements so widely circulated in the press, and that the fight mentioned was of course not engaged in with the knowledge or countenance of the authorities then in control of the Academy. Such encounters are engaged in at times secretly by cadets, and always have been; but it is fair to say that they are in no way common, and that they are believed to be much less frequent than similar affairs are among any large body of boys and young men assembled together in close association at any place.

The War Department is familiar with the very stringent enforcement of the strict rules of the Academy against hazing new cadets in any manner and with the difficulties that have been encountered in getting cadets to tell anything at the time of such affairs, even when the authorities have reason to suspect that some unauthorized affair has taken place.

In conclusion, and in view of the wide publicity given in this case by the press to the scandalous charges against the Military Academy, I recommend that a rigid investigation of the charges be ordered by the War Department, the investigation to cover the action taken by the authorities in suppressing hazing, and that the result be given the widest possible publicity.

A. L. MILLS,
Colonel, U. S. A., Superintendent.

DECEMBER 8, 1900.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of War has taken the action required by the original resolution, in making an investigation, the committee has simply reported the substitute, requesting him to transmit to Congress the full findings of the later investigation when completed, and as the House is anxious to go on with important business I——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear one word that the gentleman is saying.

Mr. HULL. I had said that the original resolution provided a request simply for the Secretary of War to have this investigation made, and as he had already commenced an investigation at the Academy, and when he got the report of Colonel Mills, who recommended a further and wider and strict investigation, he has appointed a board to make this investigation, and as he has submitted to Congress what has already been done, the committee adopted a substitute requesting him to submit to Congress the full findings when the report is made by the board that has recently been appointed to make the investigation, to send for persons and papers; and as I can see no particular object for debate at this time I would like to move the previous question, unless it should be the temper of the House that this should not be done.

Mr. DRIGGS and Mr. SULZER addressed the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was going to suggest, if the gentleman from Iowa will indulge me for a moment——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. HULL. Without yielding the floor, I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not want to discuss the matter. The gentleman who introduced the resolution, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS], wanted a moment or two.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I was trying, without yielding the floor, to find out how much debate or talk would be wanted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Five or ten minutes.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not personally care for more than about ten minutes on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman told me this morning that five minutes would satisfy him.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will be satisfied with five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield for a question.

Mr. SULZER. Is it understood that the report of Colonel Mills and the letter from the Secretary of War will be published?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WANGER. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I will say that I yield two minutes——

Mr. HULL. Before I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York, I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. WANGER. I would like to ask for ten minutes after the gentleman from New York has concluded. This young cadet was my appointee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is now entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire first of all to say that I am opposed to the resolution or substitute for my resolution reported this morning from the Committee on Military Affairs. In the first place, I would like to call the attention of the House to the fact that at the time I introduced my resolution it was for the purpose not only of stopping absolutely the practice of hazing at Westpoint, but also to particularly investigate the alleged hazing case of Cadet Oscar L. Booz. The resolution has been reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, simply calling for an investigation in the case of Oscar L. Booz. I desire to go further than that. I can not understand why it is the committee has left out of their resolution altogether the terminating clause of mine, to wit:

> Together with such recommendations as he (the Secretary of War) may care to make by which the practice of hazing may be stopped.

It is a notorious fact that during the last twenty-five or thirty years there have been many infamous cases of hazing in the Military Academy; and I say now, as a representative of the people of the United States, that when young men are appointed as cadets to the Military Academy, they being the wards of the people of the United States, should be as safe in the Military Academy as they are in their own homes; and the time has come, Mr. Speaker, when we should enact severe and stringent legislation against this infamous practice.

I desire, before alluding to the case of Cadet Booz, to allude to a case away back in 1880, the case of Cadet Johnson Whittaker, who was hazed in his room, beaten, and cut in the ears. That Whittaker case became a subject of Congressional investigation. There was a long report published at that time by the Congressional Board of Visitors to the Military Academy, and I would like to say that that report, signed by Mr. Garland, who was a visitor on the part of the Senate, and John F. Philips, a visitor on the part of the House, contains a lengthy statement in relation to hazing. Allow me to quote one phrase from that report. I will place the entire report in the RECORD, but I want to quote one phrase from it, concurred in by the gentleman who is now the distinguished President of the United States, the Hon. William McKinley, who at the time was one of the Board of Visitors to the Academy. In that report President McKinley went so far as to agree to this statement:

> If this can not be accomplished it should be a matter of serious consideration whether such a Government institution ought not to be absolutely abolished.

This is where President McKinley stood on hazing, for he was alluding then to it and to the fact that Whittaker was a colored cadet and was not given the same privileges that the other cadets received. Of course, the color question does not apply in the Booz case. And I say now, repeating the language of the President of the United States, that if hazing can not cease at the Westpoint Military Academy I am in favor of going so far as to abolish the Academy. It is a brutal, cowardly, trouble-breeding practice. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] will tell the House in extenso of the Booz case, however. I would say still further that they claim that in consequence of cowardice this young man Booz should have been hazed and was not fit to be a cadet of the Academy or an officer of the United States Army. I say to you now that if the reports are true that Booz was hazed at the Military Academy the cadets who performed the hazing are not fit to become officers of the United States Army, for they and not Booz are the cowards. [Applause.]

I say, further, that it is not a case of cowardice when some young fellow not strong and strapping, but comparatively weak physically, declines to go into a prize fight with some great strapping young giant; and I repeat this is not cowardice. I desire to say, too, that I am in favor of the roughest kind of fair sport, not only at the Military Academy, but at every other institution. I believe in football, I believe in sparring, I believe in wrestling, all under the eye of competent directors, but I draw the line at brutality, draw the line at the strong attacking the weak, draw the line at the strong nerved shattering the nerves of his less fortunate fellow-student. [Applause.]

In conclusion, I desire to say most emphatically that I admire the Military Academy at Westpoint, but through the practice of hazing its fair name has frequently been smirched, and every cadet has suffered, more or less, through the misconduct of some one of their number, so, on behalf of the anti-hazing majority of the cadets of the Academy, on behalf of the American fathers and mothers whose sons are cadets or may in the future become cadets, and on behalf of the honor of the institution—aye, of the honor of the nation itself—I urge the passage of the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Loud applause.]

Mr. HULL. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, having had the honor of making the appointment of Cadet Booz to the Military Academy, it is appropriate, it seems to me, that I should ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes to refer to this case as it occurs to me. In the first place, I do not presume to know what the exact facts in this case are. I simply say the statements published in the reputable newspapers of the country are such as to have most profoundly moved the people of the country; that there is scarcely a home where there is any child growing, or expecting to grow, the mother of which has not felt that the greatest outrage has been committed. There has also been a feeling aroused on the part of many persons that the officers of the Academy and of our Army are so jealous of the fair fame of that institution that they will endeavor to guard it as zealously, perhaps, and as indiscreetly as did the officers of the army of France in their conduct in respect to the Dreyfus case.

I desire to offer at the proper time a resolution to provide not merely for the receipt of the information which the Secretary of War may furnish, but not in any sense to interfere with the government by the board of inquiry which he has authorized, but at the same time to provide for the investigation by this House of Representatives, the only action which in my judgment will satisfy the country that the real facts of the case will be fairly and fully brought out, and that action may be taken which may be relied upon and protect the Academy and its students from ever hereafter being made victims of hazing.

I therefore send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to be read for information, an amendment which I desire to offer at the proper time in lieu of the substitute reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. In other words, I want to amend the substitute by striking out what it contains and inserting what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Whereas it is a matter of general knowledge, published in many reputable daily newspapers of the United States, that Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, Pa., formerly a cadet at the United States Military Academy at Westpoint, died at his home from injuries purporting to have been the result of hazing inflicted upon him by certain unknown cadets of the said Military Academy: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report the information in his possession attending the said hazing of Oscar L. Booz while a cadet at the Military Academy at Westpoint, and the result of any investigation he has made, to the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as he may care to make by which the practice of hazing may be stopped.

Resolved, That a special committee of five members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker to have full power to send for persons and papers and, if necessary, to proceed to Westpoint and elsewhere, to thoroughly investigate the foregoing subject and report to the House within thirty days the result of such investigation, with such recommendations as may be advisable to secure freedom from hazing in said Academy hereafter, the expense of this investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, if recognized, I shall at the proper time offer that proposition; and if denied the opportunity of doing so, I appeal most earnestly to members of this House to vote down the demand for the previous question.

I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read a letter which I have just received from the chief burgess of the borough of Bristol, Pa., where Cadet Booz lived and died.

The Clerk read as follows:

BRISTOL, PA., December 8, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: No doubt ere this you have been informed regarding the case of the late Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, at one time a cadet at Westpoint Military Academy, where it is asserted by his friends he was so misused and abused by older students that his health was permanently injured, and that the treatment received by him while there was the direct cause of his death.

The most specific charge made by them is that he was compelled to swallow Tabasco sauce by the spoonful, whereby his throat was burned in such way that the result was most serious.

Now, as Mr. Booz was appointed a cadet, as I understand, by your influence after passing a most creditable examination, I sincerely hope you will use your utmost endeavors to have a thorough investigation made of the charges of brutality against this young cadet.

As Westpoint Military Academy is supported by the Government, it is the duty of the people's representatives to see that the sons of our citizens who are admitted there shall not be made the victims of rowdies, but that they will be treated as one gentleman treats another.

No doubt those directly implicated in the alleged outrages, as well as those in authority at the Academy at the time the late Cadet Booz was an inmate there, will try to smooth the matter over and belittle the young man in every possible way.

But those acquainted with him in this his birthplace know that he was upright and conscientious—physically, mentally, and morally everything he should be.

Let us hope, therefore, that a rigid inquiry will be made, and, if the charges shall be proven, that swift punishment will follow for all guilty ones, and the brutal hazing of students at this particular school forever broken up.

Most sincerely, yours,

E. L. LEIGH, Chief Burgess.

Hon. I. P. WANGER, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, no man more severely condemns the practice of hazing than I do. When I had the honor to serve on the Board of Visitors at the Military Academy last summer I made some little personal investigation in regard to this subject, and I became convinced that the reports as to hazing at that institution were greatly exaggerated. Certainly the corps of cadets are as robust, handsome, and well-trained young men as I ever saw, and they gave no evidence that hazing had inflicted any personal injuries upon them, nor could I recognize in their spirit or in the feeling which pervaded the corps any evidence that they had been humiliated in any way. My understanding is that hazing as practiced there has been of the harmless sort—simply having a little fun with the new cadets.

The illustration given by my friend from New York [Mr. DRIGGS] is particularly unfortunate, for the man who was alleged to have been hazed in the instance referred to by the gentleman had subsequent to that incident a career which in no way confirmed his evidence given during the investigation. His subsequent career was such that he had to be dismissed from the Army on the most serious charges. No man familiar with the facts of his career in the Army and of the circumstances of his dismissal would place any confidence in the testimony which he offered at the time of the investigation of the alleged hazing in the Whittaker case.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. One minute.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLAYTON].

Mr. HOPKINS. Before the gentleman yields, I should like to ask him this question: If his statement is correct, is it not a matter of justice to the Academy that there should be a Congressional investigation, so as to relieve it from the impression in the mind of the public, if that impression is unjust?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have no objection to the most searching investigation.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me a moment, as he has alluded to something I have said? I wish to ask him this question: Is it not true that President McKinley said that if hazing and similar practices to those of which this young man was a victim could not be prevented, he would be in favor of abolishing the Military Academy?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will admit that Mr. McKinley said that if the gentleman says so. I have not looked up the record.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I ask to be recognized for two minutes.

Mr. HULL. I understood that the gentleman from Texas yielded to the gentleman from New York.

A MEMBER. But that time was afterwards consumed by other gentlemen.

Mr. HULL. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would not obtrude my views in this matter on the House were it not for the fact that as a graduate of the Westpoint Academy I can in some measure speak of matters there from personal knowledge and experience. During the time that I was at the Academy this question of hazing arose. In fact, there were several cadets dismissed from the Academy on the charge of having been engaged in hazing.

Now, there is no need that officers of the Army and officers of the Military Academy should adopt any tactics of concealment in reference to this question. There is no need that there should be repeated in this institution the tactics which one gentleman has suggested were adopted in the Dreyfus case. The Military Academy has a record upon which it can stand. There is no institution in this country where there is such a spirit of fair play as there is at the Military Academy at Westpoint.

Mr. WANGER. Is it not well that the people of the country should be convinced of that fact?

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. I have no objection to any investigation that may be instituted. The Academy need not fear any investigation. It is the most democratic institution in the world. The son of a washerwoman and the son of a millionaire who enter the Academy leave behind all distinctions of social rank. They are placed upon the same footing. Every cadet in the institution has to depend for his standing upon his own merits.

Mr. STEELE. More particularly as to the hazing! They are brought to a level by the hazing!

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Now, so far as hazing is concerned, let me say that this thing has been terribly exaggerated. At no time while I was at the Academy or for some years since—because I have kept myself familiar with matters there—at no time would the sentiment of the cadets at large, even if left to themselves, countenance anything that was insulting to a gentleman or in any way unfair or brutal.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that after what we have heard on this floor and elsewhere it is due to the institution at Westpoint that this Congressional investigation should take place. I voted in committee against the substitute reported here. I thought the original resolution offered by the gentleman from New York was one that I could support and one which would meet all the demands of the case. But in view of what has taken place on the floor, I believe that this proposed Congressional investigation ought to be had. I do not believe that there is any ground for the charges against the Academy. I believe that when this investigation is had the authorities of the institution as well as the cadets will be vindicated. But whether they would be vindicated or not, I believe it would be unwise to vote down the investigation which is asked for. I believe it will be unwise for the country and for the Academy, and, therefore, if I have the opportunity, I shall vote for the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

I now yield back to the gentleman from Iowa the remainder of the time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the original resolution submitted, and which was referred to the committee, provided that the Secretary of War should make an investigation and report his findings. The amendment offered by the committee is simply to the effect that, as he has already taken the action required by the original resolution, he transmit to Congress his findings in the case.

So far as I am concerned, I have but little faith, I confess, in a Congressional investigation, and certainly very much less if such investigation be confined to a thirty days' term, as suggested by the language of this resolution. Besides that it will cost the Government something. It will give the three or five members of Congress who may be selected an opportunity of making a trip to Westpoint or some other place, and will not be as searching, complete, or as satisfactory as an investigation made by the Secretary of War.

The Army itself and the officials of the Department are just as much, if not more, interested in preventing hazing at Westpoint as anybody on the floor of the House can be. And I can say from my own personal knowledge that there is just as much objection in the Department as there is on this floor to that practice. In fact, stringent orders are now in force on this subject, and cadets have been dismissed for mild hazing. I am satisfied that the War Department is just as anxious to stop the practice as anyone here or anybody in the country can possibly be. They have taken the most vigorous measures for five years past to eliminate the practice, even in its milder forms, and in my judgment it has been almost entirely, if not entirely, eliminated.

The whole country, of course, naturally sympathizes with the family of this young man on account of the charges which have gone the rounds of the newspapers; and if it should be found that the charges are true and the crime can be located upon the shoulders of any cadet in the Academy, he should be refused graduation and dismissed in disgrace from the service of the United States. The Department and Superintendent of the Academy are doing everything possible to prevent hazing. They are making vigorous efforts in that direction, and the present Superintendent is emphatic in his intention to break up the system altogether.

In my judgment a very much better result would be obtained by letting this matter go, as suggested by the committee. It can accomplish more and reach more satisfactory results than you can possibly accomplish by a Congressional investigation. Such an investigation was not suggested by any member, Republican or Democrat, of the Military Committee. It was not suggested, as I understand it, anywhere until the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was read; but if the House desires such an investigation, the Committee on Military Affairs has no fault to find. So far as I am individually concerned, I shall vote against the amendment to the resolution, and hope the House will do so.

There is one other point to which I desire to ask the attention of the House, and then I will call the previous question. I refer to the unwisdom of sending men on an investigation of this kind and requiring a report within thirty days.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment for an inquiry?

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make his motion, and then, Mr. Speaker, ask the previous question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I wish to ask a question for information.

Mr. HULL. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DRIGGS. I would like to know from the gentleman from Iowa, in case these newspaper reports are found to be true, is there any United States law that could reach the cadet who is guilty of this brutal act, or would it even go so far as to authorize indictment against him for manslaughter?

Mr. HULL. Well, the gentleman, of course, can answer that as well as I. I can only say here that if the reports are found to be true, the Congress of the United States is ready and the War Department itself is ready to take action to dismiss all who are connected with the matter or who are culpable in relation to it.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. WANGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the amendment which was read by the Clerk a few moments ago, but ask to substitute sixty days for thirty days, so that the committee can have sixty days in which to report.

The SPEAKER. The substitute proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania as now modified will be again reported to the House, after which the amendments of the committee will be submitted, and then the vote will be taken upon the substitute for the committee amendments and the resolution as reported by them.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Whereas it is a matter of general knowledge, published in many reputable daily newspapers of the United States, that Oscar L. Booz, of Bristol, Pa., formerly a cadet at the United States Military Academy at Westpoint, died at his home from injuries purporting to have been the result of hazing inflicted upon him by certain unknown cadets of the said Military Academy: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report the information in his possession attending the said hazing of Oscar L. Booz while a cadet at the Military Academy at Westpoint and the result of any investigation he has made to the House of Representatives, together with such recommendations as he may care to make by which the practice of hazing may be stopped.

Resolved, That a special committee of five members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker, to have full power to send for persons and papers, and, if necessary, to proceed to Westpoint and elsewhere, to thoroughly investigate the foregoing subject and report to the House within sixty days the result of such investigation, with such recommendations as may be advisable to secure freedom from hazing in said Academy hereafter, the expense of this investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to make just one statement for the information of the House. This whole alleged matter occurred more than two years ago.

I now move the previous question.

Mr. WANGER. In connection with that statement I suppose the gentleman will permit the further statement that the ex-cadet then went under medical treatment, which continued until the time of his death.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When did he die?

Mr. WANGER. He died very recently; during the present month.

Mr. HULL. I now move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question upon the resolution and all amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HULL demanded a division.

The affirmative vote having been announced,

Mr. MADDOX said: Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this the Wanger resolution.

Mr. WANGER. No.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It can not be made at this time.

The division having been completed, the Speaker announced—ayes 82, noes 5.

Accordingly, the committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTION.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, when the original bill was before the House for the purpose of raising revenue to pay the expenses of the Spanish war, the Ways and Means Committee, in reporting that bill, made use of the following language:

While all of these additional taxes are war taxes, which would be naturally repealed or modified when the necessities of war and the payment of war expenses have ceased, yet it is impossible now to place a limit on them, not only for the reason that no one can intelligently forecast the length of the war, but also for the reason that war always brings a train of extraordinary expenditures which do not terminate with the close of actual hostilities.

Mr. Chairman, although the war with Spain closed nearly two years ago, yet the train of expenditures which immediately grew out of that war have not ceased, and will not cease for some time to come.

The committee would have been glad if they could have gone through this law and eliminated every tax that is a war tax, leaving upon the statute book only such taxes as in their opinion ought to be there in times of profound peace. But, as I say, the train of expenses growing out of the war have not ceased, and we can not make that radical reduction in the present war revenue.

The first thing that the committee considered was how large a reduction might be made. We had before us the report and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, as well as the recommendation of the President of the United States, that we take off $30,000,000 from these taxes.

That recommendation was founded upon the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It appears that the surplus in the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1900, was $79,000,000, in round numbers. It appears also from the expenditures already incurred and the revenue already received, as well as from the estimates of the various Departments, both of revenue and expenses, that we are likely to have a surplus during the current year, ending June 30 next, of about $80,000,000.

When the Secretary comes to make his estimate for the year ending June 30, 1902, he estimates the surplus under the present revenue and all other revenue acts remaining in full force at only $26,000,000. Now, it is fair to the Secretary and the House to say that this estimate is formed upon the estimates of the different Departments of the Government supplied to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he took these into consideration, and took the amounts estimated by the different Secretaries in order to arrive at this surplus of $26,000,000. If he had believed that that was absolutely correct, and that Congress would appropriate all the money that the Departments called for, he never would have recommended a reduction of even $30,000,000.

The committee have taken some pains to ascertain as near as possible how far these estimates might be out of the way. In the first place, he estimates an increase in the customs receipts and in the internal-revenue receipts of $10,000,000 in each case, making an increase of $20,000,000. If the present business prosperity of the country continues during the next year and a half, I do not think that those estimates are far out of the way. He also estimates an increase in the postal receipts of $9,000,000. But it must be observed that the increase in the postal receipts this year over the last fiscal year are only about $5,000,000; and I do not see any warrant for an increase of $9,000,000, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, for 1902. Thus we would have an increase in the revenues of, say, $25,000,000.

Now, it has been the experience of the country during a good many years that while the revenues naturally increased from year to year under the same law and enforcement of the same laws in the normal condition of the country, because the business of the country grows from year to year, that the general normal expenses of the country increase in about the same proportion, so that the ordinary business expenditures of the country on a peace footing and without having any extraordinary expenses that grow out of the condition of war that we have had would probably wipe out this surplus of $25,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what further expenses are liable to come—expenses above the normal? We have had no river and harbor bill since three years ago. We have not been expending as much for rivers and harbors during the past year, and will not during the present year, as we normally expend. It goes without saying that we are to have a river and harbor bill this year. I do not know what the size of it will be, but when it goes through the House and Senate it will be large enough, whether twenty millions or not I do not know; I have no information; but it will be a large amount of money, which must be taken into account in arriving at what the surplus will be at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

This is not the only increase of expenditures immediately in sight. For the past three years we have had no appropriation and no expenditure for armor plate to put on our naval vessels, simply because we have not been able to make any terms with the people who manufacture armor. But, as is well known to the House, the Secretary of the Navy has recently made a contract for armor plate amounting to 36,000 tons at somewhere less than $450 a ton, and the most of that will be delivered in a year and a half.

This expenditure will increase our expenses for the next two years by $18,000,000. But that is not all, so far as the building of our naval establishment and the building of new vessels is concerned. We had a large naval bill passed at the last session of Congress. Contracts are about to be let, bids have just been opened, for a large number of vessels of all classes, which will add tens of millions to the expenses and to the increase of expenses for construction in the Navy for the year ending June 30, 1902. It is difficult to get at and predict the exact amount; it is difficult to look into the future and say what Congress may do even with the appropriations in this present session of Congress.

And this is not all even of the increased expenditure liable to come in the year 1902. The Commissioner of Pensions recommends an increased appropriation of $4,000,000 in his report for the year ending June 30, 1902. Most of these increased expenditures for pensions grow out of the Spanish war and the disabilities incurred by our soldiers there. This is an increased expense which must be met and will help to pull down whatever surplus we may have in 1902. Then we have the Isthmian Canal and the Pacific cable, all liable to drain the Treasury.

We may have a surplus of fifty millions; we may not have a surplus of more than forty millions, and it may run up to sixty millions in 1902, but the question to us is, standing here to-day, whether we can afford to take any risk as to a deficiency for the fiscal year of 1902. We can deal with a surplus. It is the Republican habit to deal with a surplus when they control the revenues and expenditures of the Government. [Laughter and applause.] The Republicans are to have charge of the Government for the next two years to come. But it goes against the grain on this side of the House to have to deal with a deficiency, and when the committee were considering this bill the majority members of the committee, who commenced the consideration of it on the 20th day of last month and have had it under consideration ever since, constantly had before them the idea that whatever they did in the reduction of taxation they should not bring in a bill which when entirely enacted into law would produce a deficiency in the revenues of the country.

The increased revenues predicted by the Secretary of the Treasury depend upon continued prosperity. There is nothing at home, there is nothing in our own country, which does not give promise of prosperity for years to come. Every man is hopeful, every business man is full of enterprise, the country is marching on in industrial prosperity; but it does not depend altogether upon what transpires in the United States whether this prosperity shall continue or not. We are marching forward into the markets of the world, making greater strides than we ever made before. During the past two years our advance in this direction has been phenomenal. What we have so often predicted in the past as the result of our tariff laws, bringing our artisans up to that point of perfection where they can compete in the markets of the world, has already transpired, and we are marching on in that respect.

But we had a short time since what looked like trouble in China. The powers were over there, and friction was occurring from day to day. It looks now as if, through American diplomacy, the whole matter might be settled and there might be no difficulty between the nations of the world and no war on account of what each one is doing. But we can not tell what may happen. We can not tell at what moment a general war may break out in Europe; and if that occurs, it will affect the prosperity of the United States. We can not bank upon what may happen across the water, and hence we can not predict a uniform prosperity in this country during the next four years; and so we must look out in the future and must guard against going beyond the danger line in the reduction of the revenue of the country.

This bill which we bring in here proposes a reduction of $40,000,000. It is exactly in accordance with what we announced when we brought in the bill two years ago raising the war taxes. We leave $65,000,000 still to be collected under the war-revenue bill. You will notice that we are to provide for an army of 100,000 men. Both sides agree upon that number as necessary on account of the conditions in the insular possessions of this country that came to us through the Spanish war.

No one thinks we ought to have over 50,000 men in time of peace. We have been adding to our fortifications, and we must keep an additional army of 18,000 men to man them, with twenty millions annually for expenses. We are not taking that into calculation now, but we must have the 50,000 additional men to take care of the foreign possessions for two or three years to come. In making this calculation we might as well make the calculation of an expense of sixty-five to seventy millions of dollars, an expense following in the train of the Spanish war and growing legitimately out of it; and that would absorb the whole $65,000,000 that we continue to get under the war-revenue act.

In addition to that we are paying five millions and a quarter of dollars of interest annually on borrowed money—on the bonds we issued for the expenses of the Spanish war alone. We are to pay three or four million dollars additional in pensions every year. And our naval establishment must continue to cost us more by reason of the sending of our ships across the ocean to take care of our distant possessions. So at present the committee could not see but that they were living up exactly to the agreement they made with the people when they imposed these taxes, by continuing $65,000,000 of taxation to take care of these expenses.

Under the tariff act of 1897 the revenues have proved to be ample to take care of the current expenses of the Government. It is true they were not sufficient for this during the first year following the passage of that act, because while the old law was in force, it being known that the tariff taxes were to be increased, there was an anticipatory importation of sugar to the extent of one year's supply, and of wool to the extent of nearly two years' supply; so that the Government for nearly two years failed to get the revenues that should have been received from these two great revenue producers. But from the moment we reached normal conditions of importation no one has had any apprehension that under the Dingley tariff law we would not receive sufficient revenue in normal times of peace to take care of all the expenditures of the Government.

The committee arrived at the idea that the Secretary of the Treasury was pretty nearly right when he recommended a reduction of $30,000,000; so we went to work to see at what point we could relieve the people from these most vexatious and annoying taxes under these schedules. Taking these matters up in order and trying to find the taxes that seemed to be most vexatious, the committee commenced at Schedule A in the existing law and began to reduce the taxes along the line of that schedule. The first item that they reached was certificates of deposit, inland drafts, foreign bills of exchange, and the tax on postal money orders—all of the same nature—there being a tax of 2 cents upon each, and all these taxes being of the same degree of annoyance and vexation.

Now, is it true that some of the city banks asked, "Why not leave this stamp tax on bank checks? The stamp is imprinted on the check; it does not cause much trouble; the tax is not very large. Why not leave it in force?" But then we heard from the farmers; we heard from the rural districts; we heard from the small banks; we heard from the small traders, and we learned that this 2-cent tax upon checks is to them very vexatious. Of course 2 cents is not much to any man, but the getting of a 2-cent stamp is often the difficulty. Farmers do not care for books with beautifully engraved or imprinted stamps on their checks. They do not provide checks of this kind in advance. They do not buy $2 worth of stamps in advance. They depend upon the adhesive stamps; and when they come to put the sticky thing into their pockets and try to carry it around they find that the stamp wants to pay the tax by destroying itself before it gets upon the check.

And often when they want to give their neighbor a check they have no stamp at hand. They can not use a postage stamp if they happen to have one in the house. It may be necessary to go five or ten miles before they can get a revenue stamp. They may offer to pay 2 cents to the man who receives the check—thereby violating the law, although not intending to do so in spirit. And the farmer may not have the 2 cents at hand.

Often he does not happen to have 2 cents change in his pocket, so that the stamp does not go on, and the check goes to the bank without the stamp. It may be a small country bank, and the banker who receives the check must himself put the stamp on or offend the customer by refusing to receive the check without the stamp upon it. So the country banks want this tax removed; but the large city banks say, "No, do not take off this tax; take off the tax upon bank capital—the tax of $2 upon every thousand dollars of capital and surplus."

The committee thought the city banks were better able to pay the tax upon their capital than these humbler individuals and institutions were able to pay this stamp tax upon checks. For the city banks do not feel the annoyance that the people throughout the country feel in consequence of this little 2-cent stamp tax upon every check that is issued. So in our bill we have stricken out this tax on checks, amounting to $7,000,000 annually; the tax on certificates of deposit, amounting to $200,000 annually; the tax on inland drafts, amounting to $500,000 annually; the tax on foreign drafts, amounting to $100,000 annually; and the tax on postal money orders, amounting to $602,000 annually.

The next thing that met the eye of the committee was the tax on promissory notes and mortgages, which are in the same class. It seemed to the committee as it had seemed to them when the original bill was before them two years ago that it was pretty hard when a man had to borrow money and pay interest on it that he should be charged a tax in addition. That seemed to be a tax upon his borrowing capacity or a tax upon his indebtedness. So the committee was unanimous in the conclusion that the stamp tax on promissory notes should go off. According to the best estimates that we could get from the Department, that tax amounts to three and a half million dollars.

By the way, this estimate was based upon figures obtained in this manner: The Comptroller of the Currency knew the exact amount that was loaned by the banks upon promissory notes for the year previous. It was estimated that those notes, on an average, ran for ninety days; and on that basis the amount of tax imposed upon such notes was estimated at something over a million and a half—nearly $2,000,000. Then it was estimated there were as many notes held by the private bankers and the State banks, and used in private transactions, as those that went to the national banks.

And so they figured that the entire cost of the stamps to the public in this case amounted to three and a half millions of dollars, and probably they have arrived at a correct conclusion in regard to the amount of this tax. The difficulty in the business, it must be understood, is one which arises from the very nature of the tax itself, for the reason that any one stamp of a given denomination which is required by law to be affixed to a document of this character will do on any one of these instruments, whether notes, indorsements, or checks, and we do not provide a different character of stamp for each one of these different forms of business papers. The office, therefore, only knows the number sold of each particular denomination of stamps, and whether they are used on checks, notes, or bonds they have no means of knowing.

Again, take the question of mortgages. It was reckoned that the mortgages outstanding in 1890, according to the census of that year, would average $1,400 each, and, therefore, that the stamp tax on them was 25 cents on each mortgage, and the total amount was something over $300,000 raised from that source. The internal-revenue people were inclined to figure also the tax on chattel mortgages amounted to about as much. But in that respect the committee did not agree with the Bureau. They estimated that the amount of the tax on all mortgages would reach about a million dollars per annum, while the committee concluded on its investigation that it would not exceed one-half million dollars per annum.

The next vexatious tax on the list is the tax of 1 cent which the law required to be paid on each express receipt or telegraphic dispatch. Of course this tax affects everybody who has any transactions with the telegraph or express offices. They have to go down into their pockets and pay the 1-cent revenue tax, and it is not so much the amount of the tax as the vexatious time required in hunting around for change to meet the requirements of the law. The objection to it, therefore, is not so much because of the character of the tax itself, so far as the expense is concerned, but because it is so very annoying to everybody who has dealings with telegraph or express companies; and the committee took off both of these taxes, the tax on express receipts, which amounted to twelve hundred thousand dollars, and on telegraph messages, $800,000 per annum.

Of course, Mr. Chairman, some may say, Why not put this tax directly upon the express companies and telegraph companies? Well, we did consider that; but the express company had a right to say to their customers how much they would charge for carrying a package from place to place and could easily add the amount of the Government tax to their charges. I know sometimes gentlemen will close their eyes and proceed blindly, as was the case in dealing with the tax on the Standard Oil Company and putting a tax on the sugar refiner, as was done.

They forgot to consider the fact that these taxes might possibly not affect the companies at all, but the consumers; and a review of the history of the last two years shows what some gentlemen then anticipated, when the tax went on in the Senate, that the companies not only got the amount of the tax back, but that the companies also got a little additional sum from their customers to enable them to swell their dividends. That was the legislation in that regard. In other words, the tax in all instances seeks the consumer, and usually, if not arrested in its progress, it finds him and forces him to pay the amount due to the Government, and a little additional, also, to help to swell the dividends of the companies upon whom it was supposed the tax was levied.

Again, Mr. Chairman, having taken the tax off telegraph messages, it seemed no more than right to the committee, and proper, that the same privilege should be accorded to the telephone companies. The telephone companies are not large corporations, as a rule, and are scattered throughout the country, and, as has been said in many cases, their bonded indebtedness is heavy and burdensome, and so it was believed by the committee that while repealing the tax on telegraphic messages you should relieve their only competitors and take the tax from the telephone companies just as well. This tax, as I have said already, amounts to about $800,000 a year on the telegraph companies and $315,000 a year on telephone companies.

Then we go a step further and take the stamp tax off bonds, conveyances, and insurance policies. This latter tax is paid almost entirely by the man who receives the insurance. The man who provides for the future of his family in the event of his death by securing a life insurance, or in providing an indemnity for the family—for his wife and children—in case the home should burn down, was forced to pay this tax. We took it off in that case and also in the case of mortgages, a mortgage being a form of indebtedness where the debtor pays not only the interest on his obligation, but also pays the stamp tax of the Government as well. The annual tax on insurance policies was $3,000,000 and on bonds of indemnity $250,000.

Then there was a tax of $200,000 upon steamship tickets abroad. When this was put on it was thought by the committee who put it on in the Senate that this $200,000 would come out of the passengers who went abroad, that they had plenty of money to spend, and that they might just as well drop a little into the Treasury of the United States every time they went abroad as not. But how did that work? It was added to the price of the ticket here, to be sure, and the passengers had to pay it, but right across the border was a Canadian line running direct to Europe, and their tickets were $5 less, and it simply resulted in driving a large amount of passage from Montreal and Quebec to Europe, instead of letting it go by way of the lines that run out of this country from New York, Philadelphia, and Boston; and not bringing the Government any large receipts, the committee thought it was better to take it off, and we did so.

Mr. COX. How about the inheritance tax?

Mr. PAYNE. I will come to that in a moment. Then there were some taxes upon powers of attorney, upon protests of notes, and upon warehouse receipts, amounting only to $375,000, and the committee took those off, making a total reduction in Schedule A of $22,242,000. They left on taxes in Schedule A which applied to transactions on stock exchanges in the large cities of the country, both in speculating in farm produce and also in buying and selling stocks and bonds on the market. These amount to about $13,000,000 a year, according to the best estimate that can be furnished by the Internal-Revenue Office. We thought that these taxes ought to stay on as long as we had this train of expenses growing out of the war.

Now we come down to Schedule B, which is largely a tax upon patent medicines and chewing gum—patent medicines, chewing gum, and wine. Well, I think the patent-medicine people have made more complaints than any other class of people that have been taxed under the war-revenue act. I do not mean to say that anybody has been taxed who has not made complaints, for every class of people who have been taxed under this act have been making loud complaints before the committee ever since the tax has been imposed. There was not a man of them who was not entirely willing to have his tax repealed, although all the other taxes should remain upon the schedule.

But these people who sell patent medicine seemed to have a real cause of grievance. When we fixed the tax, we fixed it at five-eighths of 1 cent on every 25-cent article at retail, a small percentage compared to the retail price. We did not so much take into consideration the wholesale price of the article, and we found that the wholesale price of the article was so small that this tax coming upon the manufacturer made a very large percentage upon his output, amounting to from 20 to 50 per cent, and in some instances even more, upon the wholesale price at which he put the article out. This applies both to chewing gum and to the various articles of proprietary medicines under Schedule B.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman permit me right there? I do not claim to have any personal knowledge on the subject of the taxation of patent medicines and proprietary medicines, but there are a good many jobbers in my district, and they have told me some things about this subject which conflict with the statements of the gentleman from New York, in this, that they say the wholesale people make the jobbers and the retailers pay the tax. They are in favor of retaining this tax. They say it does not make any difference; that the wholesale men will never put down the price of the medicine, even if you take the tax off.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I want to say that the general rule in every one of these cases is that the manufacturer claims he is paying the tax, the wholesaler claims he pays it, the retailer claims he pays it, and the consumer claims he pays it, and they all seem to be honorable, truthful men. It is pretty hard work to get at the truth, and my own opinion is that in almost every case it is divided all along the line to a large extent. The consumer can hardly pay it on these patent medicines, because the price is fixed at 25 cents, unless he gets a little less alcohol than he did before. I do not see very well how the consumer can be obliged to pay this tax otherwise.

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman will permit me just there, I recall a conversation that I had with a jobbing druggist in my district, in which he took the instances cited by the gentleman, of 25-cent packages of patent medicine. He tells me that under this law they are compelled to sell the medicine at 40 cents. I do not know whether that is true or not. It is a very reputable firm, and he is one of the men that asked me to retain this tax, saying that it would do people no good; that they would have to pay the increased price anyway.

Mr. PAYNE. I should say a man who got 40 cents instead of 25 cents would be in favor of continuing the tax.

But if anybody goes around the streets of our large cities with his eyes open he will see on the fronts of a great many drug stores the sign "Cut prices in patent medicines;" and they have got down pretty near to rock bottom in selling this stuff around the country. I suppose it is all good medicine. I do not know; I have never tried any of it.

Now, the basis of these medicines very frequently, and perhaps generally, is alcohol. Of course, alcohol pays eleven or twelve hundred per cent taxation before it gets into patent medicine, and they claim they are subject to a double internal-revenue tax, both taxes of a very high character, and that would seem to be the case. So the committee thought it was best to take that off.

In regard to chewing gum, in the tariff act of 1897 we put 10 cents per pound duty on chicle, which is the basis of all the chewing gum made in this country, and which is all imported. This 10 cents a pound is equivalent, they tell me, to about 65 per cent ad valorem; so that there is a very high tariff duty on the chicle which goes into chewing gum before it reaches the gum. This has been a great source of complaint, and they have put in evidence enough to convince the committee that they are really losing money, and have been ever since this tax has been in existence, and that the United States Government has been taking the entire profit.

So the committee thought it best to take the tax off these articles. There is a tax of 2 cents a quart bottle on native wine, and 1 cent upon pint bottles or less. This tax has been complained of a good deal. It is a high tax, much higher in proportion than the tax on beer, not as much as the tax on whisky and alcohol. They generally get 5 quart bottles from a gallon of wine, and that amounts to 2 cents a gallon tax, while the wine is sold at 17 cents a gallon, and the makers of the wines say that that is a very large tax, and amounts to more than 60 per cent of the value of the wine.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me just one statement?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The percentage of alcohol in beer is said to be 3 per cent. If that is true, beer is taxed about 100 per cent higher than whisky and wine.

Mr. PAYNE. I am reliably informed that under the new and improved methods of making beer that the average amount of alcohol is 15 and more per cent. I am not a judge of beer, and have not analyzed it to find what alcohol it contains.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The experts state, and we have to take their statements, in a matter of this kind——

Mr. PAYNE. I am credibly assured that under the new and improved methods of making it, where they have dispensed with many of the old ingredients that went into the making of beer, the percentage is as I have stated.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. We have got to rely on the statements of experts on that, and they say that the percentage of alcohol in beer is 3 per cent.

Mr. HOPKINS. What kind of beer, let me ask the gentleman right there? Is it not a fact that the percentage differs with different manufactures, and is not the percentage of alcohol larger in American beer than in German beer?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am so informed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The percentage varies anywhere from 2½ to 3½, but the average given by the experts is 3 per cent.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am credibly informed that there is more alcohol in American beer than there is in German beer.

Mr. PAYNE. These gentlemen will have to settle the question as to the percentage of alcohol in beer when they go out to get their lunch. I was speaking of the percentage of taxation upon the value of this article. There is no doubt but what it is a large tax upon the wine. I was in favor of making a reduction upon this, but was embarrassed by the fact that much of this wine is made in my own and adjoining districts, and I gave up to the general good—to the greatest number—in regard to this, and we hold to this $600,000 that is estimated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. That is all that is left of Schedule B—this tax upon wine.

Now, in framing the bill in 1898 the Senate put a provision upon the bill putting a pretty high tax upon legacies and bequests of personal property, and no exception was made as to any class of bequest for charitable, religious, or educational uses. The matter was not called to the attention of the conference committee when we agreed upon that. If it had been, I have no doubt the conference committee would have suggested an amendment in that part of the law, because there is no excuse for taxing bequests to charitable, religious, and educational institutions; and I do not suppose that there is a member of this House who would insist at any time under any stress of circumstances on imposing a tax upon legacies of that character.

Our committee have eliminated that from the law, and these bequests will no longer be taxed under this bill. There is some difference between the Commissioner and the committee as to the amount. He estimated the amount at a million dollars and the committee at half a million. The fact is that under the last clause the tax on legacies to strangers and to those of remote degree of kinship and to others, including legacies to educational, charitable, and religious associations, amounted to $700,000 gathered during the past year. The committee think that $500,000 would amply cover all the revenue received to-day upon educational, charitable, and religious bequests.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I see in connection with Schedule A the committee has taken off the tax from express receipts, but has left the tax on receipts for freight.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say in regard to that that the tax of 1 cent on a receipt upon freight carried by a railroad and other carriers than express cover a large quantity of goods generally, and often shipped to long distances. Usually there is a large freight bill, the receipts covering a carload, and sometimes a trainload, and of course the compensation averages very much higher than it does for express packages.

The railroad corporations have paid these taxes up to this time without imposing it upon their customers. It comes from the railroad company, while express companies claim that if they had to pay 1 cent for every package they carry, the compensation being comparatively small, it would drive some of them into bankruptcy and prevent others from paying the usual small dividend which they pay on the stock of the company. In other words, it would be very detrimental to business, and so they were forced to charge it to their customers. So the committee took it off the express receipts and left it on the railroad receipts.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I want to get this proposition distinct and plain in this proposed bill. Now, a good citizen makes a bequest in his will and gives his property to an educational institution. Is that tax taken off?

Mr. PAYNE. Under this bill we have removed all taxes on legacies of that kind.

Mr. COX. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. POWERS. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I asked him a question at this point?

Mr. PAYNE. No, sir.

Mr. POWERS. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he has any objection to add to the proviso to which he has alluded, relating to the legacies to educational institutions, that the act shall not apply to estates, testate or intestate, where the testator died before June 13, 1898, the date of the passage of the original act? I will say to the gentleman from New York that some question has arisen in the case of estates where the settlement was pending at the time of the passage of this act. Some collectors have insisted that the act applied to those estates and claimed that the legacies and distributive shares should be taxed, while others claim that it did not apply. The next section of the law—section 30—would rather indicate that it did not apply; but, to prevent any confusion or dispute about it, I ask the chairman if he has any objection to the proposed amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like first to get the information from the Internal-Revenue Bureau, and then I will confer with the gentleman later.

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the war-revenue act the tax upon cigars weighing more than 3 pounds to the thousand is $3.60. It was put at this odd sum, $3.60. And in trying to apportion the 60 cents the cigar makers found they were unable to do it and charge it to their customers. They claimed the price of cigars being 5 and 10 cents they were not able to divide the cents in retailing cigars, and they are unable to get any portion of the tax from the consumer. They claim that prior to the imposition of this tax the margin was so small on cheap cigars that there was very little profit, and that the 60 cents a thousand has taken all, if not more than all, of the profits on this article. It bears heaviest on the cheap cigars made of our own domestic tobacco. Even cigars made of Connecticut tobacco are subject to some difficulty on account of this tax, although that tobacco is not cheap and is good.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I will say to the gentleman from New York that we do not make cigars of Connecticut tobacco; we only make the wrappers.

Mr. PAYNE. But they get a good American filler to put into it.

Mr. DALZELL. Yes, they get that from Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The result has been that the committee have taken out the 60 cents and left it at $3 a thousand, which is a pretty good tax on cigars now, considering the tax upon the wholesale dealer, and this item makes a reduction of $3,189,000 in the revenue.

The only other subject upon which I have not touched is the subject of beer. The tax upon beer during the period soon after the civil war down to the tariff act of 1897 was $1 a barrel, with 7½ per cent discount, making 92½ cents net. This 7½ cents discount was allowed at an early day, soon after the war, on the theory that after the stamp was put on the barrel of beer there was a certain loss by the way of the bursting of the barrel and souring of the beer which amounted to 7½ cents on a barrel, and the brewers claimed that they were entitled to a discount because the stamps which were put on the barrel were worthless. It was estimated that the loss amounted to about 7½ cents a barrel. They convinced Congress that this was the fact, and so this 7½ per cent was allowed as a rebate on the $1 down to the enactment of the Dingley tariff law in 1897.

We made considerable investigation at one time; and the committee was satisfied that whatever was the loss in 1865 and generally in the sixties, in 1897 it did not amount to 1 per cent upon the total amount of beer. In the early days there were no refrigerator cars and no refrigerators in the saloons. There was no method of keeping the beer cool except by putting it in the cellar, where of course the heat was likely to burst the barrels, so that there was considerable loss on that account. But in these days when we have refrigerator cars and when we have large refrigerators in the saloons—I have been told about these saloons [laughter]—the beer is kept cool, so that there is not this loss by the bursting of the barrels as there formerly was. I have been told by one brewer that the loss does not exceed a tenth of 1 per cent.

Our committee was convinced of the fact in 1897, and we took off this rebate of 7½ per cent and left the tax on beer at a full dollar a barrel; and we did not hear very much complaint from the brewers in reference to that matter.

When we came to frame the war-revenue bill the committee thought that beer ought to stand a tax of another dollar, and they at first fixed the tax at $2 a barrel. Finally a compromise was made with those representing the beer interests. They agreed if we would allow them 7½ per cent rebate they would cease to fight the increased taxation; so we put the rebate at 7½ per cent, which made the tax on one barrel of beer $1.85, which it is to-day. So that when any gentleman comes to you and says that in the war-revenue act the tax was increased $1, he is stating that which is not true. The tax was originally $1, and we made it $1.85 net. The increase was simply 85 cents a barrel, not a dollar a barrel.

The brewers have complained that this additional tax has made a great deal of difference in their business, and has been a great burden to them. They came before us last spring—of course before we had the statement for the fiscal year ending June 30, of last year—and showed us by the internal-revenue reports that there had been a falling off in the sale of beer in the year ending June 30, 1899, as compared with the year ending June 30, 1898; that during the latter year when the tax was $1.85 as compared with the former year when the tax was $1, there had been a falling off in the sale of beer to the extent of more than 900,000 barrels, the total sale being about 37,000,000 barrels.

They said this was on account of the tax, and they proceeded to say that the brewers were paying the whole of the additional tax; that the tax did not come out of the consumer or out of the retailer, but out of the brewer. The same gentleman made the statement about this loss on the sales of beer; and I could not get it through my head how there could be a loss in the sale of beer on account of the tax if the brewers were paying the whole tax and the customer did not pay any. Then this gentleman said that 60 per cent of the beer consumed was sold in the large cities by measure; that the retailer did not give so large a measure as he had given before, so that the retailer was not paying the tax, but was collecting it out of the consumer, and that so large a measure not being given as before accounted for the falling off in the sale of beer. Still, I do not understand the matter, and I do not think the committee did. Another gentleman came before the committee and explained the matter a little more in detail. I will read very briefly what he said on that subject:

> In your question put to our president, who preceded me, you asked him how it was that the consumption has decreased. I should answer that perhaps a little more thoroughly than he did by telling you that the brewers of the country, in trying to distribute this tax in the first place, issued little circulars showing the retailer how he could throw a portion of this tax upon the consumer; that is, by giving a certain size of glass, and showing him what size of glass to use in retailing, and also by the measure when selling beer by the pitcher or by the pail, and while the retailer said to us openly almost everywhere that he would not do that, yet, as a matter of fact, he did do it, and that has resulted very largely in the decreased consumption of the beer.

Well they finally admitted that the brewers did not pay over 40 per cent of the tax; that the balance was divided between the retailer and the consumer. I have always had some suspicion that 40 per cent is a pretty large figure, and that these gentlemen were accustomed to use language in a sort of Pickwickian sense when describing their woes, just as I have had a suspicion that the sellers of chewing gum and the manufacturers of patent medicines and the like, in detailing their woes before the committee, have always stated them for all that they were worth—probably a little more.

We expect exaggeration when men are making complaints. But I think the truth of the matter is that the wholesaler started out to collect the additional 85 cents by adding $1 to the price of his beer, but found that this would not work, because the saloon man knew that the tax was only 85 cents. So he reduced the price of the beer 15 cents a barrel, and finally a little more in particular cases, the beer tax being one of the arguments, and perhaps the dullness of trade and something else, until a reduction had been made which averaged somewhere from 5 to 40 per cent, differing in different localities. But when we came to get the report of the sales for the year ending June 30, 1900, we found that they had exceeded those of the year before by $2,748,000. Then the question came up, What made that difference? If the reduction was on account of the tax, was the increased sale also on account of the tax? If the tax produced a reduction in 1899, why not in 1900? Why this large increase in the sales, amounting to about 7 per cent?

I saw a statement in the Post the other day as coming from a responsible authority, the president of the association; and I figured back fifteen or twenty years to find that the average increase in all of the years when there was an increase—because it must be remembered that during some years there was no increase—that the average increase amounted to something like 4½ per cent, while in the past year it reached 7½ per cent, and I conclude from that statement that these gentlemen were not so terribly straitened as they are represented in the committee and by their friends to be in regard to this business. It is also a pretty good indication that the business prospers.

A statement has been made that the number of breweries has been decreased. We are told that the reduction in the number of breweries in the United States during the last year amounts to 200. And in their evidence they sustain the statements. They show that a system is going on all over the country which tends in that direction. The smaller breweries are being gradually absorbed by the larger establishments; they are being bought up by a syndicate in different towns and cities throughout the country and being consolidated. Perhaps gentlemen on the stump would call them trusts—small trusts—buying up the breweries for the purpose of controlling the beer business, giving them a new capitalization and sometimes building a large new establishment to take the place of the smaller ones which have been absorbed.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Can the gentleman from New York state the price of beer prior to the adoption of the stamp tax?

Mr. PAYNE. I will state to the gentleman that that is one of the very hardest things to find out in the world. It differs in different cities or places throughout the country. We have been told that in the smaller cities it was about $5 a barrel before the tax; but we come around to investigate and ask the price from individual brewers, and we are told that the average price is $6.25 in some places. Going later on to the retailers, they tell us that they are paying $1 a barrel more now than they paid prior to the adoption of the tax. But when we come around to the small brewers we find them complaining of the large brewers, who are selling in the cities where they are located at six, eight, or ten dollars a barrel, but when they come into the little cities and come into competition with the smaller brewers, then they put their prices down to $5 a barrel. So you see there is a wide range of difference in prices. And, I repeat, it is almost impossible to get at the exact price.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a prospectus of the La Crosse Brewing Company, at La Crosse, Wis., which is a consolidated concern composed of four smaller breweries which they bought in for the sum of $900,000. The figures in connection with the matter are interesting, and I will state them to the House.

Capital stock	$700,000.00
Mortgage bonds	500,000.00
Total capital	1,200,000.00
Cost of the four plants, and assets included	900,000.00
Cost of proposed new brewery	300,000.00
Total expenditures	1,200,000.00
Appraised value of property to be transferred	916,690.63
Profits from March 31, 1900, to be included (figured to July 1, 1900, only)	20,713.86
Capital to be placed in treasury for new plant	300,000.00
Total assets, July 1, 1900	1,237,404.49
Assured annual profit	122,113.79

Mr. COX. What is the ratio of percentage?

Mr. PAYNE. Ten per cent. Their present rate of production is 80,000 barrels per annum, and the profit of $122,000 on 80,000 barrels would be a pretty good business. This occurred during the last year, and during the depreciation in the brewery trade of which we have heard so much.

Mr. SHATTUC. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you think, in view of the statements of that prospectus, that that would be a good investment or a safe investment? Would you advise your friends to buy in?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, if this comes from honorable men, yes.

But I proceed. The actual capacity of the new brewery is to be 100,000 barrels per annum.

	Barrels.
Present rate of production	80,000
Actual capacity of the new brewery per annum	100,000

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended until he concludes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOPKINS). Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE (reading):

Agencies and saloons controlled by the consolidation (60 per cent of the present sales go through these channels)	129
Proposed division of assured annual profit on present business:
Six per cent interest on bonds	$30,000.00
Sinking fund	9,450.00
Cash dividend, 8 per cent on stock	56,000.00
Surplus for extending business	26,663.79
Total	122,113.79

Mr. SULZER. What is the capitalization of that company?

Mr. PAYNE. One million two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. Otto C. Wolfe, of Philadelphia, the leading brewery architect in America, has estimated, in papers on file, that a modern brewery of the most approved plan, with an actual annual capacity of 100,000 barrels, can be built and equipped at a cost not exceeding $500,000, and that 80,000 barrels of beer can annually be produced in such a brewery at $1.38 per barrel.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes. I would rather read this statement and then hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. SULZER. Very well.

Mr. PAYNE (reading):

This estimate on cost of production is confirmed, as Mr. Wolfe states, by one of the leading brewers in Philadelphia. We take this estimate as a basis, although, as a matter of fact, it is figured on a higher cost for material than exists at La Crosse. It is known that the actual cost of production, as attested by several modern breweries located in this section of the Northwest, runs below $1.30 per barrel. The chief purpose of the new company is to secure the benefits of this economy. The sales of the four breweries for the first half of the present year show an output of at least 80,000 barrels. The reduction in the cost of brewing 80,000 barrels from $2.04 per barrel, under existing circumstances, down to $1.38 per barrel or below, will afford an annual saving of not less than $52,800. The average annual net profit at present in the four breweries is certified by the accountants to be $69,313.79.

That is, the annual net profit to-day under existing circumstances is $69,000 for the four breweries which were put into this capitalization at $900,000, and I suppose there is often water put even into beer stock.

By adding the saving in cost of production alone, as set forth above, on 80,000 barrels per year in the new plant, the profits will be $122,113.79 annually.

Then follows a recapitulation. Now, I will hear the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the consumers of the beer are compelled to pay this additional tax?

Mr. PAYNE. I think they pay a portion of it; how much I have not been able to find out.

Mr. SULZER. Is not the brewer a mere collector for Uncle Sam? Does he not charge the retailer the additional tax per barrel, and does not the retailer charge the consumer so much more per glass or so much more per bottle?

Mr. PAYNE. I think very often the manufacturer pays the whole of the tax and I think that very often he does not.

Mr. SULZER. I would state for the information of the gentleman——

Mr. PAYNE. I did not ask the gentleman to make any statement. I only yielded for a question, not a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, I have a letter written by a brewer from one of the small breweries, situated in the State of Ohio. This is addressed to me and dated December 3 of this year. He says:

ADAM SCHANTZ RIVERSIDE BREWERY,
Dayton, Ohio, December 3, 1900.

Hon. S. E. PAYNE,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: The following, quoting Mr. Joe Miller, of Cincinnati, Ohio (secretary Ohio Brewers' Association), taken from the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, explains itself:

"WHAT THE WAR TAX WILL DO IF THAT TAX IS NOT REPEALED.

"Said Mr. Miller this evening:

"'It will mean that the small brewers will be forced out of the business, and the industry will be in the hands of a monopoly; there are some 300 breweries in the hands of receivers, and there is no line of industry in the country which shows such a percentage.'"

In my judgment, there was never a more deceiving statement made than appears in those few lines. I claim the contrary. The smaller brewers, of whom I am one, never feared the war tax half as much as the unfair competitors. It is more the fault of the big brewers, who for years have forced their beer into the neighborhood of their smaller competitors at such ruinous prices and methods, that the smaller brewer was unable to compete. These big brewers have for years bought real estate in the cities before the eyes of the smaller and weaker competitors at 100 per cent more than the actual value of the properties, boasting of their rich concerns and the millions behind them. Now they see how unwisely they have acted. Not one-half of their properties bring them a percentage, and this extra war tax and other expenses make them howl. Take off the war tax and you will drive the smaller brewers to the wall and help the larger ones to their monopoly.

Inclosed herewith find a copy of a communication addressed to the "Dingley committee and Senators" several years ago. I have not changed my mind one iota.

If a brewer does business on a fair basis and does not uphold a set of people who have helped to disgrace our business, they are being well enough paid with a continuance of the war tax.

Should you find a reduction desirable, I would consider it advisable to allow a rebate of 15 cents on a dollar, or 30 cents on a barrel, instead of 7½ cents on a dollar, or 15 cents on a barrel (as now), which I think should be agreeable to all.

Yours, truly, ADAM SCHANTZ.

ANOTHER SIDE TO THE BEER ISSUE.

(Copy mailed to Hon. Nelson Dingley and Hon. MARCUS A. HANNA.)

ADAM SCHANTZ RIVERSIDE BREWERY,
Dayton, Ohio, December 10, 1898.

It is not the war tax that hurts the big brewers. It is caused by the business methods of those great "I am's" (rule or ruin). They think there are no others. For years they have had their own way, and now that they are forced to do a legitimate business or lose money they kick. For example, they sell their beer in the cities where they are located at $7 to $8 per barrel, but they ship it hundreds of miles from home for $5.50 to $6 per barrel, paying freight, furnishing ice, also loss of cooperage and other expenses, amounting in all to about $1 per barrel, all to the detriment of the small brewers.

Now, competitors, this is a world of progress. You must shape your business accordingly. Give the minnows a chance to live. If you don't, you must bear the consequences. After the storm will be calm. Don't worry about it. Pay it without complaining.

We are living in the greatest country in the world, if we aren't all millionaires and sell 1,000,000 barrels a year. Have faith in our Administration and all will be well at the proper time.

ADAM SCHANTZ.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will you kindly say who wrote that letter?

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection whatever. It was sent to me as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. The name of the writer is Adam Schantz, Riverside Brewery, Dayton, Ohio.

Now, that is a specimen of some of the letters we have received and some of the evidence we have taken into consideration.

Mr. SULZER. I presume he is a Republican brewer.

Mr. STEELE. I hope he is.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether he is a Republican or a Democrat; if a Republican, all the better for that; if a modern Democrat, God help him. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. There are not any Democrats; they have gone in with the Populists.

Mr. PAYNE. I mean the real old-fashioned Democrats.

Mr. SULZER. If they go on as they are, the modern Democrats will soon be in the majority.

Mr. PAYNE. They are growing beautifully less by degrees.

Now, to return to the beer question. The committee heard all of the allegations of the brewers; whenever they were in the city and desired a hearing they were heard. When there were only two members of the committee we heard them in conversation, as we heard the representatives of other industries in that way. Although we had no general hearings at that time, we went over all they had to say, and I have read faithfully all the correspondence that has come to the committee on this subject, and I say that when we make that reduction of 25 cents a barrel, we have made all the concession in this tax that we ought to make, and all that this interest, under the present circumstances, has any right to ask of this Congress. That makes a reduction of nearly $10,090,000—nine million eight hundred and odd thousand dollars—in the war-revenue bill. It gives the largest reduction to them of any interest.

We have taken nothing off tobacco except half a dollar on cigars, and yet the tax on tobacco was doubled by the war-revenue bill. We have taken nothing off of cigarettes, and yet the tax was trebled on cigarettes under the war-revenue act. We have made this concession because these gentlemen have claimed so strenuously that this tax was destroying their business. We do not mean to destroy anybody's business under a war-revenue act or any other act. We were after the revenue which the Government was entitled to. At the same time we are not engaged in any moral reform or crusade. In apportioning these taxes on the different industries and the different people of the country we have looked at it as a business proposition. In making these changes in the war-revenue act the committee has sought to do even-handed justice to all interests.

We think that before another dollar is taken off beer there are other taxes on this schedule that should be reduced more than the 30 per cent that was reduced upon this tax upon beer. The total additional tax is 85 cents. Thirty per cent of that is 25½ cents. We have a reduction of 25 cents a barrel by this bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House and to the committee with confidence that we have done the right thing and gone to the last dollar that we should go in this bill in the reduction of war revenue. The minority of the committee say that we should make a reduction of $70,000,000. They do not give any reason for it. They do not present any bill to the House in their report as a substitute for the one we have presented here.

It is only a short time ago that the minority of the committee contended that all this war-revenue tax should go, and in place thereof there should be an income tax to be levied upon the incomes of the country, overlooking the fact that there is now upon the statute books the Wilson income-tax law, which has never been repealed because the decision of the Supreme Court has destroyed it, and forgetting that if the new income-tax law went before the Supreme Court to-day, they would have the same court and the same decision that they had on the Wilson bill. Why, they have even dared to pose before the country—a portion of them—in favor of going into a lawsuit to raise revenues to supply the deficiencies in the Treasury which the $105,000,000 reduction would leave, in order to get enough revenue to run the Government.

Well, now, this side does not believe in any such financial legislation as that. They propose in their report to take more of the tax off beer. They gave no reason for it; and they would take the tax off tobacco until they reduce the revenue by $70,000,000. I do not know but what that is the Democratic doctrine. I remember under the Wilson bill that we met a deficiency every 30th day of June. I do not know but what that is the financing of the Democratic party when they come in here to-day and ask us to face a deficiency in June, 1902, by taking off $70,000,000 of revenue.

Oh, they say, the revenues are increasing. Yes, but the increased revenue is because of the increased prosperity of the country. You have been predicting that the time would soon come when that prosperity would cease. Still you propose to reduce the war taxation on the theory that that prosperity is to continue during the next four years. Well, I believe it will, so far as our domestic matters are concerned, and any internal arrangement confined to the people of this country. I believe it will continue four years as it has in the past; but there may be some complications abroad that will stop it, and you do not take that into consideration.

I do not want to see any deficit in the revenues of the country. Gentlemen say you have a large surplus in the Treasury. So we have, one hundred and forty millions; not all available—probably one hundred and twenty millions of it available. They say that will be increased by the 30th of June. So it will. But is it a part of your statesmanship to foster and keep that in the Treasury against a future deficiency and then go to work deliberately and create that deficiency? Gentlemen must remember that this decrease in the revenue laws does not begin until the first of the next year, and it will operate only for a reduction upon the remainder of the fiscal year and have small effect upon the amount of money in the Treasury up to the 30th of June next. It is for the future that we are looking out. It is for the years 1902 and 1903, and when we look to them I believe we have gone to the limit of safety in reducing the war taxes. We are unwilling for the committee to go any further in that reduction and run any risk on that account.

What are we going to do with the money in the Treasury? We are going to adopt the good old-fashioned Republican way of paying debts with the money in the Treasury.

A MEMBER. Bonds are high.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; but not as high as the interest we shall have to pay if we keep the bonds out and keep paying the interest every year, and not receive any interest on the money. If we have too much in the Treasury, it is an easy way to pay off the bonds and add it to the sinking fund. I hope to live to see the day when all the indebtedness of the United States is wiped out in full, and we commence with a clean balance sheet. I never believed that a national debt was a national blessing any more than a private debt is a private blessing.

A MEMBER. Would you go into the market and buy the bonds?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; as we have always done, by fixing the price that we would pay for the bonds. We have done that before and the country has approved of it. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. PAYNE. I will.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I did not wish to interrupt the gentleman during the discussion, but I would like to ask one or two questions in reference to these estimates. As I understand from the figures of the Secretary of the Treasury, which the committee have adopted, the expenditures estimated for 1902 are $83,000,000 in excess of the estimated expenditures for 1901, leaving an estimated surplus of only $26,000,000 for the year 1902.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman is right in round numbers.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. So, if we should base our expenditures for the year 1902 upon the estimate for 1901, this law remaining in force, it would show a surplus of $109,000,000 for the year 1902.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. In other words, estimating our expenditures for 1902 on the basis of 1901, the surplus under this law would be $109,000,000, and six months of 1901 are still on the basis of the estimation. Taking the actual expenses of the year just closed, the estimated expenses for 1902 are over $100,000,000 in excess of the actual expenses of the year 1900, which, with the difference of the $26,000,000 estimated surplus, makes for 1902, under this law, provided we kept our expenses within that of last year, 1900, a surplus of $126,000,000. Would it not?

Mr. PAYNE. I am not a lightning calculator, but I presume the gentleman's figures are correct.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. So that the $126,000,000 for the year 1902 added to the $80,000,000 for 1901 and to the $80,000,000 for 1900 would leave a surplus in the Treasury, if this law was in force, of $286,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1902?

Mr. PAYNE. With all your ifs, yes.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. If we cut this war-revenue taxation $40,000,000 and the reduction goes into effect the 1st of next January, in the eighteen months between that time and July 1, 1902, we take out $60,000,000 and we would have a surplus of $236,000,000, if this law were to remain in force, on the 30th of June, 1902?

Mr. PAYNE. Is that all?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. No; that was just preliminary——

Mr. PAYNE. I want to answer your question when you get through.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I am endeavoring to elicit information which I think would be very acceptable to the House. On page 12 of the Secretary's report, in making this estimate for 1902, he places the military establishment——

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the gentleman ought to inject a speech here, because the House has granted me the courtesy of an extension, which I ought not to abuse.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I do not wish to trespass upon the courtesy of the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. If the question is not too long, I am perfectly willing to answer it.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I do think we would all like to have a little fuller explanation in detail of these figures for the estimated expenditures for 1902. The estimate for the military establishment proper is one hundred and thirteen and a half millions. Under public works there is an estimate for the military establishment of fifty-one millions. What is that for?

Mr. PAYNE. That means rivers and harbors and fortifications.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Then under "Miscellaneous" there is a further estimate of the War Department for five millions. What is that for?

Mr. PAYNE. I simply answer the gentleman that that is "miscellaneous." I can not answer the gentleman more definitely than that.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The estimate for the naval establishment is $70,800,000—$11,000,000 more than for 1901.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that is very low.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. And under "Public works" there is a further estimate of $16,000,000 for the Navy. Can the gentleman inform us what is covered by that $16,000,000 estimate?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether I can or not. I only know that the two items represent the maintenance of the Navy—the expense of keeping ships in commission—the pay, and matters of that kind, and the increased construction in the Navy which I explained at the beginning of my remarks, which will be very enormous during the coming fiscal year and the year following, on account of the passage of the bill last year, which the gentleman will remember, and on account of the contract for armor plate.

Mr. STEELE. And for manning the vessels that go into commission.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; of course. There is, I will say, a large increase in the estimate for sailors, etc., for manning the vessels—a very large increase. It has been estimated that the cost on this account will be doubled. I do not say that that is the official estimate of the Department, but officers of the Navy say that there ought to be double the number of men now in service to take care of the ships we now have. The Secretary does not estimate for doubling the number of men, but for a large increase in that force; and it would seem to be imperative that the force be increased, if we are to take care of the vessels.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. There is another quite substantial item that does not appear in the report of 1900 or 1901, and that is the miscellaneous item of $27,000,000 after the full estimates for all the departments of the Government. Is there any information as to that large item?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the fiscal year 1900 has passed into history; we know what we have paid and what we have received in that year. The fiscal year 1901 does not end until the 30th of next June. The appropriations have already been made except the deficiency appropriations, and the time has arrived when those deficiency estimates can be made with a great deal of accuracy.

I do not think the Secretary of the Treasury will be found much out of the way in his estimates for the expenses of 1901. The year has so far progressed; the appropriations have been made; he knows what the Congress has done in the way of general appropriations; and the deficiencies have been so nearly estimated for, that he can not be very far out of the way in his estimates of 1901. In reading the Postmaster-General's report the other day I saw a discrepancy between that and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. I thought that the Postmaster-General would really need more funds than he estimated for during the current year. But that is a matter of but small moment.

I think there is liable to be an increase rather than a decrease of these deficiencies for this year. As to the next year, as I said in the opening of my remarks, what will be the expenses and what will be the revenues is somewhat problematical. Should the figures increase in the customs and internal revenues, and should the figures show an increase upon the item of postal receipts, which I believe will be the case, I think there may be an increase of $25,000,000; but I believe the natural growth of the country will absorb that increase in increased expenditure.

In addition to the expenses of this year we have the expenses for the construction of the Navy, which will be as heavy in 1902, and heavier than they have ever been in our history, owing to the contracts recently made for armor plate and the bids recently opened for this large increase in the Navy authorized by the last naval bill, the larger portion of which expenditure will come in the years 1902 and 1903.

Mr. LACEY. How much of this increase is due to the fact that we have suspended work on the Navy for the last two years?

Mr. PAYNE. I have not figured that out.

Mr. LACEY. That would make a considerable item, would it not?

Mr. PAYNE. It would amount to a very large sum; tens of millions.

In addition to these other expenses we shall have to remove 65,000 troops from the Philippine Islands to this country and give them two months' extra pay. On the 1st of July next we have got to bring them home, and I believe the law has already provided for giving them two months' extra pay. That would involve a large expenditure. In addition to that we must recruit 75,000 men to take the place of those whose terms of enlistment will expire. It will require much money to equip these new troops and carry them to the Philippine Islands. A part of this increase is calculated upon that vast expenditure. I notice that the estimate for the military establishment—that is, for taking care of the 100,000 men—is practically the same for 1901 and 1902. The increased items of expenditure estimated by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are based largely upon these items.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can inform the committee how much it costs to bring a soldier home from the Philippines or to take one there?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not.

Mr. GAINES. Now, Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the gentleman said that a national debt was not a national blessing, and he hoped sooner or later to see the entire national debt wiped out. I agree with him in that. But would not that be an operation that would require the payment of all of the outstanding bonds?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES. Then what becomes of your national banking system?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, we will construct a banking bill when the time comes. We will cross the bridge when we reach it. The gentleman need have no apprehension that we will not make one which will be satisfactory to the business interests of the country, if we are in power.

Mr. GAINES. So, then, the gentleman admits that he must construct another banking system to take the place of this one if we were fortunate enough to get rid of the national debt?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; the gentleman can leave it safely to the Republican party to do the work.

Mr. GAINES. But the national banks can not live, according to the gentleman's own showing, without a public debt.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to thank the gentleman in charge of the bill for his courtesy in explaining these items, but it seems to me that the estimated surplus for 1902 is very low.

Now, I wish to ask one more question—whether I understood him correctly to say that he approved of the use of the surplus resulting from the war-revenue tax for the purpose of retiring the outstanding bonds of the Government. Would the gentleman advocate that policy?

Mr. PAYNE. There is no danger of it. We can not do it.

A MEMBER. Why?

Mr. PAYNE. Because there would not be enough of it left to pay the cost of the operation. Because the expenditures which will necessarily continue for some time, and which the report of Governor Dingley so ably deals with, will necessarily go on for a long time. For instance, we must have 50,000 men on account of the war. It will take almost the entire $65,000,000 surplus to pay for that expenditure alone. In addition to this it would not pay the interest on the public debt outstanding. I answer my friend, therefore, that we can not pursue the policy of using the war revenue to retire the bonds, because war expenditures will use it all, and more. I do believe, though, that when the last act of Congress remits the tax proposed, constituting the most of this war revenue, there may be found some tax there that Congress will see fit to continue definitely, permanently, as a means of raising revenue for the Government.

The necessity of that system, and the value of it, was established during the civil war. It was found that there were many taxes then imposed as war taxes which were good taxes to continue in time of peace. But what they will be, where they will strike, how they will be levied—I have not studied the question and am unable to say. But many of the revenues raised by the Government in times of peace originated in the time of the civil war. It should be remembered that at that time we also had a higher tariff. We had the Morrill tariff in operation, the highest tariff that we had ever had in the history of the country. We had the beer tax, and that was continued in time of peace; we had the whisky tax, and that was kept up—a tax which originated during the civil war—and I might refer to many other taxes of the same character.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Of course.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Secretary of the Treasury shows that the receipts for the year 1900 were, in round numbers, $669,000,000, and that we had a surplus of $79,000,000. Now, for the present year the receipts will be $687,000,000 and the surplus eighty million. For 1902 the same Secretary estimates the receipts to be seven hundred and sixteen million—a very large increase, as the gentleman will see.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; larger than we will probably receive.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, what I wanted to ask the gentleman was, Why, with a revenue of six hundred and sixty-nine millions at one time, we had a surplus of seventy-nine millions; with receipts of six hundred and eighty-seven millions at another time, we had a surplus of eighty millions; and yet, with an estimated revenue of seven hundred and sixteen millions, we are only to have twenty-six millions surplus in 1902? Will the gentleman explain that?

Mr. PAYNE. It is evident the gentleman from Tennessee wants to anticipate his speech——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). And I wish to say to him that I have gone over this ground twice, fully and thoroughly, and if the gentleman did me the honor to listen he would have had an answer to his question already.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the gentleman from New York is so able and so courteous that I wanted to see if I understood him thoroughly.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think I ought to take up any more of the time of the committee, and will not endeavor to repeat the speech or that part of it to which the gentleman refers. It will be published in the RECORD, and the gentleman can read it in the quiet of the afternoon at his leisure, and I am satisfied he will find his questions answered fully.

Mr. LEVY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question before he resumes his seat.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well.

Mr. LEVY. Do you think it wise policy to pay the bonded indebtedness of the United States—I mean buying the bonds of the United States—at high prices, and for that purpose use the surplus fund that may be in the Treasury?

Mr. PAYNE. I think when we have a surplus not collected from the war-revenue act—because there never was a moment when that act was sufficient to meet all of the ordinary expenses of the war, except possibly during the last three or four months—and when we have a large surplus in the Treasury coming from the original Dingley bill, it is wise for the Government of the United States to buy the bonds at any price, less than the principal and interest which we will be required to pay, and turn them into the sinking fund. I trust that answers the question of the gentleman.

Mr. LEVY. Do you claim that the entire surplus has resulted from the Dingley bill?

Mr. PAYNE. I claim there has not been a time when the war-revenue bill has ever paid the expenses of running the war, except, perhaps, in the last six months.

Mr. STEELE. Not then; not by a good deal.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think there has ever been a time when it has paid the expenses of the war.

[Mr. PAYNE here resumed his seat, amid applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

WAR REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

[Mr. SWANSON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desired to offer some remarks upon the pending measure, but by reason of the fact that we have been informed by the representative of the Doorkeeper that it is important they should now have the use of the Hall for the purpose of decoration, I move, therefore, that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12394, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMITTEE ON WESTPOINT INVESTIGATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submits the following appointments, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Special Committee of Investigation under the resolution adopted by the House December 11, 1900:

Mr. MARSH, Mr. WANGER, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. DRIGGS, and Mr. CLAYTON of New York.

CLAIM OF BENJAMIN WEIL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, showing the return to the Government of Mexico of the unexpended balance of the award in favor of Benjamin Weil, made by the United States and Mexican Claims Commission, established under the convention of July 4, 1868.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 11, 1900.

STATUE OF LAFAYETTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, respecting the unveiling at Paris, France, on July 4, 1900, of the statue of Lafayette provided by the contributions of school children of the United States.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 11, 1900.

The message and accompanying papers were ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn, as I understand it is necessary in order to clear out the Hall and get ready for to-morrow. I believe the understanding is that the adjournment is until 3.15 to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 3.15 p. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, blue-print copies of two charts to accompany Colonel Smith's estimates for improvement of Cleveland Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, 1900.

The Senate met at 3 o'clock p. m.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. I make the motion because the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] desires to address the Senate to-morrow on the subsidy bill, and as we have a special order for 3 o'clock, it is necessary to get the extra hour in order to dispose of that and other business.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. HALE. While waiting for notice from the House of Representatives that it is ready to receive the Senate, I will ask the Senate to remain for a short time without taking a recess. The message will be here in a few moments, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Petitions and memorials are in order. If there be none, reports of committees are in order.

Mr. MONEY. I thought when we adjourned yesterday to meet to-day it was the understanding that no business would be transacted. Am I mistaken about that order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Journal does not show it.

Mr. CULLOM. That was the understanding.

Mr. HALE. It was undoubtedly the understanding of the Senate that no business should be transacted to-day, as the other body does no business to-day, because it was made a legal holiday. Therefore I hope that no formal business will be received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be the order.

After a delay of ten minutes,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 3 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.). The Chair is informed that the messenger from the other House is now here.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives, there to take part in the ceremonials of the day.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 6 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 13, 1900, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, 1900.

The House met, pursuant to adjournment, at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., and was called to order by the Speaker, the Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON.

On taking the chair the Speaker was greeted with the applause of members.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for our country, its incomparable past, its vast resources, its magnificent proportions, and the promise of its perpetuity and future glory; for this beautiful city, the seat of our Government, which through all the vicissitudes of the past has added to its proportions until it promises to be not only the most beautiful, but the most interesting and influential city in all the world.

We invoke Thy blessing upon the exercises of the day which commemorates its hundredth anniversary. We are not unmindful of the struggles, the sacrifices, the heroic deeds of our fathers, who laid the foundation of our Government deep and strong and broad, and that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

Help us to emulate the virtues of our fathers; to be watchful, zealous, patriotic, that we may grow to yet vaster proportions, greater usefulness and influence, and Thine shall be the praise Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CAPITAL CENTENNIAL EXERCISES.

This being the time appointed by law for a joint convention of the Senate and House of Representatives to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the permanent seat of government in the District of Columbia and of the first session of Congress held in the permanent capital,

At 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. appeared—

The President pro tempore and the Senate of the United States.

The Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court.

The ambassadors and ministers to the United States.

The governors of the several States and Territories and their staffs.

The President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet.

The SPEAKER. In pursuance of a message from the President, and legislation that followed, provision was made for the centennial celebration of the first session of Congress in the city of Washington, and of the locating of the seat of government in this city and District. Committees duly appointed in pursuance of this legislation have made out a programme for the exercises on this day. Under that programme we are assembled here, and it is made the duty of the Speaker of the House to call this assembly to order, and to ask the Rev. Dr. MILBURN, Chaplain of the United States Senate, to offer prayer.

The Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, we worship Thee, we give thanks to Thee, O Lord God, Heavenly King, God the Father Almighty.

Thus have Thy people in all ages of our era chanted or said the angels' song; and we, in this latest birth of time, come to join our hearts and voices in this latest ascription of honors to Thee. Especially are we moved to this devotion when we behold the marvels which Thou hast wrought in this our country within the last hundred years; a nation of 3,000,000 people, huddled in lowly places of residence, grown to well-nigh fourscore millions and one of the powers of the earth; and this city, from an insignificant and almost squalid village, grown to be one of the fairest and stateliest capitals of the world, challenging the admiration and the homage of all well-informed and traveled people.

For these Thy gifts and the promises which they contain, we join in the angels' song—

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men.

And now we humbly ask Thy blessing upon this notable assembly; upon the first and most eminent citizen of the land, our honored President, and the members of his official family; upon the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court; upon the President and all members of the Senate; upon the Speaker and all members of the House of Representatives; upon the chief men of the Army and the Navy of the country; upon the gathering of governors, the heads of the sovereign States of this great Republic; upon all who are engaged in the making, the interpretation, and the execution of the laws.

Nor would we forget the public-spirited citizens who have moved in this matter and brought it to so admirable a conclusion. And we humbly come to Thee, in our hearts and best desires asking Thy blessing upon the ambassadors and ministers of the foreign nations and powers with whom we are at peace and amity. And upon this great concourse of men and women who represent the masses of our country from sea to sea let Thy loving-kindness descend and abide.

And so, moved in heart with unutterable gratitude for all Thy benefits, we cry "Allelnia, for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

All of which, in praise and prayer to Thee, we offer in the name and mediation of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

The SPEAKER. It is also made the duty of the Speaker to introduce the President of the Senate, Mr. FRYE, to preside during the further execution of this programme.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses are in joint convention to hold commemorative exercises in honor of the centennial anniversary of the first session of Congress in the permanent capital of our country.

You will now listen to an address by Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, a Representative from the State of Tennessee, his subject being the "Transfer of the national capital from Philadelphia."

[On rising, Mr. RICHARDSON was greeted with applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. President, it is a matter of the sincerest congratulation to us all on this auspicious occasion that there is assembled in this historic Chamber, the official home of the representatives of the people, this splendid audience, comprising in part the governors of the States, the Lieutenant-General of the Army, the Admiral of the Navy, detachments of the Army, Navy, the Marine Corps, and National State Guards; the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the diplomatic corps, resident with us; the members of the several courts of the District of Columbia, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, the Senate, and with his Cabinet of constitutional advisers, the Chief Magistrate of our beloved country.

The occasion for bringing together so large a number of illustrious public men and officials can not be without great national significance. As a nation we have just emerged from a fierce contest between the different parties for political supremacy, which was characterized in most quarters by manly warfare. This political struggle ended as similar contests have heretofore had their sequel, in bringing unhappy regrets and disappointments to many, while it brought contentment and joy to others. It is a source of pride to every patriotic American who loves his country and her institutions that when these periodical battles come around, although the conflict may have raged with desperation while the heat of the struggle was on, yet when the victory is won "liberty has not lost but gained in strength," and every man from the highest to the humblest in the land dutifully accepts the result and loyally upholds the verdict reached. [Applause.] But the cause of our coming together is wholly apart from our recent contest. We are here to take part in a highly interesting ceremony—"the celebration of the centennial anniversary of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia."

The First Congress under the Constitution assembled in the city of New York in 1789. One of the first questions which engrossed the attention of the Congress and the country was, Where shall the seat of government be located? This question was debated with acrimony and bitterness, and in the minds of some of the participants therein much sectional feeling was engendered. Such subjects always excite warmth in debate and more or less of irritation. It has been charged that the location of the capital was the result of a bargain between the contending sides in the Congress. If it was not an express bargain, it was the direct result of a compromise between the factions. The plan of compromising for a result so early instituted in our history has never been abandoned, and I fear is too often resorted to by those who are looking out for special objects. Alexander Hamilton, in his full manhood, with all his ability, was then endeavoring to have Congress assume the debts of the several States of the Union, which had come to them as legacies of the great Revolution. He eloquently maintained that the public debt was "the price of liberty." His plan of assumption was rejected by Congress. The excitement resulting therefrom ran so high and the public feeling was so greatly embittered it seemed that the experiment of a general government had failed. It was said that Congress assembled thereafter every morning as usual, but only to adjourn at once, as the two sides were "too much out of temper to do business together." The question was largely the North versus the South; centralization against the rights and dignity of the State governments. Hamilton refused to submit to the verdict reached, and kept up his fight, while Madison and those who stood with him resolutely resisted him. Late in his life Mr. Madison, in giving his version of this parting of company with Hamilton, said—> that the purpose of the latter was to commit the Government to a policy totally different from that which he and I both knew perfectly well had been understood and intended by the Convention which framed the Constitution and by the people in adopting it.

In the emergency upon them a compromise was effected, the details of which I will omit, but the result was that Hamilton and his friends carried assumption, and the capital was located on the Potomac. Prior to this action a measure had almost gone through Congress to fix the seat of government at Wrights Ferry, on the Susquehanna. This place is within the State of Pennsylvania and within the Congressional district represented by Mr. ZIEGLER. It is now known as Wrightsville. By a census of this town which I remember to have seen not very many years ago, it contained "two sawmills and 1,310 inhabitants."

We learn that the members from New England and New York agreed in proposing Wrights Ferry, and claimed it was the point nearest the center of population and wealth, and that it would remain so indefinitely. For many days this location appeared to have a better chance of becoming the capital than either Harrisburg, Baltimore, New York, Germantown, Philadelphia, or any other place proposed. Wrights Ferry was shown in the debate to be the veritable "hub of the universe," a region favored by nature above all others. One gentleman advocating the location there claimed that not merely the soil, the water, and the "advantages of nature were unsurpassed," but he said:

> If honorable gentlemen were disposed to pay much attention to a dish of fish, he could assure them their table might be furnished with fine and good from the waters of the Susquehanna.

Mr. Madison favored the shores of the Potomac as the place, and insisted the location should be in a central position, geographically speaking. The first reason assigned by him was that the Government would expend probably a half million dollars, and every citizen should partake of this advantage as equally as nature had rendered it possible. And further he said:

> If it were possible to promulgate our laws by some instantaneous operation, it would be of less consequence in that point of view where the Government might be placed.

Upon a vote being taken in the House the advocates of Wrights Ferry on the Susquehanna triumphed, but the Senate amended the bill by inserting "Germantown." The House would not accept the amendment and the session ended without an agreement. The subject was brought forward again in the spring of 1790, and after something of a repetition of the proceedings of the former session the compromise was made by which it was agreed that assumption should prevail and that the capital should go permanently to the southern location on the banks of the Potomac. Accordingly, on July 16, 1790, Congress passed the act which provided among other things—> that a district of territory not exceeding 10 miles square, to be located as hereafter directed on the river Potomac at some place between the mouths of the Eastern Branch and Conogocheague, be, and the same is hereby, accepted for the permanent seat of the government of the United States.

And further provided—> that prior to the first Monday in December next, all offices attached to the seat of government of the United States shall be removed to, and until the first said Monday in December in the year 1800, shall remain at the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, at which place the session of Congress next ensuing to the present shall be held.

The act was amended March 3, 1791, by which it was provided that the lines were to be so run as to include a portion of the territory below the mouth of the Eastern Branch. It was also provided that the public buildings should be erected on the Maryland side of the Potomac River.

Mr. Hamilton and his followers were made happy by the passage of the assumption act, the national credit was established and made sure, and has never since been shaken—except temporarily—and we all trust is destined to stand unimpaired so long as the Republic survives. [Applause.] The hopes of the other localities—Harrisburg, Baltimore, New York, Germantown, and Wrights Ferry—to become the seat of government were forever blasted and Philadelphia was put off by being given a temporary blessing of ten years' short duration.

The preparations for the removal began at an early date after the passage of the act of January 16, 1790. Under the law three commissioners were appointed by the President on January 22, 1791, to survey the territory for the District. The States of Maryland and Virginia, respectively, having passed acts of cession, the survey was made, and on March 30, 1791, the President, by formal proclamation, declared and made known the territory 10 miles square for the District.

On September 18, 1793, the corner stone of the Capitol building was laid by President Washington with imposing ceremonies. A procession, consisting—with others—of Free Masons and of the military and civil authorities, took appropriate parts in these ceremonies. The Masons were represented by the Grand Lodge of Maryland, and by Lodge No. 22, of Alexandria, Va. Washington delivered an address. After the ceremonies ended all partook of a barbecue feast prepared for the occasion.

In pursuance of law, in May, 1800, the ten years having expired, the archives and general offices of the Federal Government were removed to Washington, and hence my subject to-day, "The transfer of the national capital from Philadelphia to Washington." I need not go further than I have, as my subject does not require it, into the assignment of reasons why the capital was transferred to Washington, the motives which caused the removal, and the arguments which were potential in bringing it about. I shall not recite at length the details of the removal. We learn that on May 28, 1800, a notice was posted on the office door of the Secretary of State in Philadelphia, of which the following is a copy:

> The office of the Department of State will be removed this day from Philadelphia. All letters and applications are therefore to be addressed to that Department at the city of Washington from this date.

President Adams had left Philadelphia the preceding day, and made the journey to Washington overland. The books, papers, furniture, etc., of the Government were brought by water transportation and landed at one of the wharves, and thence carted to the several offices. Washington was then a mere village and poorly prepared to entertain the officers of the Government, although the number was small. The employees for the first year in the new city apportioned among the Departments were as follows: State Department, 8 clerks; Treasury Department, 75; War Department, 17; Navy Department, 16, and Post-Office Department, 10, making in all 126 clerks. The total sum paid in salaries in that year was $125,881.

The population of this city was estimated to be about 3,000. The statistics show that on May 15, 1800, there were 109 brick and 253 framed houses in the city. One gentleman describing it said:

> It is the best city in the world for a future residence.

And he added:

> We want nothing here but houses, cellars, kitchens, well-informed men, amiable women, and other little trifles of this kind, to make our city perfect.

[Laughter and applause.]

Although this description was given to the public, we are not informed that anyone made protest against the classification of well-informed men and amiable women with cellars and kitchens, and the characterization of all of them as small trifles. Another gentleman writing to his friend announced that he was thoroughly reconciled to the change from Philadelphia to Washington. He said:

> Provisions are plenty, good enough, and cheaper than in Philadelphia. You can buy a peck of field strawberries for a five-penny bit, and garden at 11 cents a quart. Vegetation is at least two weeks earlier than in Philadelphia. The situation is beautiful and this season is extremely pleasant. For myself I do not regret the removal.

It is a matter of some regret that this writer of history did not tell us whether it was because strawberries were earlier and cheaper here, or because the situation was more beautiful and the climate more salubrious than in Philadelphia, that he was constrained not to regret the transfer.

The removal was an epoch in the life of the young nation. It was somewhat akin to that interesting and highly important event in the life of the youthful bride and groom when they choose their home and settle down permanently under their own roof tree to fight the battle of life and work out their destiny. We know that the actors in this removal came hither with a resolute will to lay broad and deep the foundations of the Republic which is to endure while time lasts; a Republic which rests upon the Declaration of 1776 and the sublime principle it happily inculcates, that governments are instituted among men to secure certain unalienable rights, the chiefest of which are life, liberty, and happiness, and that they derive their just powers from the consent of the governed [applause]; a Republic the asylum for the oppressed of all nations; a Republic the counselor, guide, and model of lovers of liberty everywhere; a Republic the friend and well wisher of all nations, the ally of none.

They came to build a city not only beautiful to look upon and delightful to reside in, but which for works of art shall surpass Rome herself; for universities, colleges, and other educational opportunities shall equal the capital of the German Empire; and in all things that go to make a capital lovely, charming, and attractive to the eye shall outstrip the renowned city of France.

At the date of this removal the limits of our country were exceedingly narrow. The Mississippi River was the western boundary, and we had no outlet on the south to the Gulf. The young nation was then hemmed in on the north by the Great Lakes and on the east by the Atlantic Ocean, of all of which England was the proud master; by the Mississippi on the west, beyond which lay the possessions of France, the strongest power of Europe. Those possessions were then—

> A solitude of vast extent, untouched
> By hand of art; where nature sowed herself
> And reaped her crops.

On the south, Spain held the territory between us and the Gulf. Within these narrow limits the young nation was held and confined like a caged lion when the fierce contest came for supremacy in the Union between the two great political parties of that date, the Republican under Jefferson and Madison and the Federalist under Adams and Hamilton. This contest was raging with bitterness during the year 1800, and reached a climax on March 4, 1801, in the inauguration of Thomas Jefferson as the third President of the United States. The removal was within less than a twelvemonth from the death of Washington, the hero, warrior, and patriot of the Revolution. The country had not been able to recover from the shock and had not had time to react from the period of sadness and gloom caused by the intelligence of his death, which had not only sent a thrill of emotion throughout the length and breadth of America, but in whose honor the mighty fleets of England lowered their unconquered flag, and in whose memory the young soldier of France, then in the first flush of his glory, ordered his victorious standards veiled in crape.

The archives and general offices of the Government having been removed to this city in May, on November 17, 1800, the Congress met in Washington for the first time, and assumed the exclusive control of the city and the District of Columbia. Brig. Gen. James Wilkinson was the commander of the United States Army. Oliver Ellsworth was the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. John Adams, though recently defeated for reelection, was President, and in his annual message to Congress gave especial emphasis to the importance of the removal hence of the capital, and the founding of the city of Washington. He uttered a deeply impressive and profoundly beautiful invocation for the prosperity and well-being of the city and its inhabitants. He said:

> May this territory be the residence of virtue and happiness. In this city may that piety and virtue, that wisdom and magnanimity, that constancy and self-government, which adorned the great character whose name it bears be forever held in veneration. Here and throughout our country may simple manners, pure morals, and true religion flourish forever.

Addressing himself to the Congress, he added:

> You will consider it as the capital of a great nation, advancing with unexampled rapidity in arts, in commerce, in wealth, and in population, and possessing within itself those energies and resources which, if not thrown away or lamentably misdirected, will secure to it a long course of prosperity and self-government.

The President and the Congress expressed regret that Washington did not live to enjoy having his sum of earthly happiness made complete by seeing the Government peaceably convened at Washington City. The present Chief Executive of the nation, who, I have already stated, honors this occasion by his presence, in his annual message in December, 1898, discussing this anniversary, said:

> The original plans of the city of Washington have been wrought out with a constant progress and a signal success even beyond anything their framers could have foreseen. The people of the country are justly proud of the distinctive beauty and government of the capital, and of the rare instruments of science and education which here find their natural home.

We stand to-day one hundred years from the date of the removal of the capital to this city. Within this period what phenomenal development of our country has been witnessed. Our population has increased from about five millions to over seventy-six millions. Our wealth as a nation has enhanced to more than ninety billions of dollars, making us the richest in the world. Products of our mines and manufactures exceed those of any other land or people. Our laboring classes are blessed with more comforts and with fairer prospects for themselves and their children than they have ever elsewhere been blessed. Our commerce has flourished most abundantly, and a widespread well-being has richly rewarded the industry of the nation. The number of the States has increased from 16 to 45 and the people have multiplied fifteenfold. Our territory has been added to until from about 900,000 square miles in 1800 our area, including Alaska, is more than three and a half millions square miles, to say nothing of our possibilities in another hemisphere. The desert has been made to bloom into a garden, towns and cities have sprung up all over our Union like the famed palaces of Aladdin, and all the discoveries of science have been as genii of the lamp to our people. Along the lines of invention and progress which intimately affect the life and civilization of the world triumphs have been achieved and wonders accomplished, the equal, if not the superior, of all the former centuries combined. The numberless material and intellectual achievements have contributed in many marvelous ways to the magical advancement and real comfort of the human race. And on and on, forever and forever, we are destined to go, each decade of years bringing new and larger blessings to humanity.

May we not conclude that the prayer of President Adams has been most generously answered? Comparing this capital, our capital, with that of any other country, may we not boast that it is the abode of virtue and happiness, that it holds in veneration that piety and virtue, that wisdom and magnanimity, that constancy and self-government which adorned the great character whose name it bears?

On this happy occasion, with all these felicitous surroundings, let us renew his invocation, and with especial emphasis pray God that not only in this beautiful capital, but that throughout the length and breadth of the Union, simple manners, pure morals, and true religion may forever flourish. That our glorious Republic shall continue its advance in arts, in commerce, in wealth, and in population, and that it will never discard nor throw away those energies and resources, those unique and peculiar characteristics which so distinguish it from other nations of the earth, and which secure and guarantee to us unsurpassed strength, unrivaled happiness, and unequaled prosperity. [Loud applause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, a Representative from the State of New York, will now deliver an address, his subject being the "Establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. President, the first general debate that I ever heard in Congress I was surprised to see that the first speaker presented the facts in the case and those who followed upon the same side merely elaborated. Now, should it happen that I refer to any fact alluded to by the first speaker on this occasion, I hope you will not take it for granted that I have fallen into this bad habit, but that I am simply following the subject given by the committee, and which seems to run somewhat in the same line. [Laughter.]

The establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia is the work of more than a century. The causes that led up to it and the selection of a place that was almost a wilderness as the capital city of a great nation are unique in the history of the nations. Ancient capitals were each the seat of all that was best in literature and art. In later days London, Paris, and Berlin were cities foremost in commerce, population, and wealth long before they each became in turn the capital of a powerful nation. Our fathers located the seat of government in the open fields "where the trees were yet growing and the streets unsurveyed." Time has long since made it great in literature and art.

If they had followed historic precedent New York or Philadelphia would have been chosen. The former was great in population, in wealth, and in enterprise. It stood at the gateway of commerce, foreign and domestic. It then gave promise of that which the closing century almost witnesses, an advance to the position of the first city in the world. The latter, situate on one of the natural highways of the country near the center of population, was great in commercial and material things, but was far greater as the birthplace and cradle of American liberty.

Each of these cities had in turn furnished a temporary seat of government for the federation of the States. Each had offered to donate suitable grounds and buildings for the Federal house, an offer of no little consequence in view of our bankrupt Treasury.

Other cities—Baltimore, Lancaster, York, Princeton, Trenton, and Annapolis—had furnished a temporary refuge to the Continental Congress in the varying vicissitudes of the war, and each had its claim on the grateful patriotism of our people. Each of these cities had extended a hospitable welcome, and quickly matured plans to give to the Congress a permanent abiding place.

After the close of the war, and as early as 1783, the discussion concerning a place for the permanent seat of government began. The people tired of a roving capital; indeed, all necessity for this had ceased; there was no longer danger of the capture of our lawmakers in any part of the "States."

Looking back, after more than a century has passed, it is difficult to realize the bitterness and acrimony of the debate. State after State came forward with the offer of a "suitable place." New York urged Kingston; Rhode Island, Newport; Maryland, Annapolis; New Jersey, Trenton, and Virginia, Williamsburg; but Congress rejected all. Then it was that the cities of New York and Philadelphia offered buildings for a Federal house, and "Baltimore Town" proposed to erect such buildings as the Government should require if assured that the capital would be located there. At least half of the thirteen States were pressing for the location of the capital within their own borders.

In June, 1783, an incident happened in Philadelphia which caused not only the removal of Congress from that city, but doubtless destroyed all hope of locating the capital permanently in a large city. Some unpaid soldiers, who had become mutinous, threatened and insulted the Representatives in Congress. The local authorities failed to suppress the riot, and Congress in consequence beat a masterly but hasty retreat.

In October of that year Elbridge Gerry offered a resolution to erect buildings for the use of Congress on either the Potomac or the Delaware River, provided a site suitable for a Federal city could be secured on either river. In April, 1784, this resolution was modified, providing for the erection of such buildings on both of the rivers. But this was all finally repealed on the 26th of April. In the following October Congress passed a resolution to select a place either in the State of New Jersey or in Maryland. The next day they appointed a committee to examine a site on the Delaware River, and soon thereafter another committee "to examine and report on a location at or near the lower falls of the Potomac." This committee discharged its duties, but years elapsed before Congress passed upon it. It was as difficult for Congress to make up its mind in those days on the location of the seat of government as it has been during the last decade to locate a site for one of our magnificent Government buildings in the city of Washington. The discussion continued with no abatement of zeal and earnestness down to 1790.

In the Constitutional Convention Mr. Madison moved to add to the enumerated powers of Congress a proposition, which was afterwards molded into the provision as it now appears in the Constitution of the United States, giving to Congress the power "to exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of government of the United States." At the first session of Congress under the Constitution the subject of the establishment of a seat of government was undertaken in earnest.

Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, on the 27th of August, 1789, introduced a resolution that expresses briefly the considerations that were to control the location of the seat of government, viz: "That a permanent residence ought to be fixed for the General Government of the United States at some convenient place as near the center of wealth, population, and extent of territory as may be consistent with convenience to the navigation of the Atlantic Ocean and have due regard to the particular situation of the Western country." We have no record of the debate in the Senate, but the debate in the House involves some curious features. It was urged in favor of immediate decision that the settling of the question of the capital would form a new bond of union. On the other hand, it was urged that such a course might start a question upon which the very existence and peace of the Union might depend.

Fisher Ames doubted whether the Government could stand the shock of such a measure, which involved as many passions as the human heart could display. A motion to postpone the question to the next session was defeated, and it was made the order for September 3. New York and New England, in the meantime, and a portion of New Jersey and Pennsylvania, formed a combine in favor of "some convenient place on the east bank of the Susquehanna, in Pennsylvania." Mr. Lee, of Virginia, offered a substitute providing for "a place as nearly central as a convenient communication with the Atlantic Ocean and an easy access to the Western territory will permit." The Southern members protested against the decision until North Carolina, with her five votes in the House and two in the Senate, should be admitted into the Union. The debate over these propositions was sectional and acrimonious.

Apparently the question was regarded so important as to involve serious menace to the Union. Mr. Madison opposed the Susquehanna as not navigable and urged the importance of communication with the Western territory, alleging that by the Potomac the way to the West was more certain and convenient than the other, with wholly unobstructed communication with the sea. One of the unique speeches of the occasion was by Mr. Vining, of Delaware, who said: "I confess to the House and to the world that, viewing this subject with all its circumstances, I am in favor of the Potomac. I wish the seat of government fixed there because I think the interest, the honor, and the greatness of this country require it. I look on it as the center from which those streams are to flow that are to animate and invigorate the body politic. From thence, it appears to me, the rays of government will most naturally diverge to the extremities of the Union. I declare that I look on the Western territory in an awful and striking point of view. To that region the unpolished sons of earth are flowing from all quarters, men to whom the protection of the laws and the controlling force of the Government are equally necessary. From this great consideration I conclude that the banks of the Potomac are the proper station." [Applause.] This, as a sample of buncombe oratory, has seldom been surpassed in Congress since that day. As the debate waxed warmer it became more acrimonious. Mr. Lee, of Virginia, said: "If it should now be found that confederacies of States east of Pennsylvania were formed, to unite their councils for their particular interests, disregarding the Southern States, they would be alarmed, and the faith of all south of the Potomac would be shaken. Virginia had not solicited Congress to place the seat of government in her State, only contending that the interests of the Southern and Western country should be consulted;" and he declared that "these interests would be sacrificed if Congress fixed on any place but the Potomac."

Mr. Madison said that "if the declarations and proceedings of this day had been brought into view in the convention of Virginia which adopted the Federal Constitution, he firmly believed Virginia might not have been a part of the Union at this moment." Mr. Sedgwick asked "if it was contended that the majority should not govern? Are we to be told that an important State would not have joined the Union had they known what would have been the proceedings in this House?" Mr. Madison replied that all he asked was time for free deliberation. "While I acknowledge that the majority ought to govern, they have no authority to debar the minority from the constitutional right of free debate." [Laughter.]

This induced Mr. Ames to say that the House was ready to vote, and that while he had no doubt of the patriotism and good intentions of the gentlemen from Virginia, they seemed to be engaged with a degree of eagerness which none else seemed to feel. They seemed to think the banks of the Potomac a paradise, and that river an Euphrates. Mr. Burke, of South Carolina, charged that a league had been formed between the Northern States and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Fitzsimmons, of Pennsylvania, denied this, as did also Mr. Wadsworth, of Connecticut, who said he did not dare to go to the Potomac; he feared that the whole of New England would consider the Union as destroyed.

The matter going over to the following day, Mr. Madison again urged the importance of a central location. He said: "If it were possible to promulgate our laws by some simultaneous operation, it would be of less consequence where the Government might be placed; but if time is necessary for this purpose, we ought, as far as possible, to put every part of the community on a level."

If Mr. Madison had lived a century later he would have witnessed the instantaneous communication of the doings of Congress to all parts of the country, and might not have urged with such vehemence the selection of a "central location" on the banks of the Potomac.

Finally the House adopted a resolution authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners to locate the most eligible situation on the Susquehanna, in Pennsylvania.

The Senate by a tie vote, Vice-President Adams giving the deciding vote in the affirmative, located the permanent capital in a district of 10 miles square at Germantown, Pa. Subsequently in the House the Senate's amendment was agreed to with an amendment continuing the laws of Pennsylvania in force within the ceded district until Congress should otherwise provide. This amendment, which was unnecessary from every point of view, took the bill back to the Senate for concurrence, and as only one day remained in the Senate the bill finally failed for want of action. This measure was not revived afterwards, and it was only this narrow chance that prevented Germantown, instead of Washington, from becoming the Federal city.

In July, 1790, the act was finally passed that gave to Washington the sole power to select the Federal Territory, "not exceeding 10 miles square on the river Potomac, at some space between the mouth of the Eastern Branch and the Conococheague, for the permanent seat of government of the United States." This new seat was to be ready for use in 1800, and during the meantime the "Federal town" was to be Philadelphia.

But this site was not selected without much tribulation. When the District of Columbia was chosen North Carolina had come into the Union and cast her votes for the proposition. But even then the measure would have failed but for the political shrewdness of Hamilton and Jefferson. The former had brought forward his great measure of finance for the assumption by the nation of the debts incurred by the several States in maintaining the Revolutionary war, amounting to $20,000,000. The bill had been defeated in the House, after a fierce struggle, by an overwhelming vote, and Hamilton, believing that the very existence of the Union depended upon the reconsideration and passage of this crowning work of his financial greatness and statesmanship, was making strenuous endeavors to accomplish that result. Virginia and the South had voted against it. Hamilton proposed a compromise. Jefferson should help pass the assumption act, and Hamilton, as a quid pro quo, should bring over enough votes to put through the act locating the seat of government on the Potomac. How this was brought about let Jefferson tell in his own words:

> I proposed to him (Mr. Hamilton) to dine with me the next day, and I would invite another friend or two and bring them into conference together, and I thought it impossible that reasonable men, consulting together coolly, could fail, by some mutual sacrifices of opinion, to form a compromise which would save the Union. The discussion took place. It was finally agreed that, whatever importance had been attached to the rejection of this proposition, the preservation of the Union and of concord among the States was more important, and that therefore it would be better that the vote of rejection should be rescinded, to effect which some members should change their votes.
> But it was observed that this pill would be peculiarly bitter to the Southern States, and that some concomitant measure should be adopted to sweeten it a little to them. There had before been propositions to fix the seat of government either at Philadelphia or at Georgetown, on the Potomac, and it was thought by giving it to Philadelphia for ten years and to Georgetown permanently afterwards this might, as an anodyne, calm, in some degree, the ferment which might be excited by the other measure alone. So two of the Potomac members (White and Lee, but White with a revulsion of stomach almost convulsive) agreed to change their votes, and Hamilton undertook to carry the other point. In doing this the influence he had established over the Eastern members, with the agency of Robert Morris with those of the Middle States, effected his side of the engagement; and so the assumption act was passed, and twenty millions of stock divided among favored States and thrown in as a pabulum to the stockjobbing herd.

This incident removes some of the glamour which time has thrown over the acts of the "fathers," and reveals them to us as human beings, no better than the politicians of to-day. Surely it is not the highest type of legislative integrity that characterizes this historical episode. It goes far to reconcile us to the definition of a statesman as being a politician who is dead. But we can forgive this bit of "log rolling" when we reflect that it saved a threatened rupture of the Union.

Washington acted promptly, and reported to Congress a location of the District as originally laid out, thereby exceeding the limits of the act of Congress by taking territory below the mouth of the Eastern Branch. Congress legalized this by a subsequent act of ratification. That Washington displayed his usual good judgment and foresight in the selection of the seat of government it is needless to say in this presence. Our fathers "took to the woods" for a seat of government, but they laid the foundation for magnificent possibilities.

The place was near the center of the population, stood at the head of navigation, and at what Washington believed to be the pathway to the West. It was his judgment that the commerce of the great Western territory would follow down and along the banks of the Potomac River to tide water at Georgetown, and thence on the river itself to the Atlantic Ocean. That this prophecy of his was not fulfilled has been the fault of the steam railway, supplanting the river and canal, and the more rapid development of the commerce of the Northwestern States, forcing other outlets to the sea.

The original act referred to this territory as the "Seat of Government." Washington called it the "Federal City." But the commission which he appointed called it the "City of Washington, in the Territory of Columbia." Finally Congress named it the "District of Columbia."

But this action of Congress did not place the matter beyond all question or dispute. Virginia voted $120,000 in money, and Maryland seventy-two thousand as a free gift toward the erection of buildings. The owners of the property in the District of Columbia conveyed all the streets and parks free and reserved one half of the lots and granted the other half to the United States. These lots were offered for sale by the Government to raise the necessary funds to build the Government buildings. But the sales were slow and the money was not forthcoming. Washington applied to the State of Maryland for a loan. Maryland granted a loan of $100,000, but took good care to require the personal security of the commissioners of the District of Columbia. How vastly has our national credit improved in a hundred years.

The commissioners employed Major l'Enfant, a French engineer and a friend of Jefferson, to lay out the city. He adopted the plan of Versailles, the seat of the Government of France, as a basis for his work. The admirable location of the Capitol and the White House is due to him. Fortunate would it have been had a Governor Shepherd been one of the commissioners, as from his plan, developed a century later, all south of the Pennsylvania avenue to the Potomac River would have been a vast and beautiful park, while the Department buildings would have fronted this avenue from the north side. [Loud applause.] It was to the credit of this great engineer that it was nearly a century before any person ventured this suggestion as an improvement on his original plan, and no other substantial improvement has ever been suggested.

Up to the war of 1812 there was continued agitation for removal. The House of Representatives tired of crowding itself into the corridor of the Senate wing while the coordinate branch were housed magnificently in their own permanent chamber. It was not until the old House wing was completed in 1807 that this cause of complaint was removed.

The city was dreary and desolate, the houses were poor and scattered, the streets and roadways were execrable. Not a street or public building was finished, and the private houses were in similar condition. After the British had destroyed the Capitol, the Executive Mansion, the navy-yard, and many of the public buildings, the opposition to rebuilding in Washington was very emphatic.

The debate occurred on a bill introduced in 1815 authorizing the President to borrow $500,000 to rebuild the public buildings. It was urged that Washington was a failure, badly located, not in the center of territory or population, and too accessible to the sea to be defended in time of war. On the other hand, it was urged that it was ungracious toward Virginia and Maryland, the States that had contributed $200,000 toward the buildings, that it was unjust to the people who had freely conveyed their real estate, and that it was cowardly to run away in the face of an enemy. The spirit of patriotism and good faith was appealed to, and the appeal was not in vain. The bill became a law, and with the rebuilding of the Government buildings the seat of government was finally established in the District of Columbia, and the building here of every Government building since, while it may have brought out discussion and adverse criticism, has only become another anchor to the good old ship of state in Washington harbor. [Applause.]

The dream of George Washington is fast becoming reality. He looked upon the future capital as the center of art and learning. He looked forward to a great city with beautiful avenues and streets, stately buildings, classic and grand, worthy of the great Republic. All this has been realized. It takes no prophetic eye to see in Washington in the near future the queen capital city of all the nations of the earth, worthy of the great Republic.

The crowning fact in reference to the seat of government in the District of Columbia is that it is now established here for all time. Never will a proposition for its removal again find favor in any quarter. Its foundations are laid here, as enduring as the everlasting hills. In the well-chosen words of the junior Senator from Missouri, it is and is to be the "eternal capital of an eternal Republic." [Loud applause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Hon. LOUIS E. MCCOMAS, a Senator from the State of Maryland, will now address the convention. His subject is the "History of the first century of the national capital." [Applause.]

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, one hundred years ago President Adams first visited Capitol Hill. From this eminence how different then the scene.

Around him stood the primeval forest. Here and there were naked fields. Through the thick oak woods had been cleared the streets and avenues.

On this hill stood the north wing of the Capitol. Near by was a tavern. On the Eastern Branch of the Potomac, then navigable, and near the Arsenal was the hamlet of Carrollsburg. Nearer this hill in the same forest was Law's famous mansion. At Greenleaf's Point on the river, west of Tiber Creek, were some straggling houses.

About the new President's house clustered a few buildings; behind these, wide marshes stretched away to the river. Across Rock Creek lay the Maryland village of Georgetown.

At these four points, widely separated, were about six hundred houses. All else was marsh and field and forest.

Such was—

> The young city round whose virgin zone
> The rivers like two mighty arms were thrown.

Said Rochefoucauld, who visited it then:

> It is in fact the grandeur and magnificence of the plan which renders the conception no better than a dream.

The bureau officials and the members of the Sixth Congress missed the comforts of Philadelphia. They discussed afresh the wisdom of moving the Capitol away from this village in the woods.

Seven years before President Washington had laid the corner stone of this edifice. His new-made grave was on the west bank of the beautiful river nearly opposite the Federal city which bore his name. The magic of that name now held the capital in the village which bore it.

Fourteen years after, on an August evening, President Madison stood on this hill.

The British invader having set on fire the city had hurried away to the fleet. Yonder Madison saw the black smoking ruins of the War and Treasury offices and of his own home, the Executive Mansion. At the navy-yard the dying fires lighted up the smoking hulls of the Argus and the new Essex. Here were the charred and blackened walls of the two wings of the new Capitol.

Again the cry rose to remove the capital. Congress borrowed a half million dollars to restore this unfinished structure and the town slowly rose from its ashes.

Faster grew the nation. The Federal city seemed asleep.

The chief cities of the South advanced. The Eastern cities grew great. On the prairies, by the Western rivers, new cities sprang out of the ground while the nation was fast spreading westward over the continent. Still the Federal city slept.

Its seat was healthful, the climate was mild and agreeable the year round. The city was accessible. The great edifices of the departments of Government were worthy of the nation, worthy of the magnificent plan of the city. Unhappily Washington was on the border between the free and the slave States. The long contest over slavery rendered the fate of the Union unsafe and made the future of the Federal city uncertain.

During a generation the specter of disunion was a shadow upon the young city. Its growth was confined to the river basin, and did not extend east of the Capitol, where the founders designed the principal growth to be. Sixty years ago Washington was "a large, straggling village reared in a drained swamp."

Fifty-four years ago the wide boundaries marked by the men of the Revolution were contracted by the petty economists of the day. The lands west of the Potomac were retroceded to Virginia. President Polk and Congress lacked the historic foresight of the founders and forgot the future.

Forty years ago 75,000 people lived here. Municipal improvements lagged. The grounds and public buildings were neglected by Congress, absorbed in discussing slavery and the fate of the Union.

Dark seemed the future of the Union and darker still the future of Washington.

This long and exciting period suggests the military and naval heroes, the orators, statesmen, and jurists whose fame belongs rather to the country than to Washington.

Yet eminent names survive notable men whose life's work localized them here. Thomas Ritchie, Francis P. Blair, Joseph Gales, and W. W. Seaton, in journalism, won their fame as Washington editors. In science Peirce, Hilgard, Bache, Henry, and Baird, in letters Peter Force, Joel Barlow, and George Bancroft lived and labored here. Pulpit orators of note, lawyers of eminence, were here in numbers. The most beautiful gallery of fine arts on the continent is here, the chief benefaction of W. W. Corcoran, the Washington philanthropist whose name it bears.

The cloud of civil war was fast gathering and it broke over the unfinished Dome of this Capitol. Instantly Washington became the focus of the world's interest, the object of our people's solicitude, the center of our national life.

These streets thronged with civilians and volunteer soldiers. These avenues resounded with the tramp of marching regiments, the clangor of cavalry hoofs and sabers, the rumbling of artillery, or echoed the shrill martial music or the funeral dirge. Schoolhouses and churches became hospitals. Army wagons were parked in the vacant squares. Barracks and camps filled the public parks. Forts and breastworks sprang out of the adjacent fields and crowned the hills on either side of the Potomac. Here President Lincoln reviewed armies of the Union and later saw the capital a fortress assailed by an invading army. He was sustained by the hope he expressed on the portico of this Capitol in his first inaugural address, an unfaltering faith that the mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, would yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched by the better angels of our nature.

Soon after there came two beautiful May days when the national flag was flying from every housetop and window, when from this Capitol to the Treasury, marching along the Avenue in columns of companies, there passed in grand review the brave armies of Sherman and Grant. Taking their horses with them, as Grant had told them they should, the gallant soldiers of Johnston and Lee had gone home for the spring plowing, to put out a crop in the wasted fields of war. And the harvest was peace.

When the battle flags were furled in Washington, when the forts around it were razed, the streets of the city were deep in mud or clouded with dust. The vacant lands were morasses. Beyond Tiber Creek and the bed of the abandoned canal, out amid the marshes, stood a marble monument half built.

Beyond it was the river on whose farther bank still reposed the ashes of the founder of this city. This unfinished column of marble, its commemorative purpose seemingly forgot, stood there a pathetic reminder that President Washington's design of a Federal city was yet unfulfilled.

The day of its fulfillment had dawned. At once the restored Union began to move swiftly forward to its foremost place among nations. The shadows vanished from Washington. The growth of its capital kept step with the rapid growth of the Republic.

Governor Shepherd and the Commissioners and Congress took from the wall the dusty map of l'Enfant and Ellicott, impressed its outlines on marsh, on hill, on woodland, and, under the cloudless sky, out of the fresh earth the new Washington rose "as from the stroke of the enchanter's wand."

In the paved streets and avenues decorated with homes and churches which are triumphs of architecture; in the open areas bright with flowers and fountains; in the circles and parks adorned with statuary and monuments of our heroes on land and sea, of men of science and letters, of our statesmen and jurists; in the long succession of stately public buildings; in the gorgeous Congressional Library, worthy mansion of letters; in yonder monument to the Father of his Country, "the marble column sublime in its simple grandeur;" in this Capitol, on whose first corner stone the founder of the city laid his hand, this already the noblest structure in the world, yet destined to be fairer within and grander without, in all these crowning glories of the fairest of all cities, our countrymen acclaim Washington their Delphi, their Mecca.

We cherish it, not for the beauty of the now populous city alone, but by a common sympathy that draws all Americans to this spot dedicated to the Republic. Each generation has added new interests which touch the imagination, new historic associations which stir American pride. Washington is linked with the memories of the wise and valiant of our race and blood now departed.

We love it for the great events and the great virtues of which it has been the theater. We love it for its part in a century of our history, that epic of our nation's life whose great transactions, starting hopefully with President Adams, closing gloriously with

President McKinley, have centered the eyes of the world on us here. [Loud applause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Hon. JOHN W. DANIEL, a Senator from the State of Virginia, will now address the convention on "The future of the United States and its capital." [Loud applause.]

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, ancient history had no precedent for the United States of America, and modern history has no parallel. [Applause.] A new land, a new people, a new principle of government, a clean slate for the refiguring of old problems, leisure and liberty to revise, correct, and expurgate old editions of civilization and originate new ones—these were the rare conditions that initiated the new deal for human rights and fortunes. The Anglo-Saxon was forehanded, prepotent, paramount, and ascendant. He outfigured, outworked, and outfought all rivals. To his side he beckoned all men as brethren, and all types of men came trooping from the four corners of the earth to share his winnings. In freer spirit and in higher hopes they cast new patterns for themselves and for other nations.

If we are a greater England, we are also a greater Ireland, a greater Scotland, and a greater Wales; a greater Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; a greater Netherlands, a greater Germany, a greater Greece and Rome, and a greater Jerusalem [laughter and applause]; a greater everybody, bearing, indeed, the Anglo-Saxon birthmark, but fused into a new, original, and composite national character.

"Great races are made of the mixture of races, like the beautiful bronzes which are composed of many metals." The brightest and bravest blood of the world's great races is mixed in the American. [Applause.]

The Roman augur looked to the West to catch in the reflected light of the upper sky the first flush of the coming dawn. So look we to the past of our country for the omens of its brilliant future. The United States contains the most diversified and assimilative elements that ever composed a great nation. Our domain is the best located. We have the most compact, the most convenient and symmetrical, of all the seats of great nations. We are the most defensible of nations. North and south of us are friends from whom there is nothing to fear. East and west the everlasting seas are moats of our battlements.

Within our borders are all the elements of human sustenance and national greatness. Our forests would build homes for the world to live in; our coal would run its machinery, warm its firesides, and cook its food; our iron, lead, copper, and zinc would supply its furnaces; our granite and marble would build its temples. From our woods, fields, fisheries, orchards, and gardens we could set a feast that would turn Lucullus green with envy; and dinner over, the world could quaff our wines, fill its cups with our coffee, sweeten it with our sugar, regale its fancies on our tobacco, and light itself to bed with our oil. If never another man or another thing were landed on our shores, we could wax strong, adorn our homes with finest art, and multiply and replenish the earth with the overrunnings of our richness. [Applause.]

We have risen to greatness more rapidly than ever arose a great nation. Our ascendency is less endangered from without than was ever that of a great nation. We have outrun the prophecies of our progenitors and surpassed the ideals of our founders. Our development has been the epic of human progress. It has made poetry of statistics and glorious romance of history. It has left the dreams of optimists as faded specters in the rear of achievement. Our longevity projects itself to the farthest reach of human speculation, and the future is gorgeous with every sign of hope and courage.

Our people understand each other better than they have ever done. Consequently they have more hearty feelings of friendship and sympathy for each other than they ever had. At home and abroad the principles and the flag of the American Union were never more respected. We are the most thoroughly unified of the great nations. In this building the differences of 45 Commonwealths and 76,000,000 people come to the mill to be ground out. [Applause.] The whir of the grinding is great and might make the impression that our differences are also great.

But be not deceived. Our States are as much alike in their forms of government as the leaves of a tree. Our people are alike in their language, their laws, their usages, and their aspirations. Our political clocks all keep the same time—that is to say, after election—Washington time. [Applause.] Our differences are only the natural and just differences that must ever arise from locality and individualism. Instead of rebuking them we should be thankful for them. They are sincere and unavoidable. They are the processes of Providence, which out of difference molds higher uniformity, and out of conflict produces the best resultant force. When the grinding of opinion is over, all partake at a common table of the same bread. After all, it is only differences that come here. Our similitudes, which are as a myriad to one difference, are quiescent; and comparing them, we should not forget that "a single grasshopper under a fence makes more noise than a thousand cattle reposing in the shade." [Applause.]

We are the strongest of nations. So far, with only the phantom of a Regular Army as a nucleus of education, our wars have been fought for the most part by the volunteer citizen soldiery. They have never failed to cope successfully with the trained bands of Europe. To-day at the tap of a drum ten millions would swarm to the national defense, and to a foreign foe our seacoasts would become—

> Looming bastions fringed with fire.

There can be no disparagement of our regulars, but against the soldier of any age or any country we might place with confidence the American volunteer. [Applause.]

There is an army in our country grander than any ever mustered on the field of Mars. In line it would stretch over 5,000 miles. It is the conscript and volunteer school children of the United States, over sixteen millions strong. It is the embryo of the mightiest civilized force ever organized by any people. Woe be unto him who sows in these young souls any unworthy thought. When this army deploys in action may it fly the banners of truth and liberty and carry in their hearts love of their countrymen and their fellow-men, the only patriotism that is not sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. [Applause.]

The experience of over a century has exhibited the strength of our electoral institutions. We are as strong within as without. In the first inaugural address delivered in this city on the 4th of March, 1801, Thomas Jefferson said:

> Strangers, unused to think freely and speak what they think, might be imposed on by the animation of our discussions and exertions, but the contest of opinion being decided by the voice of the nation and announced according to the rules of the Constitution, all will, of course, arrange themselves under the will of the law and unite in common effort for the common good.

I believe with him that this is "the strongest Government on earth." I believe with him, also, that "this is the one nation where every man according to the law would fly to the standard of the law and would meet invasion of the law as his own personal concern."

When he thus spoke our self-government was yet an experiment. It is now a consummation. We might repeat his admonition:

> Sometimes it is said that man can not be trusted with the government of himself. Can he then be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the form of kings to govern him? Let history answer this question.

The history of a hundred years has answered it. Compare the men who the people have chosen as Presidents with an equal number of hereditary monarchs of any other nation, and self-government in comparison finds its incarnate vindication.

This is the only great nation that ever passed through its formative conflicts without inflicting in a single case the penalty of death for a political cause. Does not this fact alone speak volumes for free thought, for free speech, for the government of the people, and for the high character of the American people?

If we have had strife, it has been the proud and lofty strife of the brave and the true who can cherish honor, who can cherish principle, can cherish love, but can not cherish hate. And be this never forgotten, that our only strife was over the heritage which empire foisted upon our ancestors against their will and which the Republic has removed forever. And that Republic stands at the dawn of a new century with every son a free man under its flag and ready to defend it. [Applause.]

"I am an American" means more to-day than it has ever meant, for if all the nations were arranged in line, each represented by one typical man, the American man would stand at the head of the line, the tallest, the straightest, the brawniest, the most practical-minded, and biggest hearted of them all.

We are the foremost nation of the world. We are the light and hope of the world. It is our freedom that has made us gentle, and gentleness has made us great. [Applause.]

Race problem, Philippine problem, trust problem—what will you do with them? This is not the time nor am I here to answer. We may well view these and other problems with deep solicitude and anxious reflection. But if our problems be mighty, they grow out of our might and have the mighty to deal with them. They come to those who have never been confounded by problems and have never dodged one; who have solved problems just as great and some greater than any now presented, and have left them all behind with monuments of their solution builded over them.

When John Smith and his little band sailed into James River, in 1607, a flight of arrows in their faces arrested attention to the greatest and deadliest of race problems. There are as many Indians on the American continent now as there were then, but where is the race problem of 1607? [Applause.]

The London company, syndicate, or trust, sent these settlers here and it ordered everything. It called a legislature at Jamestown in 1619, and in 1624 that legislature said:

> This people will pay no tax save as this assembly shall appoint.

One hundred and fifty years afterwards that principle became the corner stone of this nation. Bills of rights and free constitutions cover the country. But what has become of the London company? The king gone, the Indian gone, the tea tax gone, the stamp tax gone, and the London company, too—gone, all gone! But the American is here, and from ocean to ocean not an acre but a free acre, not a man but a free man, and all ancient problems but fireside tales. Behind our new problems marches the broader and better Republic. In the words of an illustrious American, "It is history that teaches man to hope." No human history burns with so high and bright a hope as that of the United States of America.

We have been a world power ever since we tied taxation and representation together and identified in one community the tax layer and the taxpayer. It was out of that germ that arose our free Constitution. Wherever it is found a free constitution would grow out of it. It has quickened the republican movement around the globe. It has brought us the homage not only of the downtrodden who welcomed its delivering hand, but as well that of the powerful who heeded not its forewarnings.

But yesterday an English statesman, a former prime minister, declared that had not the elder Pitt left the House of Commons for the peerage he would have induced the English king to admit the American people to representation in Parliament; and he fancies that then the Crown itself and all its belongings would some day have migrated to this country, leaving the British islands as the European outposts of a world empire. The world empire, under any crown, is the fading dream of humanity. The world republic is the ever-brightening and growing dream. It is not likely that any crown will ever come to this land of ours, but our constitutional system, with the people sovereign and holding in their hands the purse and the sword, can go anywhere or everywhere if right and justice and wisdom lead the way.

Eighteen sister republics of America have patterned on its example. Our Monroe doctrine has said to the monarchies: "Touch them not;" and the world republic, not the world empire, is the vision that grows more and more distinct as we go spinning "through the ringing grooves of change."

This land is already the radiant center of Anglo-Saxon power. It is also the radiant center of that vision. We will cleave to the principle that conjured it. It is brighter than crowns. It is stronger than scepters. It is higher than thrones. It is longer ranged than cannon. It is sharper than swords and bayonets. It is more august than an army with banners. It marches while armies sleep. It conquers where armies fall. It floats where navies sink. It is the shield of the weak. It is the glory of the strong. It is the riches of the poor. It is the faith and hope and uplift of the oppressed. It is subtler than policy. It is right, and it is the destiny of nations. [Applause.]

As our country moves to speed that destiny it will carry the future of Washington City with it. Our fathers brought the Federal Government here in 1800, and dedicated this spot as "the eternal capital of the eternal Republic." And the capital and the Republic have grown with equal pace and their step has ever been forward. It was then a straggling village of 2,000 souls; it is now a magnificent metropolis of over 200,000. The Republic of 5,000,000 people and sixteen States then rested its western boundary on the Mississippi River, its southern on the northern line of Florida. It has now 76,000,000 people and forty-five States, and our continental boundaries are the Pacific Ocean, Mexico, and the Gulf of Mexico. We have multiplied our States threefold, our territory nearly fourfold, and our population in the ratio of 16 to 1. [Laughter and applause.] This is a statistical fact, not a financial statement. Our center of population was then near Baltimore, Md. It is now near Columbus, Ind., and is still traveling West "to grow up with the country." [Laughter.]

To my mind this capital city of the Republic is the city unique and beautiful. Other nations have fixed their capitals in the crowded urban centers of commerce, and they possess the splendors that opulence has gathered around them. Our capital, like our nation, was made to subserve a principle, and it has grown up in the midst of the mementoes and associations of the principle which it represents. Its broad avenues intersecting its regular squares; its frequent reservations of grass and flowers and fountains; its parks and trees; its substantial business houses and sightly dwellings; its schools, colleges, universities, galleries, and museums; its monuments and public buildings; its noble river and picturesque landscape; its integral effect upon the eye, with the apex of the Washington Monument piercing the sky on the one side and this noble pile lifting its dome on the other; these things make Washington City a nobler panorama and more inspiring contemplation than are afforded by any other city in the world.

The United States will live; and with them Washington will live, expanding, multiplying, beautifying, enlightening, with every turn of the prodigious wheel of which it is the axle. Plans for its improvement abound. One contemplates the erection here of the "Halls of the Ancients," where the eye may behold revived the architectural creations of bygone nations. Another would produce on some expansive field a miniature of the United States of America, showing in the earth itself the delineations and undulations of our national topography. These and kindred schemes are well worthy of consideration; but the essential must come first. Washington needs, and the people of the whole country needs fitting outlets for the new railroads that press for admission, and bridges which will span the Potomac and connect the city with the military post, the agricultural station, and the beautiful cemetery at Arlington.

More public buildings are needed by both the District and the Federal Governments. All will be gratified to know that the White House is to be enlarged for the more suitable accommodation of the President in the exercise of the official and hospitable functions incumbent on the Chief of our multitudinous people; and all will wish the present occupant that happiness which he would if he could bestow on every one of them. [Applause.] No less pressing are the needs of the many Departments. This Government should not be forced, as it has been and is now, to rent rooms like a transient visitor, nor to put its public servants in dingy lodgings like postponed claimants.

It is planned for the ages and it should reside in habitations adapted to health and comfort and becoming to its character. Whatever we do in building should be the best of its kind in plan, in material, and in execution. All our public buildings should be of the noble classic design worked out by American architects according to the diversities of American genius. As this Capitol building, rising in white and soaring majesty, speaks to the heavens and to the earth, as it were, in manifestation of its office, so should every public building established here express to the beholder in every lineament of its structure the stability, the dignity, and grace of the American nation. [Applause.]

And one public building above all others is needed here as the reflex of the peculiar genius of this people and of its supreme intellectual distinction in a department where it surpasses all ancient and modern peoples. We are the most inventive of nations. The free intellect has been the most original and productive of all intellects. Other nations have surpassed us in literature and the fine arts, but in inventive and useful arts the United States is far transcendent. The Patent Office, established by Thomas Jefferson and protecting for a brief period the only constitutional monopoly, the right to the exclusive enjoyment of one's original ideas, is the crown of American intellectual supremacy over the material world, even as the Constitution of the United States is the crown of political architecture and the Union itself the crowning glory of our people.

As Francis Bacon says, "The sciences dwell sociably together," and we should put on Capitol Hill, facing the Senate Hall, as a companion piece to the exquisite Library building now facing the Hall of Representatives, another building of like architecture. And the American capitol of letters should have by its side the American capitol of inventive art, both facing this Capitol of the people, where their sovereignty has its highest exemplification. In that hall should be displayed the evolutions of inventions, with every invention indicated by its model, inclusive of the last improvement. It would be the greatest college of applied science that the world has ever seen; a monument to and a stimulus to invention, and leading by gradations to those truths of science which hover over the threshold of the age, "waiting to be caught."

It was the mariner's needle that discovered America, for the inventor made the discoverer possible; and inventive genius is that which is putting us ahead of all the nations. It is invention that manifolds the thoughts of the wise and scatters them in the humblest habitations. It is invention that has made the poor man's cottage gleam in cleanliness and beauty like the palace. It is invention that has made circulating libraries and art galleries of our periodical literature. It is invention that forestalls the pestilence, extinguishes the conflagration, illuminates the darkness, makes the fountain to gush forth by the fireside and in the desert, eliminates distance, relieves the famine, and snatches the stricken of the battlefield from the jaws of destruction. It is invention that has made princes of the earth out of our merchants, manufacturers, and skilled workmen; that has given precedence to our products in all the marts of the world; that is pouring the golden horn of trade balance into our treasury chests and transforming us from a debtor to a creditor nation.

It is invention that has made war so terrible that peace foresees its bed of repose at the mouth of the cobwebbed cannon. It is invention that is to lift our earthly being from poverty, feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, unlock the Bastiles, and open all the doors where lie the victims of hardship and bigotry and oppression. It is invention that has brought to manifest revelation the unity of the universe, the unity of man, the unity of life, the unity of soul, and thrown the very gates of immortality ajar by proving the perpetuity of physical and moral force. It is invention that, whispering round the world, brings us in voice touch and mind touch with each other though thousands of miles apart, and that reminds us by its miracle as to the author of our being that—

Closer is He than breathing,
And nearer than hands and feet.

It is invention that will one day in the distant Aidenn make the United States of the World fulfill the dream that now hovers over the United States of America. It is our high fancy that when that day comes the English language will be the universal language. Our Constitution will be the model of the universal constitution. The principle of the Declaration of Independence, that taxation and representation must go together, will be the universal principle. The flag of the stars will be blazoned with the constellation of the nations. Here will assemble the Parliament of Man. The farthest star in the heavens will bear the name of Washington, and the city that now bears the founder's name will be the capital of the universal republic. [Loud applause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, a Senator from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, will now address the convention.

Mr. HOAR. It is a hundred years since this city, planned by George Washington, became the seat of government. The site was chosen by the First Congress, in accord with the design of the framers of the Constitution. And yet we seem to-day to be still engaged in laying its foundations. The other great capitals of the world—Rome, London, Paris, Berlin, Edinburgh, Vienna—have their origin in a remote past. They not only embody the earliest authentic history of their countries, but their beginning is lost in the darkness of antiquity or hidden in the mist of fable. Their early annals have perished in a deeper oblivion than that which covers the builders of the pyramids, which moved Sir Thomas Browne to his sublimest utterance: "History sinketh beneath her cloud. The traveler, as he paceth amazedly through these deserts, asketh of her, Who builded them? and she mumbleth something, but what it is he heareth not."

But Washington is still in earliest youth. There are Americans living who were born before this city received its name. For the first fifty years and more, down to the end of the civil war, our frugal predecessors hardly expended enough to make it decently habitable. They expended nothing for its adornment, except the construction of this Capitol, which was not finished in its present condition until 1865. But, taking the century as a whole, certainly the American people have no reason to be ashamed of their city.

It was on the border line between the two contending parties in the civil war. The fires of that mighty conflict burned here more fiercely and hotly than anywhere else. When peace came Washington, like the whole country, felt the inspiration of the new era.

Before, she like some shepherdess did show,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side;
Not answering to her fame, but rude and low,
Nor taught the beauteous arts of modern pride.
Now, like a maiden queen, she will behold,
From her high turrets, hourly suitors come;
The east with incense, and the west with gold,
Will stand, like suppliants, to receive her doom.

I have spoken of the antiquity of European capitals. London has been a center of civilization for more than twelve hundred years. The House of Commons has existed for eight hundred. There has been a Bishop's Palace at Fulham more than a thousand. Paris has been a seat of government for thirteen centuries; Berlin for nearly four; Vienna for seven. And yet there are few places that can show for any one century more than three products of architecture that equal the Capitol, the Washington Monument, and the Congressional Library. If we can add to the glories of Washington three such structures only for each coming century, we need not be ashamed of comparison with any foreign city when Washington shall have reached the same age. Yet in 1800 we were a people of but 5,000,000. We are now 77,000,000. The population of this District is multiplied in larger proportion still. We shall deal with our metropolis in the coming centuries, as compared with that which has gone, with a liberality proportioned to our wealth, numbers, and power. If God spare the Republic, what may we not hope for Washington?

These three structures, unrivaled, as they are, each in its respective class, are more interesting still for what they typify and stand for. The monument to the Father of the Country is but a simple shaft. It marks a narrow spot. It commemorates a single human character. But the spot it marks, as was said, Mr. Speaker, by one of the most accomplished men who ever sat in your chair, "is a prime meridian." The prime meridian of universal longitude on sea or land may be at Greenwich or at Paris or where you will. But the prime meridian of pure, exalted, human character will be marked forever by yonder obelisk. Integrity and patriotism are to be measured by nearness to it or departure from it. Boastfulness, out of place everywhere, is a thousand times out of place when we speak of the modest and unselfish Washington. Yet we can establish by the concurrent authority of the foremost men of all civilized countries that what the old monk, Joseph of Exeter, said of the English Alfred is true of him: "The Old World knows not his peer, nor will the future show us his equal; he alone towers over other kings, better than the past ones, and greater than those that are to be."

That integrity, that unambitious service, that unerring wisdom, that unwearied industry, that unhesitating self-sacrifice, that purity not only unsullied but untempted—not even the temptation to sin seems to have beset that lofty nature—were all his. The devil is an ass. But he never was such an ass as to waste his time tempting George Washington. [Applause.]

There is no time to-day to cite the overwhelming and concurrent testimony of great Englishmen, statesmen, and writers of history, and of great authorities on the Continent, to the primacy of George Washington among mankind. The only name likely to be thought of anywhere for parallel or comparison is that in whose glory we also have an inherited title to share—that of Alfred, the thousandth anniversary of whose death is about to be celebrated by the people on whose throne his descendant now sits.

This whole city is, in a larger sense, a Washington monument. It were better that that great name pass into oblivion and be forgotten unless the walls of this building where we are assembled, dedicated to legislation and to justice, also bear honorable witness to the character and influence of him who laid its corner stone. Here for a hundred years a free people have enacted a great history, with its great achievements and its greater self-restraints. Here have been enacted the laws under which thirteen States have become forty-five States, and the country, which at first covered a little space by the side of the Atlantic, has spread until it covers a continent and its portals are upon both the seas. Here has been witnessed the sublimest spectacle that can exist on earth—a great and free people governing itself by a law higher than its own desire. A country where every man has his equal voice must, in its legislation, sometimes exhibit the infirmity common to humanity. But, in the main, faith and honor and duty have triumphed in these halls over selfishness and passion and ambition. Here the interests of capital have been protected by the votes of labor. Here debtors have fixed in good faith the value of their payments to their creditors. Here a people under no constraint but their own sense of duty, determined, in spite of fearful temptation, to continue to bear the weight of a vast debt. Here the policy of dealing with the conquered was decided at the end of a long war by the votes of the conquerors, among whom every other family was in mourning for its dead; and not a drop of blood was shed and not a punishment exacted. Here finance and currency, with their subtleties surpassing the subtleties of metaphysics, have been dealt with by the plain sense of plain men. Here great public ways connecting distant oceans have been provided for. Here the manufacturing independence of America has been achieved. Here the great measures have been framed and enacted under which millions of men have been raised from slavery to citizenship and millions more welcomed from foreign lands. Here a disputed title to executive power has been peacefully settled under circumstances that would have drenched any other land with blood. And all this has been accomplished under the restraints of a written Constitution.

Here, also, in yonder silent chamber have been pronounced the judgments under which the powers of nation and State have been kept each in its appointed path, as the planets are kept in their courses, without noise and without jar.

This has been the record of a single century. It has been the record of the achievement of earliest youth. The men who have wrought this history knew well what they were doing. There has been no drifting into empire. They have but seen what they foresaw. The man who is to write this story, as Bancroft might have written it, as Macaulay might have written it, as he who gave us the best portraiture of Washington in literature before Massachusetts called him to another service—called him from writing history to making it—might have written it, has not yet begun his task. But it will yet be written. It will be written to be read of all men, as the one best story, so far, of Constitutional Liberty, protected and vindicated by law, according to the will of a free people.

Literature and art and science came later. They always come later. Art has provided for literature in yonder library its noble and fitting home. American science, also, has here its noble and fitting home—the Smithsonian Institution, founded, as we delight to remember, by the generosity of an Englishman, a subject of that gracious sovereign from whose realm we have learned so much of law and science and literature and liberty, to whom we are glad to send our salutation on this our Centennial Day. While we remember with gratitude this great benefaction of our English kinsman, we are happy to recall also that it has been at least in some degree recompensed by the bounty to the city of London of George Peabody, an American, a citizen of the North by birth, a Southern man by adoption, an admirable example of the best traits of both sections blended into the highest character and type of American citizenship. Here, also, universities destined to take a high rank among the great institutions of the world have already laid their foundations and are raising their towers to the sky.

The men who wrought this great work are gone—most of them—John Adams and his illustrious son, Jefferson and Madison and Jackson and Lincoln and Grant and Webster and Clay and Calhoun and Seward and Benton and Sumner and Wilson and Morton and Chandler and Stevens and Fessenden and Hamlin and Justin Morrill and Lamar and Harris and Bayard and Beck and Walthall—I have begun a catalogue I can not complete. But no list of the illustrious statesmen of the Republic or of the illustrious benefactors of this metropolis in the last century must omit the name of him whom the fatal arrow smote, in the hour which seemed alike the end and the beginning of a great career—your predecessor and friend, Mr. President, James A. Garfield. A few of their companions and coadjutors survive to behold the dawn of the new century and give their counsel to the people who are to carry on its work, as a few of the companions of Washington beheld the beginning of this, and inaugurated its great accomplishment on the principles of the Revolution. Their work also is about done. They seem to survive for a brief period only that the new century may clasp hands with the old, and that they may bring to the future the benediction of the past. [Loud applause.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The purposes of the joint convention having been accomplished, the Chair declares it dissolved, and restores to the distinguished Speaker of the House, with thanks, his gavel.

Thereupon the President and his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court, the Senate, the ambassadors and ministers to the United States, and the governors of the several States and Territories retired.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of deficiencies in appropriations under control of the War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of law and fact in the case of the ship Venus, Robert Berrill, master, against the United States—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, transmitting the annual report for the year ended December 1, 1900—to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting additional estimates of appropriation for the Bureau of Navigation—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting estimates of deficiencies in appropriations for the naval establishment—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for an electric-light plant for Department of the Interior building—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 13, 1900.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VESSEL SHIP VENUS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims, relating to the vessel ship Venus, Robert Berrill, master; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THE CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the cause of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF RHODE ISLAND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Rhode Island at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of C. F. Morrill, of West Alton, N. H., praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented the petition of O. C. Hatch, president of the Littleton National Bank, of Littleton, N. H., and the petition of L. Downing, jr., president of the National State Capital Bank, of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish or modify the revenue-stamp tax on checks, telegrams, bills of lading, bankers' capital, etc.; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Newport, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to the native races of Africa and to inhabitants of the new island possessions of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of sundry citizens of West Virginia, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of J. D. Arnold, of Burlington, W. Va., and the petition of J. Wesley Groves, of Morgans Glade, W. Va., praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented petitions of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church of Lima, the Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Lafayette, and of Solomon Basle and 28 other citizens of Fort Wayne, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEAN presented the petition of F. M. F. Cazin, of Hoboken, N. J., praying that an investigation be made into the practices prevailing in the Patent Office under the present Commissioner of Patents; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. LINDSAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Greensburg, Ky., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution defining legal marriage; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Quaker City Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the presentation of the present site of the United States mint in Philadelphia to that city to be used for a free library; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented the petition of Rev. Robert F. Smith and sundry other citizens of Pleasant Unity, Pa., and a petition of sundry citizens of Humphreys and Denison, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Mount Zion Methodist Episcopal Church, of Darby, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to restrict American traders in the New Hebrides from selling firearms and intoxicating liquors to native races; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of District Lodge No. 12, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Chester, Delaware, and Berks counties of Pennsylvania and Delaware; of the congregation of the Trinity Evangelical Luthern Church, of Hazelton, Pa., and of the Presbyterian Sunday School of Clinton, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any post exchange, canteen, or transport, or upon any premises used for military purposes by the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of 25 citizens of Rushford, 6 citizens of North St. Paul, of sundry business firms of Wabash, of 16 citizens of Wykoff, and of 8 citizens of Walker, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Total Abstinence Society, praying for the ratification of the treaty for the protection of Central Africa against the sale of intoxicating liquors by raising taxes to a sum considered prohibitory for native races; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ALLEN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Carey, Nebr., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of citizens of Wayne and Bruno, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MASON. I present the petition of Adolphus Busch, president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company Association, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for a reduction of the war-revenue tax on beer. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Adolphus Busch, the president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, of St. Louis, Mo., has just arrived from Europe, and in an interview said:

"I should have remained in Europe another month had it not been for my interest in the repealing of the double war tax now being levied by the Government on our industry.

"Its enactment has proven to be a terrible hardship and its continuance means general disaster to the brewing interests.

"The original tax of $1 per barrel was in itself a war tax, imposed in 1861 and continued without any reduction up to the declaration of hostilities with Spain, when it was increased to $2 per barrel, just double the original tax, which means precisely 40 per cent of the general market price of beer.

"When the original war tax of $1 per barrel was inaugurated thirty-five years ago, beer was being sold for $12 per barrel. To-day beer is being sold at an average of $5 per barrel, and we pay $2 per barrel to the Government.

"As a direct result of this excessively unfair burden of taxation the production of beer decreased 1,000,000 barrels during the year 1899, a year of unprecedented and marvelous prosperity, and within the past seven months 17 combinations have been made, consisting each of from 3 to 12 formerly prosperous breweries, forced to thus combine in order to save themselves from bankruptcy through this distressing and oppressive double war tax. More are likely to follow or suspend business altogether unless immediate relief is afforded.

"During the past year the production of beer has materially increased, but what good does it do the brewer? None! A few—very few—have had a trifling profit, but the majority have either realized no profit at all or else continued business at a distinct loss, hoping and praying for the repeal of this grinding double war tax.

"Take my own brewery, for instance. We brewed a million barrels of beer this year, an increase of 100,000 since 1899, but with what profits? Merely nominal. Why? Because we have to keep the quality of beer up to the standard established by us and pay the Government $2 per barrel on each barrel brewed. This leaves the balance—$3 per barrel—to pay for hops, malt, barley, brewing, horses, feed, wagons, brewers, help, drivers, deliveries, expressage, coal, ice, invested capital—in fact, everything—depreciation, losses, and wear and tear. There is no chance for the brewers unless this double tax is reduced to $1 per barrel. The present tax is a terrible burden, more than we can bear, and is crushing our business life out. We must have relief in order to exist. We are now paying to the Government $78,000,000 yearly, or about one-fourth of the entire revenue collected by the Government.

"The brewing industry is an American establishment, one of the greatest of all industries. Beer is the poor man's drink, and a national beverage. It is by far the greatest of all temperance promoters. We give employment directly to over 900,000 men, and indirectly, through the farmers who grow the hops, malt, and cereals, the lumbermen, maltsters, coopers, blacksmiths, iron workers, builders, railroads, shipping, and general trades, to nearly 3,000,000 men. Our invested capital is $650,000,000. During the Senatorial investigation of last year 400 samples of American beer, ales, and porter were purchased in the open market, and, under the analysis of the chemists of the Government who analyzed these samples, only two samples of American beer, ales, and porter were found to contain preservatives or adulterants, as against the wholesale preservatives and adulterations found in imported beers, ales, and porters.

"American beers are the best in the world. Such an industry should be helped and not crushed, as it is crushed.

"The brewers are patriotic. We are faithful citizens, willing to uphold the Government and to pay a tax of $1 per barrel, or about 20 per cent of the market price of our product, which would amount to about $38,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year. No industry can stand more than that percentage of taxation and exist; we have tried it for three years and know. But now the war with Spain is over, and we who have stood this double tax so uncomplainingly and patriotically, from out of our distresses pray and hope for relief. The Government is getting all the profits now and has been for three years. It is but fair, just, and equitable that we have a fair earning on our product, of which we are now deprived.

"We are here to petition Congress and the Senate for relief, and hope for a successful consummation of our efforts."

HALL OF RECORDS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a concurrent resolution, and I wish to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It relates to the appointment of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to consider the question of a site for a hall of records in the city of Washington, and the approximate cost thereof. The necessity of such a hall has been repeatedly urged upon the attention of Congress, and it has been a subject under consideration for years past, but no headway has been made.

The various Executive Departments of the Government are overcrowded with records and documents of vast importance, of very great value. Their destruction would be irreparable. Many of them are in imminent danger from fire. Since the present session of Congress began a fire was discovered in the Treasury building, and but for timely action it might have been disastrous. The Secretary of the Treasury has repeatedly called the attention of Congress to this subject in his annual reports. In his report for the fiscal year 1899 he expressed the opinion that "there is no public improvement more needed for the welfare of the nation than a hall of records in this city." This opinion is reiterated in his recent report to the Congress. The committee by whose direction I offer the resolution believes that there should be no further delay in this important matter.

It is thought that better progress can be made by the appointment of a joint committee than in any other way. I therefore ask for the present consideration of the resolution, which is very brief.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee, consisting of three members of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created to investigate and consider the question of a site for a hall of records, to be erected in the District of Columbia, and report to Congress on or before January 10, 1901, or as soon thereafter as may be possible, their conclusions as to the most feasible location for such a building, and the approximate cost thereof.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not understand that the resolution confers any more power upon this special joint committee than now exists in the two committees of the two Houses if they chose to act together. It only authorizes them to investigate and to make a recommendation, which power I suppose the two committees have at this time. I should object to the resolution if it implied any more than the same authority which the two committees now have if they could agree upon a concurrent recommendation to the two Houses. If that is all that is intended I see no objection to it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is all that is intended to be accomplished by the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5152) awarding a medal of honor to George A. Edson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 5153) for the relief of John H. Rector; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 5154) to correct the military record of Samuel F. Radford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LINDSAY introduced a bill (S. 5155) for the relief of William McCracken; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 5156) for the relief of Florence A. Brown, administratrix of the estate of John A. Brown; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5157) for the relief of the estate of Romain Verdin, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5158) granting an increase of pension to William Wilder; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 137) to provide for the printing of the History of the Red Cross; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. MONEY submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the Government of Great Britain for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, with assurance that such action on his part will meet with the hearty consent and support of the Senate.

Mr. MONEY. I ask that the resolution be printed, and that it lie on the table, to be called up hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be printed, and it will lie on the table.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KEAN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the telegraph operator in the office of the Vice-President from $1,200 to $1,600, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KYLE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $37,000 for additional buildings and improvements for the use of the United States Indian School at Rapid City, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $19,000 for repairs and improvements at the Indian Industrial School at Chamberlain, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing for the payment of the principal sum of $168,335.10, now in the Treasury to the credit of the Sioux Indians of the Crow Creek Reservation in South Dakota, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $163,500 to continue improvements at Pierre, Yankton, and Elkpoint, intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the chief of the division of loans and currency, Treasury Department, from $2,500 to $3,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics from $3,500 to $4,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, December 21, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, January 3, 1901; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PROMOTION OF COMMERCE AND INCREASE OF TRADE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, in addressing myself to the provisions of Senate bill 727, it is not my purpose to enter into a full discussion with reference to the meaning of the provisions in the bill, because the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce [Mr. FRYE] has laid before this Chamber very fully and ably an explanation which is meant to be the foundation set forth in the bill.

The upbuilding of the merchant marine of the United States is no new subject to the people of this country, and has many times been brought to the consideration of Congress.

MOTIVES OF THOSE WHO PREPARED THE BILL.

The remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] the other day on this measure brought into question somewhat the motives which prompted those who have acted in the preparation of this measure. I regret that the cause seemed to demand the reinforcement of an insinuation which challenged the motives of the men who had to do in an advisory way with the construction of the bill. Being a member of what is called the maritime committee, I felt it my duty, my right, and privilege, to explain on behalf of that committee the motives and the methods under which they acted. For my part I resent even an insinuation that any other motives, aside from those of public policy and for the best interests of this country, were beneath any such action.

When I first came to the United States Senate, three years ago——

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio allow me?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I think the Senator mistakes my position when he says that I question the motives of any Senator who drafted or prepared the bill. I do not think there is anything in my remarks that will go to show that I questioned the integrity or the motives of any Senator who prepared the bill.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator was not aware at the time that I was a member of this maritime committee. Of course, I exonerate him from any intention of casting any reflection upon me as a United States Senator. As a member of the maritime committee who had under consideration this measure, dating back more than three years ago, I am only replying to the position which the Senator from Georgia assumed. I know very well the Senator would not knowingly make any such allusion.

Mr. CLAY. I certainly would not.

EXPERIENCE IN GREAT LAKES' SHIPPING.

Mr. HANNA. Now, Mr. President, I was about saying that when I came to the Senate—yes, before I came to the Senate—I was fully aware of the public interest in this important question; and having all my life in my business been engaged in direct connection with the maritime interests upon the Great Lakes, and having had forty years of experience in that direction, having been in close contact with and a close observer of the rapid growth and development of those great interests, and being naturally interested in the question from a national standpoint, I felt highly complimented and fully appreciated the invitation from the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate to become a member of this maritime committee. It was explained to me that the object of that committee was to bring together the best talent in this country—the men who had had the greatest experience in the conduct of affairs connected with the merchant marine, whose judgment and business standing before the country was of the highest order, and therefore calculated to be of the greatest assistance in the construction of such a measure.

EXPERT, EXPERIENCED MEN IN MARITIME AFFAIRS DRAFTED BILL.

That committee was composed, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has told you, of all interests connected with the maritime question, both in shipbuilding and in the management of ships, and also others connected with the question of shipping and handling of cargo freight. The broad question of transportation, all of it a part of the one question, made that committee necessarily a committee of experts. If there was a sincere desire on the part of those whose duty it was to study, from an economic standpoint, whatever would best advance this great interest as a part of our development, to what better source could they apply than to those who had had a lifelong experience in the conduct of those affairs?

That committee met frequently in consultation. There were found upon that committee men who were representing conflicting interests, so that any general proposition looking to immediate relief was met with a counter proposition when it seemed to unfavorably affect a special interest.

I need not state the fact in this body that all legislation on important questions is the result of compromise. No great measure of widespread influence and effect can be expected to be wrought into a law which will not find conflicting interests which must be harmonized.

SPIRIT OF COMPROMISE INSPIRED THOSE WHO DRAFTED BILL.

Therefore, Mr. President, the duties of this committee were many times found to be embarrassing. The difficulties presented were hard to overcome. But as they were all bent upon the same object, attempting to accomplish the same result, after a few meetings a spirit of compromise developed. The disposition to find some middle ground, some foundation upon which this great measure might be constructed, grew and grew until at last a bill was perfected, though not entirely perfect as to its success as a compromise, as subsequent events have shown, because since the first bill was introduced into Congress many amendments have been offered and accepted, not only by the Maritime Committee but by the committees in both branches of Congress.

It was found that even the prejudices of people were demanding that certain consideration should be given to special interests which had not been consulted or to persons who had not availed themselves of the opportunity of being heard in the early development of the measure. The readiness with which these objections were met, the careful consideration which was given to all of them, the spirit of compromising conflicting interests, were such that to-day this bill, with its amendments reported from the Senate Committee on Commerce, is believed to be the most practical measure that can possibly be devised.

GROWTH OF CARGOES IN LAKE SHIPS IN THIRTY YEARS.

I spoke of my connection with the great maritime interests of the lakes. In my short business career I have seen that business grow and develop within a little more than thirty years from a comparatively small business to a business of unparalleled magnitude. Thirty years ago the largest vessel on the lakes transporting coarse freight carried but 600 gross tons of iron ore; and so important was that event in the development of the industry that note was made of it, and all through the lake region it was held up as a great advance when the schooner Escanaba, the first three-masted schooner ever built upon the chain of lakes, brought a cargo of iron ore from Escanaba to the port of Cleveland of 600 gross tons. To-day there are steamers on the lakes, built upon the lakes, owned and managed by those conducting the maritime affairs of those Great Lakes, that are carrying 6,000 gross tons as a cargo, and even more.

DEVELOPED BY DIRECT GOVERNMENT AID.

That industry has been developed largely by the direct aid furnished in its infancy by the United States Government. The protection of that interest first of all was because our navigation laws prohibited any other but an American vessel trading between American ports. We have north of us Canada with just as much water front as we, with cheaper material and cheaper labor. Canada would have become a formidable rival in the earlier stages of our enterprise had it not been for the protection of the navigation laws of the United States.

REDUCTION IN LAKE TRANSPORTATION RATES.

But even with that protection, Mr. President, the present condition as to rates of transportation could not have been attained. It is to the liberal policy of this Government in the matter of our rivers and harbors that we owe more than all else the growth of our merchant marine upon the lakes and the cheap transportation as a result. At the time I speak of, the rates on iron ore from points on Lake Superior to Lake Erie ports were from $3 to $3.50 per gross ton. To-day the average rate is from 60 cents to $1, dependent upon the point from which the ore is shipped, all because under the protection which I have stated the opportunities to engage in that commerce are confined to the people of this country and because our waterways were improved at the expense of the Government.

When Congress made the appropriation for the 21-foot channel and a continuing contract which deepened the water from 14 feet to 21 feet, immediately the sagacity and enterprise of those who were engaged in the building up of that merchant marine saw the advantage to them, and as we were just beginning our present era of steel shipbuilding every vessel that was built from that time until to-day has been made larger, of greater carrying capacity, and therefore there has been a consequent reduction in the cost of transportation.

PROTECTION THE FOUNDATION.

What is true of the marine interests of the lakes is true of all other interests of that nature; and whether or not the protection afforded by the laws of which I have spoken was the only reason for the development of this commerce, it at least was the foundation which led to it.

EXPERIENCED TALENT AND CAPITAL NEEDED.

In order to have ships and in order to facilitate transportation we must have the capital necessary to organize the business; we must have the experienced talent of men peculiarly adapted to the conduct of such affairs, so as to manage them successfully. The growth of that great commerce upon the lakes is but an example which I feel I have the right to quote in connection with this measure as a prophecy of what will follow if the same policy is pursued—I mean a policy of some kind of protection, some kind of inducement, which will bring capital to the aid of our natural advantages and give us the benefit of those advantages in this country.

CAUSES FOR DECLINE OF OUR MERCHANT MARINE.

The honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] asked a question of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce the other day as to the causes of the decline of the merchant marine upon the high seas since the time of the civil war. That is a very pertinent question and a very important one, because the whole proposition comes down to that. We do know as a matter of fact that our merchant marine has fallen steadily and steadily since that time; we do know as a fact that there have been times when we have led the world in that direction, and therefore it becomes a very interesting question to know the causes of the rise and fall of our merchant marine.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say in advance that I shall not interrupt the Senator again if it be disagreeable to him.

Mr. HANNA. I have no objection.

WHEN OUR MARINE BEGAN TO DECLINE.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator to say that the merchant marine of the United States has declined since the close of the civil war. Mr. President, that is not the fact. The decline commenced before the civil war.

Mr. HANNA. I am speaking of foreign commerce.

Mr. VEST. And I am speaking of foreign commerce. The statistics of the Treasury Department show—and they are easily accessible—that that decline commenced in 1855, before the commencement of the civil war, and it is not true, in point of fact, that the civil war caused that decline.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I have very carefully gone into that question, and as there are many facts and figures which I can not carry in my mind I will give the result of my investigations regarding it.

RISE AND DECLINE OF AMERICAN SHIPPING.

When the First Congress met in 1789 the tonnage of American vessels engaged in our foreign trade was 123,893. In the first year after the passage of the first Congressional bill American shipping increased 271 per cent, or to 346,254 tons. Subsequently, from time to time, during the closing years of the first decade under the new Constitution additional legislation helpful to our shipping interests was enacted.

In the first five years, as a result of the encouragement given to our active merchant marine by the Government, our tonnage engaged in the foreign trade increased 362 per cent over 1789, or to 438,663 tons. Of course during this period England and France were at war, which enhanced the opportunities for the profitable employment of neutral shipping, but our navigation laws, so strong and well sustained, were the chief causes for our steady maritime growth.

MERCHANT MARINE GAVE STANDING TO THE NATION.

Nothing contributed so much to our wealth and prosperity at home and to our strength abroad during these years as our active and profitable merchant marine. An unparalleled condition of industrial stagnation had existed for six years. But the immediate increase of our shipping and its profitable employment infused confidence in every line of business. Trade became so prosperous in all parts of the country as to lead to our rapid commercial and maritime growth. It was the growth of our merchant marine alone in the closing days of the first decade under the present Constitution that gave to the United States a standing and a position in the world that it could never have obtained lacking so powerful and prosperous an industry as our shipping.

GROWTH DURING FIRST TEN YEARS.

In 1799, at the end of the first ten years, our merchant marine under register had increased 534 per cent, or to 637,142 tons.

During the second decade American shipping met and surmounted many formidable difficulties, including the Barbary wars, the British impressment of our seamen, the British orders in council, and the decrees of Napoleon, which led to the confiscation of hundreds of our ships and the destruction of millions of dollars worth of our property. But the demand for our ships, and the stability given to the shipbuilding and shipowning industry through the strong support and effective encouragement of our Government, induced our merchants to steadily increase their shipping, notwithstanding their reverses and losses.

UNPARALLELED GROWTH IN TWENTY YEARS.

The end of the second decade, in 1809, found our shipping in the foreign trade registering 906,855 tons, an increase of 790 per cent since 1789. History fails to record a parallel to the growth of American shipping during the first twenty-one years of our national existence. In 1810 the shipping under our flag in our foreign trade was 981,019 tons, the highest point in the first upward growth of our mercantile marine. It was not until 1847—thirty-seven years subsequent to 1810—that our tonnage in the foreign trade was again as high as it was in 1810. Our total tonnage in the foreign trade to-day is less, by more than 150,000 tons, than it was in 1810, although the value of our foreign commerce has increased more than twentyfold during the same period.

THE DECADE BETWEEN 1820 AND 1830.

In 1821 American ships carried 88.7 per cent of American foreign commerce. During the succeeding eight years the proportion of our foreign commerce carried in our own ships averaged 90.6 per cent, reaching the zenith in 1826, when American ships carried 92.5 per cent. In the entire succeeding seventy years the proportion of our foreign commerce carried in American ships has never reached the total or the average of the decade between 1820 and 1830. To-day American ships carry but 9 per cent of the commerce of the United States conducted with foreign countries. Under Government aid and encouragement the zenith period was reached, and during more than a generation of national neglect the zero period has almost been found. In 1828 the last general enactment providing for the gradual and final withdrawal of the aid given in the earlier legislation was adopted.

A STAGNATION PERIOD.

Succeeding this there was a long period of stagnation in American shipowning. The total tonnage under our flag in our foreign trade in 1829 was but 60 per cent of that of 1810. It was not until 1835 that American shipping in the foreign trade again equaled that of 1828.

In 1838 our tonnage in the foreign trade was only 702,962 tons, or 55,000 tons less than in 1828. The average tonnage under our flag in our foreign trade in each of the ten years succeeding 1829 was only 661,361, or 96,637 tons less than it was in 1828. By this time the proportion of our foreign commerce carried under our own flag had decreased to 84 per cent.

SUPERIORITY OF AMERICAN SHIPS.

In 1848 our shipping in the foreign trade amounted to 1,168,707 tons, which was but 20 per cent greater than it was in 1810—nearly 50 per cent greater than it is to-day. But 77.4 per cent of our foreign commerce was then carried under our flag. During all this time, from the foundation of our Government, our people had possessed the superior advantage of cheaper construction. More than that, our ships were far better built than were those of our European rivals, and they therefore lasted longer. In addition, their superior model and the intrepidity of the American seaman, enabled our ships to make three voyages while their foreign rivals were making two. It was these great and telling advantages that so greatly aided in extending the period of time in which our tonnage grew, although our proportion of our own carrying under our own flag steadily diminished. In those days the merchants who shipped the cargoes owned the ships. The masters of the ships were interested in the vessels' earnings in many cases. They sold the outward cargoes and bought those brought home. (A few voyages as master enabled a thrifty American to retire and become a merchant shipowner.) This was before the days of steam and of cable.

THE AMERICAN CLIPPER SHIP WAS EVOLVED—COLLINS LINE PUT ON.

It was not to have been expected that a nation possessing the natural advantages I have described, in cheaper and stronger and faster ships, navigated by keen and intelligent masters personally interested in the voyage, would either immediately or readily succumb to foreign competition. The genius of our shipowners, and their officers and seamen, was equaled by that of our shipbuilders, and the American clipper was evolved at a period when the necessities of the world and the changing conditions created opportunities for their development and increase that were exceptional and potential. Our packet lines carried the palm, and neither the steam nor the iron ship seemed to menace the superiority or the prestige of those grand old sailing ships of the decade between 1845 and 1855. In 1848 the subsidized Collins steamship line carried the American flag across the Atlantic, and for ten years thereafter they outsailed all competitors and securely held for the Stars and Stripes the blue ribbon of the Atlantic.

HOW THE COLLINS LINE WAS RUINED.

It is a well-known fact that a combination of circumstances destroyed that line. They were unfortunate before the close of their career in losing three of their four ships by disaster; but during the whole time of the conduct of their affairs they were met by the most bitter and destructive competition on the part of the subsidized lines of England and other nations of Europe; so that while an American ship lay beside her dock to receive freight prior to her date of sailing—as she was a subsidized ship carrying the United States mail, she was obliged to sail upon a certain day, and, owing to time conditions, even at a certain hour—and her agents were interested in securing a cargo, the rate of freight from New York to Liverpool was anything to beat the United States ship, but immediately after that ship had started upon her voyage across the Atlantic the rates were restored, even to an abnormal condition, by those same competing lines of steamers owned abroad.

There is no man in this presence who does not know that from the beginning of the upbuilding of all our industries that same policy has dominated and controlled the opposition; those who were competing with this new and growing country knew that if the time ever came when we could "stand upon an even keel," either on sea or land, it would be most detrimental to the interests of England and the other nations of Europe.

FOREIGNERS THEREAFTER DICTATED FREIGHT RATES ON AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Under that competition and the peremptory withdrawal in 1858 of the sustaining subsidy that had been paid by our Government, the Collins Line succumbed, the American flag disappeared from the ships carrying mail upon the ocean, and again England and other foreign countries dictated to us the rates of transportation that we should pay upon the exports of our products. What mattered it that our commodities exported to Europe, our farm products, which in those days constituted the most of our exportation, could be raised more cheaply here, owing to the expanse and fertility of our soil; what mattered it what natural advantages we might possess in finding a foreign market for those products, if those who were interested in protecting and developing their own interests absolutely controlled the cost of the transportation of those goods to foreign markets?

DETERMINED TO PREVENT AMERICAN COMPETITION ON THE SEAS.

I say that same policy has always governed, and from a business standpoint it is a perfectly legitimate position, for self-preservation is the first law of nature. Every infant industry that has struggled for existence in the United States from the date of our birth until to-day has had to pass through an ordeal of that kind of competition; and to-day, Mr. President, there is no one question in contest from a commercial standpoint so important and so necessary to the future of the competing countries of the Old World as to prevent American competition upon the high seas.

ZENITH PERIOD OF AMERICAN SHIPPING IN FOREIGN TRADE.

In 1858 our shipping in the foreign trade aggregated 2,301,148 tons, an increase of nearly 100 per cent over 1848. In 1861 it amounted to 2,496,894 tons, this being the greatest tonnage ever under the American flag in the foreign trade in any single year, although but 65.2 per cent of our foreign commerce was then carried in those ships.

Mr. President, I now call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the figures I have been enabled to obtain from the Treasury Department. In 1861 was reached the highest point in the ownership of American-built vessels under the American flag in the foreign trade.

DECLINE SINCE 1861.

The tonnage under the American flag, in the foreign trade, in 1861 was more than three times larger than was engaged in our foreign trade under our flag during the year 1900. Think of that! Nearly forty years ago our shipping upon the high seas was three times greater than it is to-day. Could anything more clearly illustrate the decline of our merchant marine? When we consider that our foreign commerce is fully four times larger in 1900 than it was in 1861, and yet our shipping engaged in its carriage is but one-third of that of 1861, we bring into vivid prominence the shameful and humiliating decline in a great national industry—an industry at once promotive of national prosperity and at the same time an industry that in all times has been the one great bulwark of national defense.

CIVIL WAR DISORGANIZED OUR SHIPPING INTERESTS.

The civil war completely disorganized our entire ocean-going and coastwise shipping interests. The transfers of vessel property during those four years were enormous. The enemy captured and destroyed 104,605 tons; foreigners purchased 774,652 tons; there was built for or purchased by our Government 417,521 tons; the Government chartered 757,611 tons, and 664,505 tons went from the foreign into the domestic trade of the United States—a total of 2,818,894 tons of American shipping that thus changed hands.

DECREASE OF SHIPPING UNDER REGISTER.

Our shipping under register had decreased 40 per cent, or was 1,000,000 tons less in 1865 than it had been in 1861. From carrying 65.2 per cent of our foreign commerce in 1861 American ships carried but 27.7 per cent in 1865.

NOTHING TO INDUCE AMERICANS TO RESUME SHIPOWNING.

To a large extent our people gave up shipowning in the foreign trade during the civil war, and after the war there was everything to discourage them from reentering. In the first place, those who had preserved their capital had it invested in other industries, from which there was nothing to induce them to withdraw in order to resume shipowning in the foreign trade. In the second place, steam was more rapidly displacing sail and iron displacing wood, and the construction of iron vessels being much more costly in the United States than in England, the cost of operating our ships being higher than the cost of operating foreign ships, the war taxes being then so high on everything, especially ships, and the Government giving no protection to American in competition with foreign ships, naturally the American people dropped out of the foreign carrying trade, in which cheaper-built, cheaper-operated, and heavily subsidized foreign ships had already secured control.

CONDITIONS IN 1812-1815 COMPARED WITH 1861-1865.

Conditions were vastly different at the close of our civil war, with respect to ship owning, from what they were at the close of the war of 1812-1815. At the close of the last-named war our laws distinctly discriminated in favor of American ships in competition with foreign ships, and the preference thus given to our own ships was quite sufficient to induce our shipowners to immediately resume the carrying of our foreign commerce, the advantage under our laws then being wholly in favor of American vessels, which latter were also built cheaper and sailed much faster than their foreign rivals.

DISADVANTAGES AMERICAN SHIPS WERE UNDER AT CLOSE OF CIVIL WAR.

At the close of the civil war the situation was entirely different, as I have endeavored to show. The preferred ship at that time was the foreign iron sailing and steam vessels, vessels that cost far more to build in the United States than they cost to build abroad. Our wooden sailing vessels were naturally inferior in speed to the iron steamer, and the British classification societies, which give the rating to vessels upon which insurance is based, favored the iron much more than the wooden vessel. Again, our laws gave no preference to American vessels in competition with foreign vessels in our foreign trade; in fact, absolute free trade in carrying then prevailed and has prevailed ever since, save in the intermittent periods when postal subsidies were paid to American steamships.

In a carefully prepared report on "Foreign commerce and decadence of American shipping," written on January 25, 1870, Mr. Joseph Nimmo, jr., then chief of the Treasury division of tonnage, and who subsequently became Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, went into this subject at a time when we were but just recovering from the effects of the civil war.

COMPARATIVE COST OF AMERICAN AND BRITISH SHIPS IN 1870.

On page 20 of that report, which is Executive Document No. 111 of the second session of the Forty-second Congress, Mr. Nimmo summarizes his investigations of the subject and the information he had received, saying in part:

The facts are stated as they were received. They seem to indicate an advantage in building iron vessels, on the side of England, of about 33 per cent as compared with the United States.

Mr. Nimmo compiled his statistics after visiting the leading Atlantic coast shipyards and conferring with their owners and with the owners of ships in our foreign trade. On page 21 of his report he further says:

It is probable that the relative cost of building iron ocean steamers in England and in the United States does not differ far from the above estimate, viz, 33 per cent.

FOREIGN SHIPS RECEIVED HIGHER FREIGHT RATES.

His information was that from a dollar to a dollar and a half more per ton was paid on freight carried in iron than was paid on freight carried in wooden vessels in certain trades. Again, there was an advantage estimated at 14 per cent in the carrying capacity of an iron sailing ship as compared with a wooden ship of the same size, which increased to 28 per cent in iron as compared with wooden steamers, for the reason that there was more buoyancy and less weight of material in an iron than there was in a wooden ship.

DISADVANTAGES ONLY BEGAN WITH CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS.

These disadvantages did not cease with the construction of ships; they only began. And it is here that I trust I shall hold the close attention of my distinguished colleague from Colorado, who specifically asked the Senator from Maine the other day just what it was that caused the decline in American shipping, beginning with the civil war. I am hopeful that I shall present to him, from official records, statistics and facts that will satisfy him thoroughly upon this most important moot point.

COST OF OPERATING AN AMERICAN AND A BRITISH SHIP COMPARED.

In one of the tables accompanying his report Mr. Nimmo shows that the cost of operating for one year a thousand-ton American wooden sailing ship, including insurance, depreciation, victualing, wages, and the internal-revenue tax, as compared with an English iron ship of the same size, was $31,812 and $19,674, respectively, or an advantage of $12,138, or 61 per cent, in favor of the English ship as compared with her American competitor. Mr. Nimmo assumed each ship to cost $90,000 in American currency. In figuring the cost of operation, while the wages of seamen largely contribute to the cost, the wide difference which is known to exist between the wages of seamen in the United States and those of foreign countries does not by any means make up the entire cost of operation.

FURTHER COMPARISONS.

In those early days with which we are now dealing money was worth only one-half in England what it was worth in the United States. If a man borrowed capital to invest in shipbuilding or shipowning, his interest was twice the amount of his competitor's and his taxes were four or five times that amount, because it has always been the policy of the English Government, in addition to the policy of directly subsidizing their mail steamers, to make such concessions in the application of their laws as in effect to give an additional subsidy to their ships. In other words, the tax on shipping property is almost nothing, and all their internal-revenue laws exempt shipping. Everything was done in those days to help build up their power on the high seas, in commerce as well as in war.

WAGES 69 PER CENT HIGHER ON AMERICAN THAN ON BRITISH STEAMER.

In another table he compares the yearly pay of officers and crew of a British and an American steamer of 3,000 tons as being $36,649.06 and $61,788, respectively, showing that the wage cost alone on an American steamship of this size was over 69 per cent higher than it was on her British competitor.

TAXES ON AN AMERICAN AND A BRITISH STEAMSHIP LINE COMPARED.

The conditions existing at that time have been changed very considerably, as I will show hereafter. Taking a $3,000,000 line of American steamers owned in New York, and comparing it with a British line of the same value, Mr. Nimmo showed that the State, county, and city tax, the duty on supplies consumed on shipboard, and the United States tax on passenger receipts and on the company's profits on the American line were $155,500 a year, the British line paying as an offset but $10,000 in Great Britain.

WHY CONDITIONS ARE BETTER TO-DAY.

Now, I am not claiming that those conditions apply to-day, but what I wish to bring out is that at that time, following the destruction of our merchant marine as a result of the war, when we were at the threshold, beginning once more to attempt at least to build up the merchant marine, we were confronted with the conditions to which I have referred. If those conditions have been bettered during that time, it is owing to the fact, more than any other, that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate has given his unfaltering support to every measure, as to this one, which has sought once more to rehabilitate us upon the high seas and restore the American flag to its rightful place on all the oceans of the world.

Mr. President, I feel it a privilege on this floor to pay that tribute to the one American citizen who, during his whole public life, has made this question a study, and has brought to his assistance all the information of those who know about it, and who has studied and made applicable every advantage, natural or otherwise, which could be brought to reenforce and strengthen our merchant marine. Not only the building and operating of ships, but all other accessories which make the navigation of the oceans, of the rivers, and of our lakes easy and profitable have been a part of that great question, which has been forced upon the attention of the American people until, as I stated, to-day, in my judgment, there is no policy that appeals so strongly to the American people as does the building up of this great sea power of ours.

SHIPPING INDUSTRY GIVES PRESTIGE AND POWER.

I say the conditions that obtain to-day are better than they were when this report was made, and I hope they will continue to grow better. They certainly will if the people of this country are willing to study this proposition from the standpoint of mutual benefit and national benefit, free from all prejudice, politics, or sectionalism. It is an industry aside from the mere employment of labor, aside from its influence upon our natural development, which, as this report says, will give us a prestige and a power among the nations of the earth, both in peace and in war.

Meanwhile foreign lines were perfecting their equipment and organization, intrenching themselves in the possession of the avenues of trade, and reducing cost of operation to the minimum.

It seems to be equally clear that, the cost of operating American sailing and steam vessels then being between 60 and 70 per cent higher than the cost of operating competing British ships, the mere privilege of granting an American registry to foreign-built vessels would have utterly failed to attract our people back into shipowning for our foreign trade.

NOTHING TO REATTRACT AMERICANS INTO FOREIGN TRADE.

Under the conditions recited in Mr. Nimmo's report of that time, which stood as facts before the men who controlled capital, the men who were seeking investments, the men who had been participating in this business, exercising the usual conservative consideration that every business man gives to investments, is it any wonder that any business interest of this country, corporate or individual, would not seek again to invest in ships in the foreign trade? Such a proposition would be an insult to the intelligence of the business interests of this country.

OBSTACLES SEEMED INSURMOUNTABLE.

Mr. President, if the facts and figures which I have given are not convincing as a reason to be assigned for the fall of our American shipping interests since the civil war, I know of none better to offer, because this whole matter is a simple business question as affecting the investment of capital, although I contend that there is another element in it which should appeal to the patriotism and pride of the American people. But that feeling can only be engendered after the fact has been accomplished, and the first thing necessary is to put the industry upon a basis so that it will attract capital, in order to insure its consummation. The business people who have been engaged in the foreign trade of the United States for the last thirty or forty years have met obstacles which seemed in many instances almost insurmountable.

FEW MODERN AMERICAN SHIPS.

I have cited a few of them, but there have been obstacles at every step of our development in that direction, so that to-day the number of modern ships owned by American citizens operating in the foreign trade can almost be counted upon the fingers of both hands. During the last twenty or thirty years there has been little, if any, addition to that fleet. I know of none except the four vessels which constitute what is called the American Line, operated to-day under an act of Congress providing a mail subsidy, one or two vessels plying between San Francisco and Australia, and two or three vessels between New York and some of the Central American States. For the last decade there has not been added to the merchant marine of the United States over 10,000 tons per annum, and that only where the business has been secured and held by those who have devoted a lifetime to the building up of that particular trade and who have been successful because of their competency and industry in that direction, and the inadequate subsidies their owners have, in almost every case, received from the Government.

In the meantime, what has happened elsewhere? Everybody conversant with the development of ocean transportation knows that immediately following our civil war, when the people of the United States made the effort, which I have recited, to rehabilitate their merchant marine, the nations of the world, with their usual shrewdness and business perception, knowing full well the disadvantages under which the American people labored in view of those conditions, immediately began a rivalry to see which one could earliest secure for itself this great trade with the United States.

FOREIGN SHIPPING SUBSIDIZED.

Nation after nation followed each other in rapid succession, passing laws directly subsidizing steamers for any and every part of the globe. England, foremost by reason of her natural advantages, opened new shipyards until at last, within a very few years, miles—yes, I say miles—of ships upon the stocks were visible in the yards of Scotland, England, and Ireland. From that day to the present time there has been no cessation of that effort, and, in proportion as the effort is made in this country, the effort is redoubled in the countries of our competitors, in order so fully to occupy the ground that there can be no temptation, even with the superfluity of capital in this country, to induce our people to engage in shipping.

AGENTS OF FOREIGN SHIPS SEEKING TO DEFEAT PENDING BILL.

Any business man who has watched the drift of current events from the close of the civil war until to-day has found that to be the most prominent policy adopted in foreign competition with us in any direction. Every time a measure looking to the development of our shipping interests has been brought before a House of Congress, immediately the agents and representatives of those in competition were on the ground ready, and anxious to defeat it.

THE PRESENT POSTAL SUBSIDY LAW.

In this connection, I wish to say a few words in regard to the much-abused American Line of steamers. I do not propose to avoid any part of this issue. I do not propose to run away from the tongue of slander or the imputation of motives other than those to promote the best interests of the country on the part of any man connected in any way with this question from the beginning to the end. Several years ago a bill passed Congress, passing the Senate first, granting a mail subsidy to the International Steamship Company. It passed the Senate after thorough consideration by the Committee on Commerce, and, as I understand, after thorough discussion of the question in the Senate, and if it had become a law as it passed the Senate it would have given to that line as compensation for carrying the United States mails, under the conditions enforced by the Department, exactly what this bill would give. The compensation was considered fair and reasonable by the Senate.

The bill went to the House in the closing day of the session, and, under a spasmodic effort to chop things off, I suppose, as sometimes occurs, a certain percentage was stricken from it without any particular argument or reason for it, except perhaps that the Committee on Appropriations were cutting down expenses. There was no further time to consider the measure, and the conference committee adopted the report. But it then came to be a very serious question whether the men or company who had proposed to avail themselves of the benefits of the law would accept it or not.

PATRIOTIC EFFORTS OF AMERICAN LINE.

Their judgment was against it, but finally it was accepted as a venture, as I honestly believe inspired by no little patriotism, because along the seaboard of the Atlantic Ocean there has always been a sentiment in favor of the sight of the American flag at the masthead of ships and there has always been a feeling of humiliation that this great industry had been stricken down first by the combination of circumstances which I have recited, and latterly by a condition enforced here through the negligence or disinclinarion of our Government to do that which was being done every year by every competitive government in the world.

It was a close question whether the contract would be availed of, and I can say, from information given to me directly, that under that contract those four ships have never earned a net dollar. It is unfair to attribute unworthy motives to the men who have been engaged in this industry from the beginning of the development of our merchant marine, who have devoted all their energies and the best part of their lives to building up this industry, and who, when they appealed to the Representatives in Congress, have been granted some consideration, perhaps undertaken on the part of the lawgivers as an experiment, perhaps with the belief that after the experiment had been made, if found to be good, they could conscientiously go further in that direction.

Mr. President, there are many people in this country who are honestly and earnestly in favor of building up our merchant marine, but I am sorry to say that they have been more or less affected by statements made in the newspapers, irresponsible statements, statements that can not be supported by facts, as to the motives and purposes underlying this measure.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] in his remarks attempted to show the net profits that would come to the American Line of steamers as a result of this subsidy. I believe he placed them at $304,000 per annum per ship.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to state that I did not say the net profits to those ships would be $304,000 a year. I said that the gross subsidy would be $304,000 a year.

Mr. HANNA. I accept that statement. It is a better way to state it. I admit that. That is the proportion they would receive. I do not know how the Senator arrived at those figures. I do not know how many voyages he took into consideration in arriving at those figures, because the earning of the subsidy on the part of the vessel depends upon the number of miles sailed. It is a well-known fact that the American Line of steamers, under their contract with the Government, must have a weekly sailing day from New York and Southampton. To perform that weekly service takes four ships, and I think we have a right to take the facts as they appear from the records of that company to guide us in making our estimate as to the amount of subsidy which the company would earn. What do the records show?

COMPENSATION FOR FAST MAIL STEAMSHIPS.

The steamer St. Louis in one season, when I presume there was an extraordinary effort made—for, as Senators know, there is a good deal of competition in the trans-Atlantic carrying of passengers and cargo—made 14 trips, but the average of the steamers of the line which go to fulfill the contract was only 11 trips, and they have never exceeded that, and it would be a physical impossibility for them to do so. A 21-knot ship has to run at her utmost speed every day, under all conditions, to make even closely approximating that time. There are adverse winds, unfavorable weather, minor accidents, which are always occurring, many things to delay, and when we come to consider it as a business proposition we have a right to state just exactly what the records show. Therefore, in the operation of that line, taking 11 trips as a basis, the earning proportion of the subsidy would be below $290,000. As I said a moment ago, a close calculation shows that under the pending bill it would be exactly what they claimed was necessary when the bill which has since become a law passed the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I was unable to hear distinctly what the Senator from Ohio said. Did he state the amount which, in his opinion, the American International Navigation Company would receive by the year and in the aggregate from this bill?

Mr. HANNA. I can not hear the Senator from Missouri distinctly.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from Ohio to challenge the correctness of the estimate made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HANNA. I did.

Mr. VEST. I wish to know what the Senator thinks the American International Company, with the ships they now have and the four ships they are building abroad, which, of course, would come in for a portion of the subsidy—50 per cent of it—would receive per year for the twenty years, and how much in the aggregate for the whole twenty years.

Mr. HANNA. I took a quotation, if I quoted it correctly, from the Senator from Georgia. He designated the steamer St. Louis, and said it would receive $304,000. Am I right?

Mr. CLAY. Three hundred and four thousand two hundred and ninety dollars.

Mr. HANNA. And I made inquiry as to how he obtained those figures. A ship, as I said, only earns the subsidy while she is sailing, and 11 trips is the maximum, in my judgment, that can be obtained by steamers of that class, taking into account all the things which they have to meet in the course of a year, and the calculation that I have made upon the basis of 11 trips shows that such a steamer could not earn within twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars of as much as the Senator from Georgia stated.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the hearings before the Committee on Commerce, page 75, where there is a table prepared by Mr. Clyde himself, who testified before the committee in favor of this measure. He is a gentleman who knows all about ships. We all know that. He puts the exact amount at $304,290. That will be found on page 75 of the hearing before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HANNA. I am not using Mr. Clyde's figures. I am using my own.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator has not already examined upon this point, in the report of the Commissioner of Navigation, Mr. Chamberlain, for 1900, he will find that he states the amount earned during the year by the St. Paul at $304,290.

Mr. HANNA. Do I understand the Senator to say "having earned" or "that it would probably earn?"

Mr. VEST. That they had received from the subsidy.

Mr. HANNA. Under the new bill?

Mr. VEST. Under the new bill. That is Mr. Chamberlain's own statement, and he is the most favorable witness who can be found in this country.

Mr. HANNA. Well, Mr. President, the way of arriving at those figures either by Mr. Clyde or Mr. Chamberlain or myself——

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission, I do not want to interrupt him, but is it not true that the Commissioner——

Mr. SPOONER. Let the Senator from Ohio finish his sentence.

Mr. CLAY. I do not ask the question unless it is perfectly agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. HANNA. Everything is agreeable.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to ask the Senator is it not true that the Commissioner of Navigation in his report corresponds with the statement made by Mr. Clyde before the committee in regard to the amount to be received by this bill?

Mr. HANNA. I am not discussing that or disputing it. I am giving you the figures that I have made as a result of my calculations. If I am mistaken in a matter of a few thousand dollars, I do not place so much stress upon a slight difference of figures. I am only trying to illustrate the principle that in order to secure the service of American ships to serve the Government in carrying her mails, the ships under the American flag should be entitled, as a matter of right and justice and public policy, to an equal compensation paid to ships in competing lines.

NO INCENTIVE IN PRESENT BILL FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FAST STEAMSHIPS.

As to this bill offering any further inducement, even at the advanced compensation for the people in this country engaged in that trade to continue the construction of fast liners as a matter of business investment, I doubt if anyone would venture any further in that direction. We all know that in the competition in trans-Atlantic lines to-day, England and Germany and France are all competing to have and to operate the ship which will cross the Atlantic Ocean between Sandy Hook and the ports on the other side in the shortest time. We also know that that spirit of competition is in the way of advertising for the passenger traffic. Therefore I say that it is only a question as far as American interests are concerned how much loss they are prepared to meet in order to advertise their ships as the swiftest ships crossing the Atlantic Ocean. There is no profit in the business; there never has been to that line, and there never will be under these conditions. And I say that in my own judgment and from my own standpoint there will not be another dollar, for years to come, of American capital invested in 21 or 22 knot ships.

The foundation of this measure is based upon the proposition, first, to overcome the difference in cost of construction; next, the difference in cost of operation. The foundation of the subsidy measure is to begin at the minimum rate per mile sailed, which is applied to all ships alike. Then when you get above a 12-knot ship, where the relative cost of operation increases, doubles, trebles, and quadruples almost upon each knot of forced speed, increased compensation or speed allowance, as we call it, is given to each class. For instance, the 8 or 10 knot ship under this bill receives so much per mile sailed on the gross tonnage of the vessel.

BILL WILL ATTRACT CAPITAL INTO CARGO SHIPS.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in his speech the other day, explained better than I can those provisions; but I know this much, that under the operations of the bill the slow, low-power, heavy freighting ship will derive the greatest benefit. A greater inducement is offered for investing American capital in those ships; and if the bill should become a law, it will be demonstrated as a fact which will be availed of by those seeking investment in shipping by the building up of the lower-power, heavy freighting ships.

I sympathize fully and earnestly with the other side on that question. That is the first thing I want to see the bill pass for, to offer an inducement for American capital seeking investment to turn its attention to this one industry, which is so lagging as a contributing part to our development and progress. I say I do not believe that anybody, even though the bill may become a law, will invest money in the fast-sailing mail-carrying steamers, at least not until conditions change.

Of all the projects that I have heard discussed in connection with this measure every one has been along the line, first, of the low power carrying freighter, and then of the medium speed of vessel, 16 to 17 knots, which is about the medium cost of operation. A steamer which shall carry passengers and freight as well will have a greater earning capacity based upon her carrying capacity and not upon the miles run within a certain time.

Mr. President, in this connection the Senator from Georgia went into a full explanation of the kind of cargoes carried by these several lines of ships. He showed that a certain steamer which he named, a freight steamer, had carried so many thousand tons as a cargo of the products of our farms and gave to the American Line or the fast mail steamer the credit of carrying only passengers, and I believe champagne. I think something was said about that. He explained fully and satisfactorily that the reason why the passenger mail steamer was not a large cargo-carrying vessel was because in order to make the speed of 20 or 21 knots she would be obliged to carry a very large amount of fuel, and she would have a very large proportion of the room occupied by passenger accommodations, so that the amount of freight room would be reduced to a minimum. That is exactly true.

It is also true that under the provisions of the bill in establishing the rate by which each is to receive compensation all those conditions should be taken into consideration in her measurement. Everyone who knows anything about the contract with the Government already in existence knows that each one of those steamers is obliged to sail from New York on a certain day, carrying the United States mail whether they have a full cargo or a part of a cargo. Everyone knows that the compensation to each of those vessels is based upon the fact, not of her being a big freight-cargo ship, but because she is a United States mail ship, carrying the mails of the United States in competition with foreign lines, where the time of the delivery of those mails is very important; in fact, it is a necessary feature of the contract.

Should it be brought up as an argument against the revival of the merchant marine of the United States that the American people should attempt to meet the rivalry and competition of England and Germany? Is it an argument against this measure that it should be the desire on the part of this Government that at least a portion of her mail should be carried under the American flag? If so, then we have no business upon the high seas.

WHAT FAST AMERICAN LINERS DID DURING WAR WITH SPAIN.

Mr. President, the time has not faded out of the memory of members in this Chamber when, during our war with Spain, the people of the Atlantic coast were shivering with terror and appealing to the Departments of this Government for coast protection against the invasion of the Spanish navy and those unknown but much-dreaded torpedo-boat destroyers. Everyone who was here and conversant with affairs during that time knows that from the northern coast of Maine to the coast of Florida there was one uninterrupted demand upon the War Department for coast-protecting guns. Every one of our large commercial cities upon the Atlantic coast thought it needed more and immediate defense for life and property.

But, Mr. President, when it was known that those four ships of the American Line which had been chartered by the Navy Department, manned by their own crews, every man of whom had taken the oath of allegiance to the cause for which they proposed to fight, I say when it became known that those four swift steamers were on the picket line on the ocean, steamers that could show their heels to any man-of-war in the Spanish navy, ready to transmit to our fleet of war ships any plans or information on the part of the supposed invaders, there was a feeling of confidence, of complete confidence, of safety, that if you would descend to measure it by a money value would be worth more than the whole subsidy proposed in this bill.

I say, Mr. President, that when we attempt to combat prejudice which is used against an enterprise that induces our people to go so far in that direction of sentiment, if you please to call it, as did those who built and who run those ships, we have got to appeal to the people of the country and go behind those missionaries of foreign shipowners who come to educate Congress.

VALUE TO NAVY OF AUXILIARY MERCHANT SHIPS.

There is no one thing in the building up of our great Navy that is more important as an auxiliary than to have a merchant marine of vessels of modern type, of sufficient speed and strength, built under this bill, which are made under the law a part of the United States Navy whenever the Secretary, in his judgment, sees fit to call them into action.

It is a well-known fact that at the beginning of the Spanish war, while we had a Navy equal, even surpassing that of our adversary, we had no ships except those of the American Line that could be used as pickets. We had not enough ships to transport our men to Cuba or Porto Rico. We were obliged to avail ourselves of nearly every vessel plying in the coastwise trade, and we bought hundreds of tons of vessel room from foreigners.

Mr. MASON. And we paid any price for it.

Mr. HANNA. And we paid any price for it in the emergency. I can not impress too strongly that feature of this bill upon those who were called upon to legislate on that question. Even putting aside the feeling of pride and patriotism which should be a part of it, as a purely business proposition, I say, Mr. President, that it is a mistaken policy not to have at the service of our Government these auxiliary cruisers.

Mr. VEST. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. HANNA. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. It is simply for information. There is one section of the bill which provides that all vessels which shall be deemed necessary to be auxiliary to the naval power of the United States—I think I quote the exact words—shall receive the subsidy. Does the Senator understand the bill to mean that transports and supply ships that are called into requisition by the Secretary of the Navy are to receive a subsidy?

Mr. HANNA. From the Navy Department, because of that service? No, sir.

Mr. VEST. Does the language of the bill, which says auxiliary to the naval power, mean that transports and supply ships shall receive a subsidy without being armed?

Mr. HANNA. No, not at all; but every ship that is built under the provisions of the bill will receive a subsidy. Those ships are owned by American citizens. What we call the auxiliary-cruiser feature of the bill provides that a certain class of ships shall be subject to the call and amenable to the service of the United States Government.

Mr. VEST. That is one section of the bill——

Mr. HANNA. I know; and that is the section I am talking about, the auxiliary cruisers.

Mr. VEST. But I ask about the other section, which declares that all ships which shall be deemed auxiliary to the naval power of the United States shall receive a subsidy. Now, does that include or does it not include transports and supply ships that are not armed? The section to which the Senator refers is the one which declares that the subsidized steamships whose decks are strengthened so that they can bear guns and can be used as cruisers shall receive a subsidy. That is unquestionable. But what is the meaning of the other section, which uses the words "auxiliary to the naval power?" Is not a transport or a supply ship auxiliary, and if they receive a subsidy is there anything in the bill which prohibits them from being paid besides by the Navy Department?

Mr. HANNA. I do not understand it so.

Mr. VEST. Then you ought to change the language of the bill.

Mr. HANNA. If I made my statement too sweeping with reference to the auxiliary cruisers, I will qualify it. I was simply speaking of that section of the bill which put the obligation upon certain vessels built under the provisions of the bill in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy. All ships built under the bill are to receive a subsidy in proportion to the speed and carrying capacity of the ship. But such vessels, when requisitioned by the Government, of course cease from that moment to receive subsidy, and so long as they are subject to the control of the Government they receive no subsidy. That, Mr. President, is a feature of this bill which I do not believe is fully understood in this country.

ALL CLASSES OF SHIPS TREATED ALIKE IN BILL.

I have noticed many newspaper comments and criticisms upon this measure, nearly all tending to the one point—that this whole measure is intended to be in the interest of certain lines or certain kinds of steamships. I deny it. I deny it because in all the discussion that has taken place during the construction of this measure by the so-called Maritime Committee every kind of a ship and every kind of trade was represented there. No one man or no one agency had any more power in shaping the policy embodied in the bill there framed than any other. I speak for myself, and I know I reflect the sentiment of the Maritime Committee when I state as the sole purpose and object that we started upon the hypothesis that something must be done to build up our merchant marine if we were to have one, and, as I said in the beginning, the spirit of conciliation and compromise prevailed at every meeting that was held and every discussion that was had.

I claim that the men who have and who take the responsibility of this measure before the country are entitled to just as much consideration for honesty of purpose and ability to accomplish the result as the people who criticise the measure as a subsidy. It was intended that the very class of vessels specially mentioned by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] as the most useful to this country should receive the first and the highest consideration at the hands of the committee. It is to the low-power ship, the economic ship, the ship that can bring to us the lowest prices of transportation, that the fullest consideration is given; and when it is said that all of the benefits of this provision will be given to lines already in operation, to the men already controlling certain lines and certain business facilities engaged in foreign trade, I say that it is not true.

MEN IN THE BUSINESS MUST BE LOOKED TO TO REVIVE IT.

Yet as you go to put into successful operation the provisions of the proposed law, where will you look for the accomplishment of its purposes, which is so earnestly desired, but to the men who have given their lifetime to the study and operation of each business which is peculiar unto itself? If we have a few ships engaged in foreign trade to-day, all the better. If we can induce the men who are conducting that business to build more ships, all the better; it accomplishes the result for which we are striving. If the upbuilding of the merchant marine of the United States depends upon the successful issue of the measure, it must be through the hands and under the administration of the men who know and thoroughly understand the business.

ADMISSION OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS.

The question of the admission of foreign tonnage to American registry is troubling many, and it troubled me. I have always been opposed, as a matter of principle, to giving advantage to ships constructed abroad. I was inclined to take a narrow view of that proposition when I was first called into the councils of this committee; but there are none of us who know so much upon any subject that we can not learn something, and I learned from those discussions that it was necessary to protect the property and the capital of American citizens who had invested their money in foreign-built ships, who in the conduct of their business found it absolutely necessary that they should have ships, and finding it impossible because of the higher cost to build those ships in the United States, in order to further their business interests, were obliged to invest their capital in foreign-built ships and operate them under a foreign flag.

In that way, owing to the rapid and continuous development of our export trade, in the growth of their business in connection with our affairs at home, and through energy and effort on their part, several important lines have been established and maintained fairly well against all competition. I speak now of foreign ships owned by American citizens and operated under a foreign flag. When it came to the consideration of this question in perfecting the measure which was to come before Congress and the people of the United States, it was very important that consideration should be given to everybody alike, and there was no attempt to do otherwise and no thought or desire to do otherwise.

CONSIDERATION SHOWN AMERICAN OWNERS OF FOREIGN-BUILT SHIPS.

We felt that it was our duty as much to those who had acquired interests in ships under a foreign flag, without any prospect of anything better, and in the protection and development of their own business interests had invested their capital in that direction, that the only men who are experienced and able to put into effective operation the provisions of this law, must receive just as much consideration as those representing any other interest; and they did, but under different conditions. That was a concession made, and entirely made, to that spirit which dominates the American people, that we shall first take care of ourselves when considering the question of competition.

CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.

The condition was made that for every ship owned by American capital and operated under a foreign flag, when their owners availed themselves of the provisions of this bill, the contract would not be complete until they had constructed in the shipyards of the United States a tonnage equal to that coming under American registry. In that connection came the interest of the American shipbuilder.

Mr. President, one of the first objections that I met in the informal discussion of this bill among business men of my acquaintance in the East was that the measure was framed purely upon the plan of building our own tonnage, even although Congress might decide to give it exclusively to that class of vessels, owing to the fact that under the conditions which had existed in this country ever since the civil war the shipbuilding industry of this country had been confined entirely to the construction of coastwise and naval vessels. The shipbuilding industry of the United States has not been profitable since then, and capital has not sought that industry for investment.

What they wanted was immediate relief, the opportunity at this time, now, to take advantage of the conditions which seemed so favorable to make one more effort in this direction, and therefore the claim was that if you depend upon the limited capacity of the shipyards of the United States, already almost filled to overflowing in the construction of our magnificent Navy, of which we are all so proud, before a merchant marine can be built which will be of any service or relief to the business of the country our competitors, with the full knowledge of our purpose and intent, will, as they have always done, be ready to meet us and circumvent us if possible.

FOREIGNERS FEAR AMERICAN COMPETITION.

I said a moment ago that every time the question of subsidizing American ships was even mentioned in the newspapers of the United States there came a renewed effort and a continuing effort for the upbuilding of English and German ships, even to the extent that a credit almost unheard of was offered by the shipbuilders in Europe, saying: "We will build your ships; we will let you pay for them when you can; we will extend to you a rate of interest one-half what you would be obliged to pay in your own country; we will do anything, we will do everything, rather than have you invest your capital in ships built in the United States."

I say that the necessity for immediate relief in the direction which I have indicated was the one overpowering argument, because it appealed to my business sense as right, that if the Government of the United States was willing to take the responsibility of expending the money of the people in this direction, every man who is called upon to cast his vote upon this legislation would want to feel that the result would justify that vote.

No one can be blamed for considering that feature of this case. Therefore I say it was an argument that appealed to the business sense of that committee, and I believe to a large proportion of the committee of the Senate, that, having by our action adopted that policy, we felt it was necessary that the results should justify the act, and that those results should come quickly. In other words, the benefit to those who would avail themselves of the privileges in their export trade—I mean the shippers—if they found that as a result of this measure they would soon have the opportunity to ship their export goods in American bottoms and under the American flag, they would know further, and they would know it surely, too, that that would mean a competition which would result in lowering freights across the Atlantic and the Pacific.

GROWTH OF NATIONAL INDUSTRIES.

In one of the many speeches made yesterday, although we are all well aware of the great development of our country, I must confess that I was almost astonished at the figures read by Governor Shaw, of Iowa, showing the development of this country during the last century, what tremendous strides we have made in our export trade, and showing, too, the extent of the undertaking, under the auspices of the United States Government, in a measure which we are soon to consider, the Nicaragua Canal bill, a sister interest in connection with our merchant marine.

REDUCED COST OF TRANSPORTATION.

In connection with that subject is to be considered the cost of transportation, which I quoted as a result of the development of the lake commerce in less than thirty years, where there has been a reduction from $3.50 a ton to 60 cents a ton on iron ore, standard rate. When Governor Shaw made the statement of the immense tonnage moved upon our railroads and the further statement that the cost of railroad transportation in this country was always less than one-third that of Europe, quoting England and Germany, it only showed that this whole subject of transportation goes together, and the Nicaragua Canal and any other contributing cause that helps to cheapen transportation will be in the interest of the people of this country. But after we have built that canal and opened up that great highway to the commerce of the world, and we find ourselves confined utterly and absolutely to our coastwise trade, a trade which is forbidden to foreigners, how can we reconcile that as a public-spirited measure commensurate with a great country, starting now on the highway to a development and prosperity unequaled in the history of the world, unless we pass the pending bill?

A PLAIN BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

Mr. President, to my mind there never was a plainer business, common-sense proposition to justify action on the part of this Government to give such aid as is necessary to attract capital and lay the foundation for the building up of this great industry, than is offered by this bill.

Conditions in this country to-day differ widely from those of the time immediately following the civil war. I need not refer to those conditions, but steadily and sturdily have we been growing in importance in our commerce, in our industries, and in the development of our natural resources.

There is one feature of this question which I desire briefly to touch upon, and that is from the standpoint of the shipbuilder. The upbuilding of the merchant marine of this country means more than many can appreciate without a careful study of the situation. The privilege which we give to those American citizens who bring under our registry a foreign-built vessel, requiring that they must build a compensating tonnage in this country, will make a demand, without any doubt, in the next five years, for more capacity than we have shipyards in this country to supply.

HOW BILL WILL INCREASE OUR SHIPPING.

Six hundred thousand tons—300,000 tons now in existence and 300,000 tons more to be newly built—would be added to our merchant marine, because under the provisions of this bill it is intended—and rightly so—that the benefits shall not be confined to those who first avail themselves of this $9,000,000. Anybody and everybody can go on and build ships and then go to the Secretary of the Treasury and ask a contract under the same provisions, and when he has complied with the features of the law, given bond, and signed the contract, his ship can be registered for the foreign trade and begin earning the same proportionate amount of subsidy as that given to the ships which were built and in operation before the $9,000,000 was absorbed.

It was intended and it is expected that that provision of the bill as we grow in experience and ability, as we enlarge this sphere of industry, if it is found profitable, will attract idle capital not otherwise invested; and if it pays more than the normal rate of 2 or 3 per cent interest—which has come to be the rate on the best securities upon which money can be invested—then it will have served the purpose that is intended, to not confine the size of this merchant marine in tonnage or number within the limit of the $9,000,000—not that the $9,000,000 is to be increased; but that any man who builds a vessel after that amount has been absorbed can come under the provisions of the bill, and that the necessary percentage shall be taken from the others and given to him.

EMPLOYMENT FOR AMERICAN LABOR THROUGH BUILDING SHIPS AT HOME.

One word about our shipbuilding industry. I say, should this bill become a law, it will immediately affect that industry very perceptibly and very beneficially. What does that mean? Every ship that is built in a yard of the United States will be built wholly from materials furnished in the United States, beginning with the iron ore in the ground. Every additional ton that is demanded for this new industry will be an addition to the demand for labor in this country.

It will take that many more men to mine that ore—and I speak now more particularly of ores from Lake Superior, which is the source of our main supply—to handle it on the railroads to the lake shipping points and then on vessels to the distributing points on the lower lake, then to furnish additional ships needed upon the lakes, additional men to man them, additional men to handle that ore upon the docks in its reshipment, additional men to aid the transportation to the point of manufacture, then through all the ramifications of that manufacture to bring that iron ore into a condition to go into the ship and during the construction of that ship until she is slipped upon the waters and is a part of the merchant marine of the United States, thousands of men will find employment in an industry heretofore comparatively unknown to this country.

WE MUST SECURE AND HOLD FOREIGN MARKETS FOR OUR EXPORTS.

Mr. President, when we look at the rapid growth of the population of the United States, aided so largely, as it is, by immense immigration, over half a million of people coming to our shores every year from foreign countries, attracted here by the belief, in fact, by the certainty, that they can better their condition, and when we find in that connection that the production in the United States is one-third larger than our consumption, we are met with a very serious proposition, a proposition which, from an economic standpoint in connection with this interest and any other legislation, should command our most serious consideration.

OUR PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY ONE-THIRD GREATER THAN OUR CONSUMING CAPACITY.

I say our productive capacity is one-third greater than our consumption. So, either one of two things must happen; we must either find a foreign market for that surplus or we must curtail the production one-third. What does that mean? In the conditions existing to-day it would mean to throw out of employment thousands and thousands of our workingmen. Why, then, is it not better sense and better policy to study all the conditions from the American standpoint of bettering them for ourselves and bettering the conditions of the people who look to us?

It is just as much the duty of Congress to consider a question of that kind as it is for the manufacturer. When he finds his market will not consume his product he must consider what he had best do to first protect his own interest, which he does, and that of those who are dependent upon him; or, if he be public spirited and enough of the philanthropist, he would consider those interests mutually, and would study the subject in order to avail himself of every opportunity to discover some method, even at less profit to himself, to find a market for that surplus product.

There is no country on the face of this earth that is so richly endowed with mineral wealth as ours. There is no section of this country that has more undeveloped mineral wealth than the border States of the South.

ON THE EVE OF A COMMERCIAL WARFARE.

The chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce in his remarks the other day made a statement which has impressed me more than ever before, because I know it is true. He said we are on the eve of a war, not of arms, but on the eve of a contest for commercial supremacy in the markets of the world; the result of recent changing conditions, which have opened the door, and will keep open the door of those great markets of the Orient, where every nation that has any industries to protect, that has any industries to develop, is availing itself of the fullest opportunity at its command.

PROUD OF OUR NATIONAL STANDING.

Mr. President, we are always proud when we speak of the greatness of our country, either in peace or in war. We are always proud when we refer to our Army and our Navy and their achievements. We have been especially proud of the position we have attained as the result of our war with Spain. We are equally proud of the result of our diplomacy in the treatment of these great international questions which has placed the United States in the very firing line of nations—a world power, prepared to meet any and every emergency which may confront us as a nation, whether placed in that position as a result of circumstances or by a higher will. We are proud to claim that with our civilization goes the progress of the world. We are proud to know that the nations of Europe, which have never looked upon this country as a world power in their councils, now not only respect but, I may say, fear us.

Occupying that position, Mr. President, shall we shrink from responsibility in meeting all questions which may arise from every standpoint of reason and business policy? When we see this opportunity open to us to possess ourselves of our share of this foreign market—aye, of more than our share—shall we refuse to avail ourselves of it? No, Mr. President; and when the American people start in that direction they generally get all they go for.

OUR UNPARALLELED MINERAL RESOURCES.

This country is endowed with the greatest natural mineral resources of any in the world. Already the markets are opening to her coal product. The Senator from Georgia stated—and truthfully so—that the development of the manufacture of pig iron has grown enormously. That is true of those infant industries in the South, where thousands of spindles are singing, where thousands and hundreds of thousands of tons of coal are being taken from beneath the soil, where the materials for the manufacture of pig iron lie within the circumference of a few miles. The industry in northern Alabama and Tennessee has grown so rapidly that almost 50 per cent of its product is being exported to Europe.

Mr. President, the limit of that export to-day is reached by the inability to secure transportation upon the high seas. In order successfully to operate and carry out great industries of that kind, looking to a foreign market, it is not only important but absolutely necessary that the manufacturer shall know what it will cost to deliver the goods. He must know what it will cost every month of the twelve months of the year if he attempts to predicate his operations upon the demand and the business that he can build up in the foreign trade.

SHIPS THE CONNECTING LINK BETWEEN PRODUCER AND CONSUMER.

There are other conditions in the United States which contribute much to the situation and bring to us forcibly the fact mentioned by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], that we are now entering upon this great commercial struggle, as I say, with equal advantage compared with any other nation, aye, a greater advantage in every direction save one, and that is the connecting link between the producer and the consumer—the ships to carry our exports to those foreign markets. We have none, comparatively. We are growing so rich as the result of our great natural wealth, enterprise, and industry that capital for investment is increasing every year.

WE SHOULD INVEST OUR CAPITAL AT HOME.

Mr. President, the United States has changed its condition from a debtor to a creditor nation. We are not only loaning money to foreign countries, purchasing their bonds, but we are loaning to them millions of dollars which come to us as the balance of trade and which are left in their hands because there is greater remuneration abroad than at home. Is it not better for the American people that they shall invest that capital here in any of the variety of industries which will not only call capital into activity, but will furnish bread for thousands and thousands of men, women, and children who are a part of us, depending upon us, and who in all conditions must be considered?

QUESTION OF EMPLOYMENT OF LABOR MUST BE MET BOLDLY.

The question of the employment of labor and the continuance of it is one that the American people must meet, and meet boldly; and any policy that will contribute to that end in any legitimate way should commend itself to those who are called upon to act in public stations. They should act from conviction in the interests of the whole people, and from nothing else.

NEW AMERICAN LINES FROM SOUTHERN PORTS IN CONTEMPLATION.

I alluded to the development of the Southern States. The coal and iron industries in the South are yet in their infancy. There are there wonderful deposits of both minerals awaiting development, and the people who control those industries have told me time and again that the one difficulty they meet with every year in building up the export trade is the lack of adequate and regular transportation. I have known, since this measure began to be discussed in Congress, within the last three years, of several enterprises which contemplated the organization and establishment of a line from Pensacola to South America and one from Norfolk to South America and another to a Mediterranean port, awaiting your decision upon this question.

That development will do more for the rapid consummation of the hopes of our friends in those States than anything else, because in connection with that comes further investment of capital in those industries, and the greater the facilities the better the opportunity to increase that trade, the greater the demand for more capital. What we want in this country is to continue in this development and in the growth of our material wealth, and then to find an opportunity for the application of it.

THE WHOLE NATION IS INTERESTED AND WILL BE BENEFITED.

This question is broader than the lines of the bill can write it. It will be widespread in its benefits. It is not aimed at any class or any particular industry. It is one of those measures the influence of which will permeate every industry and every class in the length and breadth of the United States. When I am told that the people of the interior of this country are not interested in the shipping question—that the farmers take no interest in it—I say it is not true in fact. I know that every man, no matter what his vocation in life, is interested and will be benefited, directly or indirectly, because you can not create an industry like this, bringing about, as it must naturally, first the development of our raw materials and then a condition which ends with the construction of the ships, opening up the markets of the world, giving greater opportunities to our merchants and manufacturers, without benefiting every industry and every line of business.

AUXILIARY AIDS TO MERCHANT MARINE.

I spoke of the amount of capital seeking investment at this time; and in connection with this commercial contest I wish to go a little further. We all know that England and Germany and Holland and France long ago established in the Orient depots for the distribution of their products. Of course we know also that long ago they provided transportation by the building up of their merchant marine. They have their banking facilities. They have their agents representing every manufactured product, and altogether that makes up the organization which is the machinery by which this business must be transacted.

Every time an American product is sent to those foreign markets, whether from the farm or the factory, the mine or the mill, it goes there subject to a condition which is a tax upon every turn it makes, whether in substance or the representative of it in value. In short, the English or German shipowner charges what he pleases for the freight, and when the vessel arrives at her destination those goods are put into consignment in the hands of an English or a German factor, and by him distributed to the consumer; and every time those goods are handled they pay tribute. When the owner of the goods receives his pay, he receives it through a foreign banking house, which collects its tribute upon every dollar. So from a business standpoint we pay as tribute, for every particle of foreign trade that we now enjoy, a sum equivalent to a fair profit.

THIS NATION MUST HAVE SIMILAR AUXILIARIES.

These conditions are changing and will change more. The growing wealth of this country will demand a change, because capital will unite with transportation and will supply the connecting link between the producer and the consumer. We will establish our own depots for the distribution of our products; we will establish our own banking houses for the conduct of our exchange, so that all the profit accruing which is now paid to the foreigner will go to the American manufacturer and business man.

Mr. President, that proposition is so clear, and this opportunity is so great, I wonder that any man can hesitate to seize upon the advantage which we now have at this critical time, when we are considering our future commerce and the disposition of the great surplus of our farms and our manufacturing institutions every year. The laws of commerce are as infallible as the laws of nature. If we do not travel along the lines that experience and time have proved to be necessary to commercial development, taking immediate advantage of every opportunity offered, we must gradually fall behind again, and we will.

PREDICTS REVOLUTION IN OUR PACIFIC WHEAT EXPORTATIONS.

When I say that a measure of this kind is in the interest of the whole people of this country, I mean it. The farmer who wants to dispose of the products of the soil, who can raise more wheat, or corn, or oats, or other products than can be sold in this country, complains that the markets of Liverpool fix the price upon his commodity. If that be so, then why not look elsewhere for wider markets. Why not take advantage of the situation in the East? I predict—and I do it because I believe it—that, should this bill become a law, inside of ten years there will scarcely be a bushel of wheat shipped from the Pacific coast to Europe if we avail ourselves of our opportunity, and find a way to put under our control the transportation of those products in connection with the great transportation system of the United States, which has been made a successful study until, as Governor Shaw told us yesterday, we have reduced the cost to one-third of that paid by any other country. This is a part of it, and a very important part of it just now, because if we do not avail ourselves of this situation other countries will, and they are preparing now to do it.

CONTRADICTORY ARGUMENTS AGAINST BILL.

There is a strange contradiction of interests that has crept into this matter since I have paid attention to it recently. I find that people in Boston and people in New York, engaged in the same business—what I would call a commission business—exporting, and otherwise, and who have built up a great business at each of those points, at this late day are bringing to our attention, in the way of an argument against this measure, the fact that it is detrimental to those interests.

The argument has been made to me personally, and, I presume, to many others of my colleagues, that if this measure should become a law it would greatly injure if not destroy that line of business, provided we open the door to the register of foreign vessels. On the other hand, the other house engaged in the same line of business in Boston, complains that if we do not open it wider it will ruin its business. In other words, in the first instance the admission of foreign tonnage to American register will put into operation under this bill lines of steamships that will control certain business. Take, for example, the South American trade or the Australian trade.

It is claimed that if a regular line is formed between New York and Brazil or the Argentine, which would supply the needs of that trade regularly, in a short time it would become a monopoly, controlling the trade, and would put freight at an abnormally high price. It is claimed that that would be the result of admitting foreign ships. There is no objection on the part of those people to a subsidy being paid to American vessels. On the other hand, the Boston party contends that unless the door is opened wide enough in this measure to give him or anybody else the privilege at any time in the near future of bringing in as many foreign ships as he can or wants to bring in, after he has made a careful calculation as to the profits of the investment, it will injure his business.

PENDING BILL SUPPLIES NATIONAL NEEDS.

Questions of that character we have had to meet at every stage of the proceeding, but never, until within a week or two, during all of the time that I have been engaged in investigating this subject has that phase of the question been brought to my attention, that in the same line and kind of business you do one thing and it will ruin one party, and you do the other thing and it will ruin the other party. I can not understand it. But I do say that the bill as framed and as it is now upon the Calendar, as recently amended, is approved, so far as I know, by all the interests that have been consulted and advised with during the three years we have been considering the subject. If it fails to meet every demand and every condition which may arise, it is because we have not had an opportunity to see everybody and to consult everybody. I believe that it fully and completely answers the demand, and therefore I am in favor of its passage.

WHY ITS PASSAGE IS FAVORED.

I am in favor of its passage upon the ground that it is for the best interests of the whole country, without regard to any special interest, and I know I voice the sentiments of all those who have labored so long and so faithfully in trying at least to perfect this measure when I say it is their desire that only a measure which shall contribute to those ends shall be passed by Congress. Let us start upon the hypothesis that we are all agreed that it will be a good thing for the United States to build up our merchant marine. If some of us believe that entire free ships is the best way to do it, and if the majority of us believe that connected with the other questions involved it is much better that it should be done in this way, but not by this bill, then to those who are willing to admit that the upbuilding or the American merchant marine is a good thing for the United States I say, give us something better than this, and we will support it. I would not under any circumstances be influenced by any other motive.

A GREAT DANGER THAT THREATENS OUR EXPORTS.

There is one more feature, but I shall not trespass longer upon the patience of the Senate. I wish to ask one question. Suppose there should be a war between Germany and England, or between England and France, or between any of the great European powers, particularly any of those three, which are the greatest maritime powers of Europe. Ninety-two and five-tenths per cent of our entire export trade is to-day carried in the ships of England, Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, and Holland. Suppose a war should break out between any of those great maritime powers, with the conditions that always follow war, particularly now, when each one of them has been growing in naval power every year until the destructive powers of the navies of Europe would entirely obliterate the whole merchant marine of the world as a consequence.

What would become of us? What would become of the farmers then? What would become of the manufacturer looking to a foreign market to dispose of his surplus? What would become of the men who are working in the mines and the factories with that business absolutely paralyzed? We would have no ships, although a neutral power, to take up and continue that necessary transportation in order that our goods may be carried to markets; and until the war should cease or until some other remedy could be supplied the condition of the United States would be absolutely deplorable and beyond remedy.

NOT A QUESTION OF DOLLARS AND CENTS ALONE.

If you bring it down to a question of dollars and cents as weighing against the higher considerations, when those conditions come upon us as a sequence of war, and we are asked what would we not give had we a merchant marine, being a neutral power, to go on with the export of our products and not suffer the consequences of the war, would we stop to consider the whole amount of the subsidy, $9,000,000, multiplied by the twenty years of the existence of this contract, as a price to be paid in cash to remove such conditions as would bring ruin upon us for at least a while?

BASIS OF APPEAL FOR BILL'S PASSAGE.

Oh, no, Mr. President, in making my appeal to the American people for this great industry, I want to put it upon higher grounds than that of dollars and cents. I want to put it upon the broad ground of a connecting link between the producer and the consumer, as an adjunct to our further growth and prosperity, which it is written must continue in the nature of things because of the conditions which control us and our future—conditions which rise above the speculative question whether one man will get a little more benefit than another, conditions which appeal even to our benevolence in the responsibilities that we owe to the working people of this country.

BILL SERVES INTERESTS OF ALL THE PEOPLE.

As to the popularity or the unpopularity of this measure, I stand here to-day in the presence of the whole American people and claim that this kind of legislation is inspired by the best sentiment and the wisest experience of those best qualified to judge its merits. I am standing here as the exponent of that principle, and I claim for every line in the bill that it is in the interest of the whole people of the United States, and particularly of those who must look to higher and more experienced authority to conduct the public affairs of our Government in their interest. Upon that basis I make my appeal, and I leave it in your hands. [Applause in the galleries.]

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair) laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, December 21, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, January 3, 1901.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the concurrent resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 14, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 13, 1900.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSIONER.

Judson C. Clements, of Georgia, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for the term of six years from the 1st of January, 1901. (A reappointment.)

COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

John W. Yerkes, of Kentucky, to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in place of George W. Wilson, deceased. The nomination of Mr. Yerkes to be collector of internal revenue for the Eighth district of Kentucky is hereby withdrawn.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Capt. Thomas S. McCaleb, Twenty-third Infantry, to be major, December 5, 1900, vice Turner, Sixth Infantry, retired from active service.

Capt. Thomas F. Davis, Fifteenth Infantry, to be major, December 7, 1900, vice Ward, Twelfth Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. John L. Hines, Second Infantry, to be captain, December 5, 1900, vice McCaleb, Twenty-third Infantry, promoted.

First Lieut. Guy H. B. Smith, Fourth Infantry, to be captain, December 7, 1900, vice Davis, Fifteenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. George D. Jarrett, Tenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, December 5, 1900, vice Hines, Second Infantry, promoted.

POSTMASTER.

Lawrence R. Watts, to be postmaster at London, in the county of Madison and State of Ohio, in the place of Frank Speasmaker, deceased.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE.

Daniel H. McMillan, of the Territory of New Mexico, to be associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico, vice Charles A. Leland, resigned. The nomination of Daniel H. McMillan, of "New York," to the above-named position, which was delivered to the Senate December 6, 1900, is hereby withdrawn.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 13, 1900.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

Arthur Bailly Blanchard, of Louisiana, to be third secretary of the embassy of the United States at Paris, France.

CONSULS.

James Johnston, of New Jersey, to be consul of the United States at Palermo, Sicily.

John C. Ingersoll, of Illinois, to be consul of the United States at Cartagena, Colombia.

Church Howe, of Nebraska, to be consul of the United States at Sheffield, England.

MEMBERS OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF PORTO RICO.

José Gomez Brioso, of Ponce, to be a member of the executive council of Porto Rico.

José Guzman Benitez, of Ponce, to be a member of the executive council of Porto Rico.

AGENT OF CLAIMS COMMISSION.

John H. Perry, of Connecticut, to be agent on the part of the United States under the conventions for a claims commission concluded between the United States and Chile August 7, 1892, and May 24, 1897.

CONSULTING ENGINEER.

Paul D. Cunningham, of Tennessee, to be consulting engineer of the United States on the International Boundary Commission, provided for in the convention with Mexico of March 1, 1889.

PENSION AGENT.

Leslie Combs, of Lexington, Ky., to be pension agent at Louisville, Ky.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 13, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CAMPBELL, extended for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WADSWORTH, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BARBER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, December 21, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday, January 3, 1901.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill reducing war taxes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12394, a bill to reduce the revenues; and, pending that, asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. One moment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry. How will that affect the order for the consideration of pension bills on Friday?

The SPEAKER. This will be the governing order if made now.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Is it desired to cut that out, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York, chairman of the committee?

Mr. PAYNE. I could not hear the gentleman.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Is it desired to cut off the consideration of pension bills to-morrow?

Mr. PAYNE. When I first made that request I forgot the special order for the consideration of pension bills. I would like to have Saturday set apart for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Suppose you do not conclude the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule then, would you be willing that the bill should pass over until next week?

Mr. PAYNE. I hope to pass it to-morrow. It will not take long to consider it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, you will not get much debate if you have only from 2 to 5 o'clock under the five-minute rule. I have no disposition to object to the request to close general debate, although we have several gentlemen on this side, members of the Ways and Means Committee, who will not be able to make their speeches in that time; but we will agree to that if we can have a fair limitation for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAYNE. I think three hours, considering the nature of this subject, would be a fair limitation, for I do not suppose there are many amendments to be offered.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Suppose you leave that open for the present. Your request was to close general debate at 2 o'clock?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We will not object to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, in answer further to the gentleman from Indiana, that the fixed rule for pensions to-morrow will govern, but it is within the power of the House, of course, to go ahead with the revenue-reduction bill if it should desire to do so. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Did the Chair understand the gentleman to make any request for Saturday?

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that Saturday be set apart, under the special order for pensions, immediately following the disposition of the war-revenue bill. We expect to get through with it to-morrow night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that Saturday be substituted for to-morrow for the consideration of private pension bills.

Mr. BROMWELL. I would like to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the rule or order of the House doing away with the Friday night session and substituting a day session in its place is still in effect, or whether that was only for the last session?

The SPEAKER. That is a rule of this Congress. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the special rule for the consideration of private pension bills be operative on Saturday next as soon as the revenue bill is disposed of. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Chair has named.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I occupied the floor at the close of the session on Tuesday, and will retake the floor at the close of the remarks by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who desires to speak at this point of time.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill (H. R. 12394) is the reduction of the revenues derived from internal taxation by about $40,000,000 per annum. The necessity of this reduction is based upon the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing a surplus of receipts over expenditures of about $80,000,000 for the coming year.

As a Democrat I have always been opposed to the existence of a surplus in the Treasury. I am therefore in accord with the general purpose of the bill, but I am of the opinion that in the interest of economical administration a still further reduction of taxation should be made, and that the present time is most opportune for a general revision of our internal-revenue system.

I regret exceedingly that the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means has not taken advantage of the present opportunity to reform our whole scheme of internal taxation, for I firmly believe that both parties could unite in a reform of the revenue laws on the broad constitutional basis of taxation for revenue, and for revenue only.

In a representative form of government the moral duty of the party in opposition should be limited to holding the majority to a strict account in the exercise of its power, to opposing by every constitutional method bad legislation, and to an earnest and patriotic effort to improve proposed legislation wherever improvement is possible. Opposition to legislation proposed by the majority, simply for the reason that it has not come from the minority, ceases to be statesmanship and becomes mere captious criticism and petty politics. The reduction in taxation proposed by this bill might have been more evenly and more fairly distributed, but should the suggestions of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means, offered in the best of good faith, fail to meet with the approval of the House, then I have no hesitation in declaring that I will consider it my duty to vote for this bill as materially reducing the surplus and lightening the burdens of taxation to the people.

The present customs tariff, enacted primarily for the protection of favored industries and without regard to the raising of revenue, is only colorably constitutional, and in almost all its provisions far exceeds the maximum revenue-raising point. Amendments to the customs tariff law would, however, not be germane to the bill before the House, and therefore may be dismissed from present consideration.

The problem before us is the readjustment of internal taxation so as to produce, with the least possible hardship and with the greatest justice to the people, sufficient revenue, which, when added to that produced by the customs, will meet, and no more than meet, the probable needs of Government. There is no reason why we should ever have a large surplus. The revenues should be increased or decreased to meet the expenditures. A large surplus is as indicative of bad business management as is a deficit. But with our present patchwork revenue laws good business management is impossible.

THE TWO THEORIES OF TAXATION.

Our internal-revenue system is really the outgrowth of the civil war. To meet the needs of the moment taxes confessedly unjust and burdensome were levied as temporary expedients and, after hostilities had ceased, became permanently incorporated in our laws.

It is very doubtful if the authors of our internal taxes were guided in their labors by any principle more exalted than a desire to raise a large revenue and to do so quickly. If they gave the question any thought at all, they were probably influenced by a belief in the equal-diffusion theory and the prevailing opinion of the period, that all taxes should be proportional. Since then the great apostle of the equal-diffusion theory, M. Thiers, has passed away, and his doctrine is as dead as its author. Modern economists and modern statesmen, for once absolutely in accord, have abandoned the proportional theory of taxation and have adopted the progressive theory, which, whenever possible, they have put into practice.

The old doctrine of taxation was that of benefits. Taxes were regarded as premiums of insurance to be paid by the individual to the state for the protection of individual possessions. It was held that taxes must be proportional to the amount of protection or to the benefit enjoyed. Under this theory all men must pay taxes, for all men derive some benefit from government. It makes no allowance for exemption of the minimum of subsistence. A proportional rate is a far heavier burden on the man of few possessions than on the man of great possessions.

> It will be apt to be relatively more severely felt by the average man, who has only a small surplus above socially necessary expenses, than by the average man who has a proportionally larger surplus. It will, in short, be apt in normal cases to disproportionately curtail the enjoyment of different social classes. (Progressive Taxation, by Edwin R. A. Seligman, p. 193.)

The modern doctrine is that of ability or faculty. It is the duty of the citizen to help support the state according to his ability or faculty to support himself, and as the ability of self-support increases, the ability to bear the burdens of taxation increases, not proportionally, but progressively. Increased revenues are not so much sought for under progressive taxation as is the apportionment of the burden of taxation more equally among the taxpayers. The contention has never been urged that progressive taxes yield less than proportional taxes, but simply that they do not yield more.

During the last decade economic conditions throughout the world have changed so greatly that old methods of taxation have been found to be inadequate to meet the advance of modern civilization. This movement for reform in taxation, or, what is the same thing, for a redistribution of the burdens of taxation, culminated about the year 1895 simultaneously in four great countries with extremely divergent interests, namely, Great Britain, Prussia, Holland, and New Zealand. The problem was solved in all four of these countries in substantially the same manner, the end attained being the compelling of contributions to the requirements of the State according to the ability of those called upon to contribute. The men responsible for the solution of the problem, Harcourt, Pierson, and Miguel, may justly be considered the three great practical tax reformers of recent times.

When a problem has been solved in the same way by four widely separated countries, the solution must be very nearly correct, and therefore applicable, so far as may be, to existing conditions in the United States.

Under our Constitution we are limited in the taxes which we can impose. Duties, imposts, and excises must be uniform throughout the United States. No export duty can be levied, and direct taxes must be laid in proportion to the census. We have laid a capitation tax five times in our history, but it has been found so cumbersome that it will probably never again be resorted to except in times of great necessity. The Supreme Court has held that direct taxes include only a capitation or poll tax and a tax on land (Springer vs. United States, 132 U. S., 586), and recently that "taxes on the rents or income of real estate and taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes." (Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 158 U. S., 601.)

The theory of progression can only be applied to direct taxation, but indirect taxation is not necessarily unjust any more than direct taxation is necessarily just. The burdens of taxation are of course more fairly distributed under progressive direct taxation than under indirect taxation, but we are debarred by the Constitution under the two decisions above quoted from applying the progressive principle to the land tax or to the income tax, and we are therefore forced to raise a great part of our revenue by indirect taxation. The progressive principle is in short only practically applicable to a legacy tax and taxes on occupations such as the so-called excise tax now levied under section 27 of the war-revenue act on refiners of petroleum and sugar.

ANALYSIS OF EXISTING INTERNAL TAXES.

For the purpose of intelligently discussing existing forms of internal taxation I have been obliged to entirely recast the schedules and rearrange their various items. The sources of our internal revenue naturally fall under six general heads. They are, in their order as revenue producers, with the amount of revenue produced by them during the last fiscal year (1900), first, distilled spirits, $104,375,921; second, fermented liquors, $72,662,071; third, tobacco, including cigars and cigarettes, $59,022,007; fourth, stamp duties, including playing cards, $41,295,376; fifth, occupations, $12,634,726, and, sixth, legacies, $2,884,491; sundry items, not taxes for revenue and therefore not included in the above, oleomargarine, penalties, etc., $2,441,516, making a total collected by internal taxation in 1900 of $295,316,108, as against a total for the year 1899 of $273,484,573, showing an increase of $21,831,535.

DISTILLED SPIRITS.

The tax on distilled spirits is levied on all distilled spirits, whether used in the arts or as a beverage, and is shifted entirely to the consumer. Out of 91,815,701 gallons withdrawn during the year 1900, 55,504,756 gallons were drinkable spirits, and 36,310,945 gallons were alcohol and pure neutral or cologne spirits. It is safe to assume that the per capita of consumption of spirits used as a beverage has been steadily decreasing as the per capita of consumption of light wines and beer has increased; so that any variations in the total per capita of consumption of distilled spirits represents the increase or decrease of the amount of spirits used in the arts, besides the increase or decrease of illicit distillation. No gentleman on this floor needs to be told what a large and important factor distilled spirits are in manufactures, but the profitable use of distilled spirits in the arts is limited by the price, and it is needless to say that, apart from the law of supply and demand, the price is fixed by the tax.

Most men are naturally honest, but unfortunately if the temptation to dishonesty is sufficiently strong many men will be dishonest. The greater the temptation the more widespread the dishonesty; the smaller the temptation the more honest the community. Whenever government imposes a tax on any article so high as to make a violation of the law extremely profitable, the law will be violated. It was so in England during the existence of a high customs tariff; it has been so with us ever since we have had enormously high customs duties, and it is equally true in reference to our tax on distilled spirits.

Whenever we have imposed an excessive rate upon distilled spirits, the temptation to illicit distillation has been so great that the law has been almost powerless to prevent it.

It would serve no useful purpose to recite the long, dreary, and shameful story of fraud and dishonesty which has accompanied the imposition of high taxes on spirits. It is enough to say that there have been times when high officials of the United States have considered it worth their while to betray their trust, and when men of wealth and power have joined them in corruption. The fear of possible detection, disgrace, and punishment has been counted in, as a money risk, in the expenses of the illegal occupation. Excellent as the administration of our internal-revenue system may be, it is no reflection upon its officers to assert that it is beyond their power to suppress illicit distillation as long as we encourage that industry by making its profits abnormal. That very efficient Commissioner, the late Mr. Wilson, says, on page 26 of his annual report for 1900:

> The suppression of frauds of this character (illicit distillation) is very difficult.

And on page 28:

> During the last few months in some sections of the country where illicit spirits have been produced, distilled spirits have brought better prices than for many years. * * *
> I desire to call attention to the fact that in communities where this illicit distilling prevails it has been found that the violators of the law are not confined to the unregistered illicit distillers alone, but embrace in many sections a large number of registered distillers, both grain and fruit, who are driven to this course in self-protection to meet the competition forced upon them by illicit distillers, who do not register or make any pretense of complying with the law.

Registered distillers are driven to this course in self-protection. Why? To meet the competition forced upon them by illicit distillers. Why? Because the tax is so large that illicit distillation means enormous profits.

It is a curious fact that every increase in the rate of the tax has been earnestly advocated by a certain class of speculators, and been immediately followed by an apparent falling off in the amount of consumption, because speculators in every case anticipated the increase of the tax by withdrawing and paying the tax on large quantities of distilled spirits at the old and lower rate, and then selling at the new and higher rate with the increased tax added as their profits. It has been estimated that the increases in the rate of the tax between July 1, 1862, and January 1, 1865, took from the Government over $100,000,000, and put that amount into the pockets of the speculators. It is another curious fact that, general conditions throughout the country being equal, the higher the rate of the tax on spirits the smaller has been the consumption per capita, which can only be explained by a falling off in the use of spirits in the arts and by an increase of illicit distillation.

From 1822 to 1862 all domestic industrial products, including distilled spirits, were exempt from taxation. In the latter year, as a war necessity, a tax of 20 cents per proof gallon was imposed on all distilled spirits of domestic manufacture. In 1864 the tax was advanced to 60 cents, and in 1865 to $2. In 1868 the tax was reduced to 50 cents, at which figure it remained until 1872, when it was again increased to 70 cents, and in 1875 raised to 90 cents, and in August, 1894, it was increased still further to $1.10, the present rate.

While it is true that the per capita revenue for the past year is greater than that for any previous year since 1870, it is also true that the per capita consumption has not kept pace with the per capita revenue. With the $1.10 rate the per capita revenue for last year was $1.36 and the per capita consumption 1.24 gallons. For the year 1899 the per capita revenue was $1.24 and consumption 1.11 gallons, while for the year 1870, when the rate was 50 cents a gallon, the per capita revenue was $1.02 and the per capita consumption 2.03 gallons.

In 1871 the per capita consumption was 1.58, and in 1872 1.63. In 1873, during part of which year the rate was still at 50 cents, the per capita consumption was 1.58 gallons. With the 70-cent rate the per capita consumption steadily fell off, and with the 90-cent rate it continued to fall off, reaching its lowest point in 1879 at 1.09 gallons. It then slowly advanced, reaching its maximum in 1893 at 1.48 when the $1.10 rate went into effect, and it again fell off, reaching its minimum in 1897 at .96. Since then, owing, if you like, to abnormal prosperity, it has slowly increased, reaching its maximum under the present law at 1.74.

From these figures it is very safe to say that the $1.10 rate is far beyond the maximum revenue-raising point; that it is high enough to discourage the use of distilled spirits in the arts, and to encourage the illicit distillation of spirits used as a beverage.

The exact maximum revenue-raising point for the tax on spirits is, to a certain extent, a matter of dispute. It is somewhere between 50 and 70 cents. In 1897 the then acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue stated it as his opinion that 70 cents was the ideal rate for revenue purposes. The late Hon. David A. Wells, in an exhaustive and able argument upon the subject, has fixed the point at 50 cents. The country is as prosperous to-day as it was in 1870—even more so. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that with a lower tax rate the per capita consumption would be no larger than it was in 1870, with a 50-cent rate and our present population the tax would yield $77,439,648, and with a 70-cent rate it would yield $108,415,508, as against last year's record-breaking yield of $104,375,921. But were the rate reduced to the maximum revenue-raising point, with the progress of invention and ingenuity that has been made in the last thirty years, the per capita consumption would unquestionably advance far beyond that of 1870, and the tax would yield almost enough revenue to dispense with all further forms of internal taxation.

FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Beer was untaxed until 1863, from which date until the enactment of the present war-revenue law the internal-revenue tax was practically uniform at $1 a barrel holding theoretically 31 gallons. In 1898 the tax was increased to $2 a barrel, with a rebate of 7½ per cent, or to $1.85 net. With the exception of the periods of business depression from 1874 to 1879 and during the year 1885, when it was temporarily checked, the per capita of consumption steadily increased from 1.86 gallons in 1863 to 16.03 (the maximum) in 1893. The per capita of revenue derived from this tax increased steadily, with the exception of the periods of depression above noted, from 5 cents in 1863 to 48 cents in 1893, the maximum under the old rate. The per capita of consumption and of revenue then fluctuated from year to year, and were in 1897, the year before the imposition of the new rate, respectively, 14.65 gallons and 43 cents. In 1899, the first year of the new rate, the per capita of consumption was 15.05 gallons and the per capita of revenue 89 cents.

During the last fiscal year the per capita of consumption was 15.98 gallons and the per capita of revenue 95 cents. While this per capita of revenue is the largest in the history of the tax, the per capita of consumption is .05 gallon less than the maximum.

The per capita consumption of beer in this country is small in comparison with that of other beer-using countries, that of Great Britain being 30 gallons; England and Wales, 34 gallons; Belgium, 40 gallons, and Germany, 45 gallons. Were this industry treated as fairly as it is in the countries mentioned, it is probable that our per capita consumption would soon equal theirs. Beer is taxed in Great Britain at the rate of $1.38 per 31 gallons, and in Belgium at the rate of 90.3 cents per 31 gallons. It must, however, be remembered, that in those countries the materials used in brewing are not protected as they are with us. In 1895 Sir William Vernon Harcourt, as chancellor of the exchequer, stated on the floor of the House of Commons that the price of raw materials used in brewing had fallen 40 per cent, giving an additional profit to British brewers of over £10,000,000 per annum. This was due to foreign competition and free trade. Our brewers were powerless to take advantage of this fall in prices.

The brewers have, moreover, been unable to shift the new tax to the consumer. The original tax was entirely shifted, but the additional dollar is borne partly by the brewer and partly by the middleman.

It would therefore seem that the maximum revenue-raising point has been somewhat exceeded in the tax on beer, and that unless absolute necessity demands it ought to be reduced very materially. Were this done, it is safe to assume that consumption would largely increase, and with it revenue.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from New York is giving the rate of taxation in England. Has he any statistics to show how much it costs to manufacture a barrel of beer of 31 gallons in England?

Mr. McCLELLAN. No; I have not. I have not been able to get them.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a question?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. What part of the commodity does the gentleman say is at a disadvantage?

Mr. McCLELLAN. I stated that the price of the raw materials went down 40 per cent on account of competition.

TOBACCO.

The internal-revenue taxes on manufactured tobacco and on cigars and cigarettes are generally shifted to the consumer, but are in some cases, owing to trade conditions, borne by the producer. The history of these taxes is further illustrative of the utter disregard on the part of Congress of the maximum revenue-raising point.

In 1870 the average rate on manufactured tobacco was 26.9 cents, while the per capita consumption was 2.34 pounds and the per capita revenue 63 cents. In 1875 the average rate was 21.1 cents, a decided reduction; while the per capita consumption had risen to 2.71 pounds, the per capita revenue had fallen to 57 cents. In 1880 there was a still further reduction in the average rate of taxation to 16 cents, but the per capita consumption remained stationary at 2.71 pounds, while the per capita revenue fell off to 43 cents. In 1890 there had been a still further reduction in the average rate of taxation to 8 cents; although the per capita consumption jumped to 3.80 pounds, the per capita revenue fell off to 30 cents. In 1891 there had been a still further reduction in the average rate of taxation to 7.01 cents, and while the per capita consumption again rose to 3.97 pounds, the per capita revenue still further fell to 27 cents. In 1897 there had been a still further reduction in the average rate of taxation to 6 cents, but despite this the per capita consumption fell off to 3.76 pounds, while the per capita revenue still further fell off to 22 cents. During the past fiscal year, under the war-revenue tariff, which has doubled the average rate of taxation to 12 cents, the per capita consumption has slightly increased to 3.85 pounds, while the per capita revenue has more than doubled over the preceding year to 46 cents.

The history of the tax on cigars and cigarettes is very similar. In 1870 the tax was $5 on cigars and $1.50 and $5 on cigarettes. The per capita consumption of both cigars and cigarettes was 30 and the per capita revenue 14 cents. In 1875 the rate of taxation had been increased to $5 and $6 on cigars and $1.50, $1.75, $5, and $6 on cigarettes, and the per capita consumption had increased to 44 and the per capita revenue to 23 cents. In 1880 the tax had been raised to $6 on cigars and to $1.75 and $6 on cigarettes; the per capita consumption had increased to 55, and the per capita revenue to 29 cents. In 1893 the tax had been reduced to $3 on cigars and 50 cents and $3 on cigarettes; while the per capita consumption had jumped to 119, the per capita revenue had fallen to 23 cents. In 1897, the year before the enactment of the present law, the tax being the same as in 1893, the per capita consumption had fallen to 113 and the per capita revenue to 19 cents. In 1900, the last fiscal year, the tax on cigars was $3, $1, and $3.60, and on cigarettes $3.60 and $1.50, a general increase. Despite this fact, the per capita consumption remained very nearly stationary at 112 and the per capita revenue had increased to 31 cents—the highest in the history of the tax.

It is, therefore, quite plain that in the taxes on manufactured tobacco, on cigars and cigarettes, the maximum revenue-raising point is higher than the present rate, and that we could safely increase the rate of taxation, while at the same time increasing the revenue, were increased revenue needed.

STAMP DUTIES.

The stamp duties include taxes on the various instrumentalities of business and taxes levied on proprietary articles, such as patent medicines, soaps, cosmetics, chewing gum, wines, etc., and playing cards.

Stamp taxes are generally supposed to be shifted to the consumer, but, as Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman has very clearly pointed out (The Shifting and Incidence of Taxation, pp. 304 and 305), this does not necessarily follow. It must be remembered that the so-called "stamp duties on proprietary articles and playing cards are really taxes on production, similar in nature to the taxes on tobacco, distilled spirits, and beer. Since their imposition under the present law the manufacturer has found it impossible to shift the burden, and accordingly the incidence is entirely upon the producer.

The incidence of the stamp taxes levied under Schedule A, which includes taxes on acts or transactions, will depend on whether these transactions are commercial or not. In the case of so-called judicial taxes it is evident that there is no one to whom they can be shifted. Taxes on ordinary commercial transactions will be shifted or not according to the "height of the tax and the elasticity of the demand." The incidence of stamp taxes on transportation and communication will also depend on the height of the tax and the elasticity of the demand, and, besides, on the character of the business.

During the last fiscal year, 1900, the revenue from the stamp duties was as follows: Schedule A (documentary), $36,416,082; Schedule B (proprietary articles), $4,548,283; playing cards, $331,011, or a total of $41,295,376, against a total revenue in 1899 of, Schedule A, $38,618,081; Schedule B, $5,219,737; playing cards, $271,139; a total of $44,108,948, showing a total decrease of $2,813,572. The tax having been in operation for little more than two years, it is impossible to determine with any degree of certainty the causes of the decrease. The greatest falling off has been in documentary stamps, but it is not safe to assume that were the tax left as it is there would be any further reduction during the next fiscal year.

Stamp duties on transactions have only been imposed in our history in time of war, and have always been regarded as a species of emergency taxation, to be resorted to only under the greatest necessity for revenue. They are a source of endless annoyance to the taxpayer and are in many cases an actual hardship. The inequality and injustice of their operation more than counterbalances their efficacy as a source of revenue.

OCCUPATIONS.

During the last fiscal year $12,634,726 were derived from taxes levied upon a great number of occupations, including the distilling of spirits, brewing of beer, manufacture of tobacco and cigars, oleomargarine, filled cheese, mixed flour, banking, brokerage, etc. These taxes are generally borne by the taxpayer, and the incident can only in exceptional cases be shifted. In certain occupations the tax will be included in the total cost of production and will be shifted to the consumer, while in certain other occupations the tax upon which has recently been imposed or increased trade conditions may be such that the price of the product can not be increased, and the tax will necessarily fall upon the producer. Here again much depends upon the height of the tax, the character of the business, and the elasticity of the demand. This has proved a very profitable source of revenue.

As I have already pointed out, the so-called excise taxes now levied on the refining of petroleum and sugar, which are nothing but direct occupation taxes, might very well be extended and the progressive principle applied to them; in fact, the tax on occupations and the legacy tax are the only taxes which we are empowered to levy in which we can successfully incorporate the progressive principle.

LEGACIES.

Before the enactment of the legacy-tax law of 1862 some doubt was expressed as to its constitutionality on the ground that within the meaning of the Constitution it was a direct tax, and that it must therefore be laid in proportion to the census. The Supreme Court, however, upheld it on the ground that it was an excise on the right to succeed to the ownership of property. (Scholey vs. Rew, 23 Wall., 331.) After the enactment of the present law the constitutionality of the tax was again questioned, not only on the ground that it was a direct tax, but also on the ground that it was not uniform, and that the right of inheritance is a privilege or franchise within the exclusive power of each State.

The Supreme Court, in Knowlton vs. Moore (178 U. S., 41), decided that the law was constitutional. The tax was held not to be a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, but, on the contrary, a duty or excise. The uniformity clause of the Constitution was held to relate only to geographical uniformity; it was held that legacies not exceeding $10,000 were not taxable, and that the rate of the tax was progressively increased by the amount of each separate legacy or distributive share and not by the whole amount of the personal estate of the deceased, from which the legacies or distributive shares were derived. The contention that the tax was an interference with an exclusive right of the States was also brushed aside.

The present tax differs from its predecessor in having the progressive feature added. The original law imposed a tax on all legacies above $1,000. It made a distinction in the rate according to the degree of connection between the testator and the legatee. This law not only makes that distinction, but exempts legacies under $10,000, and progressively increases the rate on legacies above that amount.

It is, of course, too early in its history to state definitely anything in reference to its operations, but while in 1899 the total amount collected from this source was $1,235,435, it had risen in 1900 to $2,884,491, an increase of more than 100 per cent, or $1,649,056.

In 1892 only nine States had laws upon their statute books providing for an inheritance tax. They were Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, New York, West Virginia, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Tennessee, and New Jersey. Since then an inheritance tax law in some form or other has been enacted in Ohio, Maine, California, Louisiana, Minnesota, Illinois, Missouri, Virginia, Iowa, Michigan, Montana, Vermont, and Wisconsin, as well as by the United States.

It would therefore seem that this tax has proved its popularity, and has unquestionably come to stay. It is the most scientific and the most just of our national taxes. It is not burdensome, is easily collected, and destined to become most profitable. Its incidence can be predicated with absolute certainty, for it is borne by the original taxpayer, and can not be shifted either wholly or in part. Its progressive features are in accord with the best modern opinions. It is a tax, not on wealth, but on the transfer of wealth. Says Seligman: "It is the price of a special privilege. It is only a means of securing equality in taxation and of realizing the principle of ability to pay. It is not so much a fee paid to defray the cost of government services as a charge proportioned to the advantages that accrue to the recipient of the inheritance."

Even with a double tax, State and national, legacies still pay a far lower rate than in any foreign country where this form of taxation exists. Thus in Great Britain, under the new inheritance-tax law, the rate varies from 1 to 18 per cent of the value of the property, the tax yielding about £13,500,000, or about $67,500,000, per annum.

SUMMARY OF ANALYSIS.

To summarize, it will be seen from the foregoing analysis that the maximum revenue-raising point has been greatly exceeded in the tax on distilled spirits and also in the tax on fermented liquors, that it has not yet been reached in the tax on tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes; that the progressive principle may be applied to the taxes on occupations; that the stamp duties, while producing large returns, work annoyance and hardship, and ought not to be imposed if adequate revenue can be raised from other sources, and finally that the tax on legacies has proved a great success.

SUGGESTED SCHEME OF INTERNAL TAXATION.

Were it possible for the two great parties to forget partisanship for the moment and to ignore local and private interests, they might unite in a scientific and a businesslike plan of internal taxation. In preparing such a plan of taxation Congress would naturally be guided by certain fundamental principles: First, the levying of taxes should be confined to its constitutional and legitimate purpose, the rasing of revenue; second, the progressive principle should be applied as far as possible; third, under our Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the progressive principle is practically limited to excise taxes on occupations and to the legacy tax. It would therefore be necessary for the purpose of raising sufficient revenue to also lay indirect taxes. As few articles as possible should be taxed indirectly. Only such indirect taxes should be laid whose incidence is fairly certain and whose burdens will be widely diffused.

If guided by these principles, Congress would first consider the average amount of revenue needed for the economical administration of government; it would then impose a progressive legacy tax and a progressive excise tax on certain occupations, graduated according to the earnings of the corporations or individuals taxed. For the purposes of indirect taxation Congress would naturally select those articles that have been universally regarded as the chief sources of indirect internal revenue—namely, distilled spirits, fermented liquors, and tobacco in various forms. Congress, however, would be wise in fixing the rates of taxation upon these three articles at somewhat below rather than above the maximum revenue-raising point.

With such a scheme of taxation it would be perfectly possible to absolutely balance the budget. With only five internal taxes and with only three internal indirect taxes it would be extremely simple to vary the rates to meet the necessities of government. Were more revenue needed, a slight increase in the rate of one or more of our internal taxes would furnish it. Were less revenue needed, a slight decrease would accomplish the reduction. Were an emergency to arise, the rates of taxation upon the three indirect sources could be raised at once to the maximum revenue-raising point, and we would still have, as a further source of supply, the stamp duties, with a possible annual yield of from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me another interruption?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. Take the plan the gentleman suggests, of having a sliding scale of taxation, how would it affect business men who make large investments in raw material or in completed commodities?

Mr. McCLELLAN. The sliding scale would apply to one or two taxes—legacies, and excise taxes on certain occupations. In reference to changes in the rates of the indirect taxes, business men would be obliged to anticipate them, as in every other country on earth. They would arrange their business affairs in view of the possibility of such a change. Moreover, there is not a business man living to-day who does not constantly fear that Congress may change at any time, not only the customs tariff, but the internal-revenue tariff as well.

Mr. STEELE. They have that fear every two years.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; every two years.

CONCLUSION.

Economic conditions change as methods of production and distribution become more perfect, and as civilization becomes more complex. Systems of taxation originally just may in time work injustice; theories once applicable to past circumstances may become obsolete. Economic progress never halts, but surely and steadily advances, in no country more certainly than in the United States. The present internal-revenue system, enacted as a war measure for 30,000,000 people, borne by them with patriotic patience during four years of hostilities, and with increasing protest during thirty-five years of almost constant peace, has proved but ill adapted as a permanent system for a nation of 76,000,000. Ours is the greatest nation on earth, as well as the most wealthy and the most powerful. In intellectual and in material development we have led the world. Yet in dealing with the problem of taxation, upon which so much of the happiness and prosperity of our country depends, we have fallen far short of the requirements of present conditions. As representatives of the people it is our duty, regardless of faction or of party, to readjust taxation to the people's needs. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore,

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4165. An act granting a pension to Dora Renfro;

S. 4073. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Edwards, jr.;

S. 4556. An act granting an increase of pension to William Fox;

S. 4022. An act granting a pension to William B. Caldwell;

S. 4788. An act granting an increase of pension to George P. Beach;

S. 2107. An act granting a pension to James Brown;

S. 2109. An act granting an increase of pension to Carroll W. Fuller;

S. 3338. An act granting a pension to Mary A. Morton;

S. 2037. An act granting an increase of pension to George F. Burrage;

S. 4834. An act granting a pension to Otto Haltnorth;

S. 2228. An act granting an increase of pension to Oliver W. Miller;

S. 2102. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Reed;

S. 1761. An act granting a pension to Girard Welch;

S. 2905. An act granting a pension to George M. Wilson;

S. 1792. An act granting a pension to Martha C. M. Fisher;

S. 2901. An act granting a pension to A. C. Ricketts;

S. 2703. An act granting a pension to Mary M. F. Flagler;

S. 1628. An act granting a pension to Adolph Schrel;

S. 3376. An act granting an increase of pension to James McFry;

S. 1722. An act granting a pension to Bertha Laevey;

S. 1211. An act granting a pension to Ross Wheatley;

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee consisting of three members of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, is hereby created to investigate and consider the question of a site for a hall of records, to be erected in the District of Columbia, and report to Congress on or before January 10, 1901, or as soon thereafter as may be possible, their conclusions as to the most feasible location for such a building and the approximate cost thereof.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 9140. An act providing that entrymen under the homestead laws, who have served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps during the Spanish war or the Philippine insurrection, shall have certain service deducted from the time required to perfect title under homestead laws, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 8487. An act for the relief of Col. Charles B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

WAR REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it was said by one of the distinguished men of the country that unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. I will not mention the name of that statesman, for I think his proposition standing unadorned by his signature would have greater weight on the other side of the House than if I should communicate his name as authority for the sentiment. I plant myself on that proposition and will try to show in the time allotted to me that the bill under consideration is framed with distinct reference to the principle involved and as above stated.

Whenever a government upon any pretext whatever assesses more taxation than will supply the legitimate demands for expenditure, the government thus acting goes beyond the legitimate sphere of governmental action. And whenever it appears that taxation is in excess of necessity it is the duty of the government to at once reduce taxation. On two memorable and important occasions this country has been compelled to look about for extraordinary sources of revenue. It has been compelled to look beyond the ordinary systems of taxation to external resources. So, during the civil war the Government of the United States was put to the necessity of taxing every possible means of revenue, and bringing into the Treasury of the United States vast sums of money which were growing less and less valuable, weaker and weaker in purchasing power, and constantly requiring a greater volume of taxation.

Recourse was then, of course, had to internal-revenue taxation, for the receipts from customs, by reason of the condition of our shipping and of our ports and the condition of war that existed, were reduced to the minimum, so that we were compelled to resort to loans and internal-revenue taxation. And when the war was over, notably during the campaign of 1868, the country was placarded all over, dead walls were everywhere embellished, with illustrations of the claim that we were taxing everything "from the cradle to the grave." Those campaign pictures are still very vividly impressed upon my mind. They had in one corner the cradle and the appliances, the surroundings and the environments of the early days and hours of infancy, and they had in another corner a graveyard with the tax upon the tombstone; and they represented all the intermediate steps of human progress—all embellished by the rates of taxation which the Government was imposing upon the people.

The Republican party was in power in Congress in 1866 and 1868. I call the attention of gentlemen on the other side to the fact that while a Republican Congress by a single bill reduced taxation almost $70,000,000 in a year, those measures of taxation were nearly always opposed by the Democrats of that day. While our friends are talking about some of the inequalities of this measure I desire to remind them, without having the data so that I can not at this moment put my hand upon them, I have a very distinct recollection that when the tariff duties on coffee and tea were proposed to be taken off by a Republican Congress that measure was resisted by the almost solid vote of the Democrats of the two Houses.

I will place in my speech at this point a statement of the facts exactly as they occurred upon that question and upon many other questions which arose along the line of reduction.

The following is a more complete statement of the dates and character of the legislation repealing taxes to which reference has been made:

An act to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, approved July 13, 1866 (14 Stat., 98).

First act reducing taxation. Stamps first required on fermented liquors. Charging "licenses" to "special taxes."

An act to authorize the refunding of certain taxes, approved July 27, 1866 (14 Stat., 301).

An act to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1867 (14 Stat., 471).

Reduced taxes.

An act to provide for the exemption of cotton from internal tax, approved February 3, 1868 (15 Stat., 34).

Reduced taxes by repealing cotton tax.

An act to exempt certain manufactures from internal tax, and for other purposes, approved March 31, 1868 (15 Stat., 58).

Reduced taxes.

An act to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes, approved July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 256).

Repealed taxes on gross receipts, legacies and successions, passports, and special taxes, except those relating to spirits, fermented liquors, and tobacco, also taxes on sales. Income tax to expire December 31, 1871.

An act to amend existing laws relating to internal revenue, approved July 14, 1870 (16 Stat., 274).

An act to repeal the paragraphs of Schedule C of the internal-revenue acts imposing taxes on canned meats, fish, and certain other articles, approved March 5, 1872 (17 Stat., 30).

An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes, approved June 6, 1872 (17 Stat., 238).

Stamp duties on instruments, except bank checks, repealed. Moieties abolished. Uniform rate of 20 cents per pound on tobacco instead of the two rates, 16 and 32 cents. Tax on spirits, 70 cents per gallon.

To show how rapidly the Republican party recognized its duty in the matter of the reduction of taxation I refer to the fact that the following is a true statement of the reductions made and to the period of time in which they took place: and I will simply make comment enough to say that each one of these reductions was made by a Republican Congress and approved by a Republican Administration.

The first reduction to which I refer was made in 1866, immediately upon the close of the war. It amounted to $65,000,000. Again in 1867 a reduction of $40,000,000 was made. Again in March, 1868, there was a further reduction of $23,000,000. Again in 1868 there was a reduction of $45,000,000. Again, by the act of July 14, 1870, there was a reduction of fifty-five million. And by the act of June 6, 1872, twenty-one million and upward of the income from internal-revenue taxation alone was cut off. Then in July, 1870, there was a further reduction of $30,000,000 of tariff taxation, and in May, 1872, there was passed an act, going into effect June 6, 1872, repealing $31,215,000 of customs duties.

I refer to these facts not so much for any purpose of partisan suggestion as to point out that the Republican party, upon the happening of these great emergencies, has always been prompt and ready and energetic in raising money, and when the necessity had passed, then in like manner zealous in the reduction of taxation. So that any complaint that the Republican party throughout its history has been unmindful of its obligations to make the burden of taxation just as light as it was possible to make it upon the people of the country is an error and is not justified by the history of the times.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. VANDIVER. I would be pleased if the gentleman from Ohio, pursuing his present line of discussion, would inform us as to the character of those particular reductions—what classes of taxes were reduced?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have incorporated in my speech a statement which shows what the gentleman desires; and I can repeat it now in large part if such is his wish. By the act of June 30, 1864, to which I had not referred—which was the earliest enactment in the way of reduction—a reduction was made at first upon stamps and then upon taxes under Schedule A of the internal-revenue law, which related to taxes upon boats, barges, and flats, and on legacies, successions, passports, and gross receipts; and then all the stamps less than $100 in what was then called Schedule B; and so on down to the end, reaching in the same direction, as I will in a moment point out as the bill under consideration is reaching. And then, as pertinent to the gentleman's inquiry, which is a very proper one, I will put into my speech a fuller statement of the articles upon which those reductions were made. But my present purpose, Mr. Chairman, was to show that the Republican party, as I have already said, has been prompt in doing its duty in the matter of lifting the burden of taxation from the people of the country.

The so-called Spanish war came, with its exigencies and its emergencies. I do not care now to discuss whether that war is to continue permanently either in the Philippines or elsewhere, or, if not permanently, how long. In the consideration of this bill we must act upon the present—upon present conditions. Prophetic declarations as to the future of this country, so far as this question is concerned, would prove to be absolutely futile. Placing our estimates, therefore, upon the present condition of things, we must act as though the present condition is to remain in force a long time in the future, relying upon the fact I have already demonstrated, and which I will more fully demonstrate, that the Republican party has always been anxious to take off the burden of taxation from the people whenever the conditions of the country will admit.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me one other suggestion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. VANDIVER. I have not before me the figures just now, as the gentleman from Ohio has. I would like him to inform us whether the greater portion of those taxes to which he referred as having been repealed were not taxes on banks, on bank stock, on railroads, and manufactures.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No, they were not; certainly not exclusively. As I have shown, the very first reduction was made directly along the line that we have attempted to follow but have not been able entirely to follow in the measure under consideration. The reasons for such deflections as we have made will more fully appear as this debate progresses. And when, Mr. Chairman, I have more fully illustrated and elaborated the point I am now discussing, as I intend to do, the gentleman will have all the facts before him that I am able to give at the present time in the few moments I propose to occupy in the discussion of this bill.

What, then, is the true measure of reduction? The gauge of reduction must be the last dollar that can be possibly taken from taxation and still leave a sure surplus in the Treasury.

I use the word "surplus" in this connection as meaning an amount of money in sight or easily available, sufficient under all emergencies to save the Government the necessity of going into the money market and submitting itself to the changes of the market in order to carry on its business; and in this connection—as there will be likely more or less of acrimony as the debate proceeds—I wish to point out that the historical fact in regard to the Republican party is, and will be found to be on investigation, that in these great emergencies it has always been able to keep a surplus in the Treasury; and there are gentlemen in the country, and nearly all of us remember the fact, that in two great campaigns in this country the Republican party was assailed most bitterly by the Democratic party for having accumulated too large a sum or surplus in the Treasury; and the gentleman who opened the debate on the other side of this question charged that one of the mistakes of the present Administration was our loaning large sums to the banks of the country. And this fact implies the existence of a surplus at the time.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going into any details as to the transactions of the present Secretary of the Treasury. It is enough to say in this connection, in general terms, that coming here to the high office he occupies, almost unknown to the men active in the political affairs of the country, he has managed to carry on the legislation enacted by the Republican party efficiently and has made one of the most, if not actually the most, successful administrations of that Department since the greatly successful record of Mr. Sherman, who executed the duties of his office under greater difficulties than were confronted by any other Secretary who ever occupied that high position. The administration of the Treasury from 1897 to this time has been grandly successful.

Now, what is the true gauge of reduction? Not to take the amount in the Treasury and the estimates of the income, and then propose to expend just the sum raised, but to arrange our legislation in such shape that we shall always leave in the Treasury of the United States an amount of money equal to any emergency that may arise, no matter whence it comes, so as to enable the Government to meet any condition that may suddenly arise and which must be met promptly. One of the wisest provisions enacted by the Congress of the United States is that which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue what are known as Treasury certificates, to the amout of $50,000,000, which may be used to meet any emergency as it may arise. That is an assurance behind the Administration, that under any ordinary circumstances the Treasury Department will always have a surplus to meet emergencies. The provision will never be abused and may become of great value.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that a great deal has been said, and much will probably be said during this discussion, of the question of this surplus, as well as the question of deficiencies in the Treasury. And if I were making a partisan speech I might say a word in reference to the policy of a Democratic Administration which forced us, in a time of profound peace, to go into the markets of the world and borrow some $262,000,000 at a high rate of interest in order to pay the current expenses of the Government. I repeat that this operation took place in a time when we were not at war with any nation in the world. But I am proceeding now to speak of this question in a business way and not in any sense in a partisan one.

I know that at the close of Mr. Harrison's Administration it was said that there was a certain deficit in the revenues, either then existing or likely to occur; and we have heard wonderful Aladdin stories of the purposes of the Administration and the preparation in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving to issue bonds, and this has been repeated over and over again, notwithstanding the steady and constant denials by men who knew all the facts of the absurd stories; and even during the recent campaign I have no doubt that this species of oratory figured largely throughout the country. Whatever was done was done in preparation for an event which it was understood might happen. It was simply a cautionary measure, and whether steps had been taken to get ready for the issuance of bonds, or certificates, or whatever it may have been contemplated, it is not worth while to discuss that question now. There never was any such proposition as the issue of a bond to borrow money to carry on the general expenses and operations of the Government; but there was preparation in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which was not to come into effect until the incoming of the Administration of Mr. Cleveland, and which was done after a full consultation with the incoming Secretary of the Treasury, as has always been stated, who was then a Senator of the United States, and who may have changed his opinion. And thereupon the further prosecution of the work of engraving for that bond was at once suspended.

These are the actual historical truths with regard to this matter, and there never was any force or effect in the story, whether it was true or false, because the material fact lying behind the whole subject is that we were always able to discharge all the obligations of the Treasury and at the same time were always active to cut down taxation. Gentlemen on the other side will not be able to point their fingers to a single time in the history of this body when it has failed to reduce taxation as rapidly as was possible and consistent with the policy I have stated.

Now, if gentlemen desire verification of what I have said in regard to the votes, and the advocacy here upon the floor of Congress of these reductions, I cite them to the first act reducing taxation, which was approved July 13, 1866, Congressional Globe, pages 2863–2865, Part III, first session Thirty-ninth Congress, and to the following pages of the Congressional Globe: Page 3637, Part IV, first session Thirty-ninth Congress; page 3638, Part IV, second session Fortieth Congress; page 5522, Part VI, second session Forty-first Congress; page 3652, Part V, second session Forty-second Congress.

Now, two years ago we were confronted with this proposition. The current expenses of the Government would substantially absorb the revenues of the Government, and with a prospective war with Spain taxation of this character was resorted to. There is no complaint and can be no complaint of the action of the Democratic party in either branch of Congress at that time. In the first place, out of the surplus then in the Treasury, by the almost unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress, long before the war had begun, we appropriated $50,000,000 and handed it over to the President of the United States for necessary expenditure incident to the preparation for war that had not come. Then, by the provisions of the war-revenue measure, we provided for the issuing of bonds to meet the demands of the Government, and those bonds were subscribed, I believe, about four times over, possibly more than that, all by the people of the United States.

A vast contrast that with the career of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, that undertook to make a contract in advance of the authority to make the loan, and undertook to fix the rate of interest, and undertook to characterize the kind of money in which the loan and the interest were to be paid. A mighty contrast! One in time of peace and the other in time of war; one a bond at 4 per cent, with a reduction, if the character of the payment should be stipulated to be in gold, and the bonds to go to a syndicate formed largely of London moneyed men, and the other the patriotic loan of 1898, which went to the people of the United States at 3 per cent interest, the bonds payable in the same kind of money that all our obligations were then payable in, and payable now in the same kind of money that all our obligations are payable in—gold coin. There is a vast difference.

I do not say how it has come about now. It is not important. The fact remains that we entered upon this war with Spain, first, with an abundance of money offered to us by the people of our own country at a low rate of interest, and, secondly, by a provision for the payment of those bonds and all other obligations in the form of increased taxation to the extent of about $105,000,000 per annum, the result of the war-revenue act.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say that Mr. Foster prepared the plates to issue the bonds after consultation with Mr. Carlisle, who was to be the Secretary of the Treasury under the incoming Administration?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say that the proposition to prepare for a new bond to take up the loan then falling due and to provide for exigencies was after a consultation with Mr. Carlisle, as I have been informed.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, what is the gentleman's authority for that statement?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has been repeated over and over by Mr. Foster, and never denied by Mr. Secretary Carlisle, so far as I have been informed.

Mr. WHEELER. Has the gentleman any information except the newspaper reports to that effect?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Only the statement of Mr. Foster, which I have had direct many a time, either given me in person or by others.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to know if the gentleman speaks advisedly upon that subject.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do; and I have no doubt that that is the exact truth.

Mr. WHEELER. Is the gentleman aware that Secretary of the Treasury Carlisle has repeatedly denied that he knew anything about the new issue of bonds?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I never heard anything to that effect.

Mr. WHEELER. Everybody connected with the last Democratic Administration denied that they knew anything about that intended bond issue, and the Democratic speakers throughout the Congress denied it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The fact about it is that every Democratic speaker throughout the country seems to have had very little intercourse with the outgoing Administration or during its period.

Mr. WHEELER. They had very little after it went over to the Republican party.

Mr. GROSVENOR. You may have lost something of the facts by your indifference as to the progress of the Administration.

Mr. WHEELER. We did not lose any of the facts, but some of our former associates lost their principle.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am not going to controvert that or admit it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he is not aware that Secretary Foster in February, 1893, made a statement before the Ways and Means Committee or the Appropriation Committee of this House that if he were to provide revenue to run the Government he would provide fifty millions additional, as there would be a deficit in the revenues to meet the expenses up to and covering June 30, 1894?

Mr. GROSVENOR. No; I never heard that, or, if I have, I have forgotten it.

Mr. BARTLETT. But did he not state that in his testimony?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not say that it does not exist.

Mr. BARTLETT. I asked the gentleman the question because the gentleman says the Republican party never had a deficit. If the statement of Secretary Foster be true they expected a deficit in 1894.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have heard Secretary Foster's statement, and in connection will point out to the gentleman from Georgia where he could make a most interesting study. Mr. Cleveland was elected on the 6th of November, 1892, I think, and from that day until the 4th of March you will see what the condition of the Treasury was. The gentleman will see that the trouble began almost instantly upon the newspaper statement that Mr. Cleveland was elected, and kept up at an increased ratio of trouble clear up to the time when we found they had to borrow $262,500,000 to float the current expenses of the Government.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GROSVENOR. As a matter of course.

Mr. GAINES. In reference to the colloquy you had with the gentleman from Kentucky just now, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have heard enough about that, because I have stated all I know about it, and have very fully stated.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact that ten days before Mr. Harrison's Administration closed Mr. Foster ordered bond plates made to issue bonds?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman is asking the same old question that has been twice put and answered, and I decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. GAINES. Is it not a fact that that was done?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no chance of making it any stronger by asking the same question several times. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] both asked it, and I answered it as well as I could.

Mr. GAINES. I was asking you if it was a fact. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] was not fully informed as to that fact. Is it not a fact that Mr. Foster ordered these bond plates made ten days before the close of the Harrison Administration?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have fully explained the whole history of it before you came into the House, and nothing is added by a repetition.

Mr. GAINES. But is it not a fact?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not answer the question again. It is very tiresome to have to go over the same question and the same answer simply because the gentleman from Tennessee did not happen to be in.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman declines to say yes or no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say yes and say no, both.

Mr. GAINES. Ah!

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say there was a preparation for a probable Democratic deficit. I have shown you, beginning from the time of the election of Mr. Cleveland and growing in ratio clear down to the time when, in July, they had to issue $262,000,000, and had to make new bonds, and the whole of it was prepared not for making of a continued loan, but for the purpose of putting into effect a provision in a Senate bill for the issuing of temporary certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me one statement?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield for a question.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do I understand you to say that Mr. Foster told you that he had this consultation at the request of Secretary Carlisle in reference to this?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Foster's statement has been published a score of times, in which he said the provision which he was attempting to make was being made by virtue of a conversation which he had with Senator Carlisle, and that when Senator Carlisle withdrew his approval of it thereupon he withdrew the order to make the plates.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. A moment ago, Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that he had that statement from ex-Secretary Foster.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I stated fully all that need be said upon this old stale question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio another question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that on the 4th day of March, 1889, there had been left in the Treasury by the retiring Democratic Administration a surplus amounting to $234,000,000, and whether it is not a fact at the end of the Republican Administration under Mr. Harrison they had destroyed it and used that surplus up by the extravagant expenditures of the Republican party and caused the expected deficit?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman can make a good speech on that text, but I will not go into details to answer him. There was a change of the revenue laws of the country between 1889 and 1893, and there were a variety of reasons, which would take more than an hour's time to explain, why the Democratic demand that there should be no surplus in the Treasury was by natural causes being rapidly accomplished. But when Cleveland went out, if the statement of my friend is true that in 1889 there was a surplus, I would like, when the gentleman from Georgia has time, and in his own time, to tell me what the Treasury did with that during the Administration of Cleveland, which made it necessary that we should borrow $262,000,000. The answer will be very interesting and will fully vindicate all I have said.

Now let me go on. The war with Spain is over, and it is entirely apparent to everybody that the time has come when, in the discharge of the same duty that has always been the sacred duty of the Republican party, a reduction can be made, and therefore a reduction ought to be made. And the Committee on Ways and Means during the long session of this Congress were importuned from hundreds of sources to make that reduction then. It would have been difficult under all circumstances to have ascertained a fair basis upon which that reduction might be made, and so it was put over, without any promise, but with a tacit understanding by all the people of the country that some reduction would take place during the life of this Congress, and the Ways and Means Committee has met that emergency and has presented this bill.

What are now the principles upon which this bill is framed? I am not saying that in every item it can be squared to the principle which I am going to lay down. We were raising $105,000,000. The proposition was first to reduce it about fifteen millions, and next the suggestion was that the amount should run up to about thirty millions, and finally the bill covers a reduction of something like thirty-nine millions and upward. Should it be by the wiping out of all the taxes in certain directions and none in certain other directions, or should it be by a horizontal scaling of all the taxes covered by the internal-revenue act of 1898? That was the question that confronted the committee.

There was not any question in the minds of the committee about what ought to be done, and we adopted a plan in the first instance, when we supposed the aggregate sum would be lower than it is now, that inasmuch as this war-revenue tax was a tax which at least was intended to be levied upon all the people of the United States, we would try and show to as many of the people of the country as possible that we were in good faith seeking to reduce taxation as much as was possible for us to do. But how to go about it? If there was one unjust feature of the tax law of 1898 above any other which was unjust, it was, perhaps, the tax upon proprietary medicines and druggists' articles, a taxation that reached the druggists of the country, the manufacturing and compounding and selling druggists of the country. It must be borne in mind that the foundation ingredient upon which nearly all these preparations stand is alcohol, already taxed at a very high rate, about which there has been no complaint; and yet we proceeded to put what turned out to be a very onerous tax on the top of the very high rate of taxation already upon the foundation ingredient of these articles. So it seemed to the committee—and there seems to be no dispute about the propriety of it—that that tax ought to be wiped out entirely.

I say it was wise to let all the people of the country, without regard to party, know that the authorities at Washington were seeking to make good the historical record of the party, that they would reduce taxation, and here was an aggregation of taxation vexations in every respect—the taxes on express receipts. I am giving away no secret of any committee when I say that the committee that framed the original war-revenue bill intended to frame it so that the express companies would pay that 1-cent tax, but they did not do it, and the highest courts of the country held that they need not, and the express companies nevertheless stood in a position where they could easily have recouped themselves in the expenditure of that money even if the law had been what we intended it should be. But it is a vexatious tax, it is a vexatious proceeding, and I class it with the stamp upon the telegraph blank, and I class it with the stamp upon the Pullman-car ticket, which we have not taken off, but which we compel the Pullman company to pay. I speak of the Pullman in a generic way, because it is the greater of the sleeping-car companies, and perhaps it is the only one; I do not know. So I think nobody will complain of the reduction or extermination of these taxes. I, acting for myself, would have wished that that tax had been taken off.

Then came the tax on promissory notes—a tax not onerous, possibly, to the great banking institutions and the great money lenders of the country; but the tax upon a note given for borrowed money or a tax upon a mortgage given for borrowed money is always paid by the borrower. So we thought it would be wise to take this tax out of the way—to remove the whole of it bodily. The amount involved is not very large.

So there are a great many other taxes—I will not go over them in detail—which we thought it wise (and I think so yet) to remove entirely. Here was the tax on bank checks, amounting to about $7,000,000. And I want my friends on the other side to understand that a large number of protests have come to us against the removal of this tax on bank checks, and such protests have nearly always come from the great banking institutions of the country. Why? Well, I think I have a solution of the question. If the law requires a 2-cent stamp to be put upon every check by the drawer, there will not be so many checks drawn as if there were no tax of that kind.

The man who is in the habit of drawing 50-cent checks or 75-cent checks will not be so likely to draw checks of that kind if there is a 2-cent stamp required on every check as he would be if there were no stamp tax of that kind. The bookkeeping of a bank will be greatly enlarged by the removal of this stamp tax on checks, and greatly reduced by the continuance of that tax, but it is a vexatious affair to the community in general.

But another consideration operated largely upon my mind. There was a ruling by the Internal-Revenue Department which authorized a receipt to be given by a person having money on deposit in a bank payable to himself, which I believe was, in a great many instances, misused fraudulently. More than that, I always condemned the shifting device that undertook to draw money out of a bank, even to the owner thereof, upon a receipt instead of a check. Nobody ever heard of such a practice until this revenue act was enacted; therefore it was clearly a device to get rid of the tax—a device never before practiced; and I have always looked upon it as of very doubtful character in its essence.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Does not the gentleman think that this tax, by tending to restrict the use of checks, might operate to promote economy and prevent extravagance?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I had not thought about the matter from that standpoint. Possibly there might be such an effect. Possibly, if I wanted to use a dollar which I had in the bank and was obliged to use a 2-cent stamp in order to draw it out, I might consider on second thought that I would not use the check for that purpose. I do not know exactly what would be the effect in such a case. In my very small handling of money I have generally found that I never use money at all until I am absolutely compelled to do so, and I have a mighty hard time to furnish the basis even under those conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I understand that this tax has resulted in a perceptible reduction in the number of checks used.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think that is altogether likely; but does that indicate economy? There is a factor in this case which the gentleman has not suggested. In determining this question we ought to consider the size of checks at present, compared with the size of checks formerly. A man who calculates closely upon 1 or 2 cents may draw one check for $50 where but for the stamp tax he would draw one for $10. That, however, is a matter which will never be ascertained. But, Mr. Chairman, the tax is a vexatious one and we propose in this bill to get rid of it.

Now there are many transactions involving the sale of land or other property, and the parties who engage in these transactions very often do not understand what the law is. The Americans are nearly all people of intelligence, but they are not all lawyers, and doubtful questions in regard to these matters are constantly arising. The amount of money coming from that source is not sufficient to justify the trouble and annoyance.

Now let me say a word about the bank check, which I was about to say when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] intervened. I am told by a gentleman who is a banker that thousands, many thousands, of checks travel in the course of a year to a number of banking houses without any stamp upon them. When they finally come to the paying bank, they are either stamped, unjustly, and illegally too, by that bank or else the check is thrown out and not paid—is sent back through the various channels through which it has come; and then perhaps in course of time another check, duly stamped, makes the circuit; and possibly when that check gets to the paying bank, there is no money to the account of the drawer. So that, in this way, we have endless confusion. For all these reasons it was thought advisable to strike out this check tax, with its $7,000,000 of revenue, and the banks get some benefit from the repeal.

Now, there is a tax on banks amounting to three millions annually. I think it fair to state here that until this bill was reported to the House, and the report of the committee was printed in the public press, I never heard a word from any bank in the United States on this subject. Since that time protests in all forms of expression have come to me and doubtless an equal number—probably a much greater number—to other members of the committee; for there are several of them who represent much larger moneyed locations than I do. When we come to look into this matter we find there is more complaint and disturbance about this tax than is justified.

Three millions is the limit of receipts from this source—three millions scattered over more than 3,000 banking institutions. I depend upon the gentleman from Connecticut as to the number of these institutions; if the figures should be wrong, I will correct them in my printed remarks. This tax is scattered over the various States and Territories and is gathered from thousands of different institutions, the whole tax amounting to between three and four million dollars. To divide it did not seem to be a proper and efficient way to get at the matter.

Then we came to the subject of beer; and on that I have a few words to say. The taxes have amounted in the aggregate to $33,000,000. After a great deal of consideration and discussion we concluded to take off almost one-third of this tax, amounting to almost $10,000,000.

And now, Mr. Chairman, to show you what a time the Committee on Ways and Means had in dealing with this subject, I think it will perhaps be a surprise to many members when I say that a great body of the representative men in this industry for a long time protested that they did not consider the reduction of $10,000,000 as a matter of the slightest benefit to them, and desired that the whole amount should be retained unless all of it was removed.

But we took off 40 cents a barrel, including the former rebate, which amounts to about $10,000,000. Thus we left all of the tax on the banks. But it should be remembered that the banks are indirectly benefited by all of these reductions, and largely so by the reduction of the tax on beer, for to the banks comes the paper—the commercial paper—of the brewers throughout the country, in large part; and if the stories we hear are true of the crippled condition of the brewing interest in the United States, then they are benefited in their credit in the banking system of the country by the sum which is estimated to amount to nearly $10,000,000. Now, I ask if that is not a just proportion of taxation?

For my own part, Mr. Chairman, I would greatly prefer—very greatly prefer—that instead of the discount upon stamps there should have been a flat rate of taxation, which in the present case would be $1.60 a barrel. I think that would have been a better plan for several reasons, one of which I will endeavor to make plain to the committee. The rebate on stamps is a rebate to the brewer. It works itself up into a good many shapes before it is adjusted between the brewer, the retailer, and the consumer; but if the tax were a flat and direct one of $1.60 a barrel, the retailer and the consumer would understand it just as well as the brewer does himself, and there would be no confusion in dealing with the subject. This result will doubtless be reached.

Now, in brief, these are the general provisions of the bill. The tax which is left on the banks will be for readjustment at a future day. It may be possible that, had a full understanding before the committee been possible and all of the facts been available, there might have been some relief to the banks. But as some compensation for the tax there was this sum of $1,000,000, or, in round numbers, to speak more clearly, $1,250,000, taken, which is the sum total upon the same basis of reduction asw as given in the other cases.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understand from the statement of the gentleman from Ohio that the tax has been removed so far as the express companies are concerned?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; the tax on express receipts.

Mr. HAUGEN. What has been the reduction in the case of the banks?

Mr. GROSVENOR. None, except the tax to which I have just referred, upon checks.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is it not the fact that the express companies are the competitors of the banks in this respect—that is, in issuing money orders, for instance—and why should one be taxed over the other? Why should there be an apparent discrimination made?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hardly concede the gentleman's premises, but the committee believe that they have acted impartially in the adjustment of the matter.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Let me suggest to the gentleman that, according to this statement, and also according to the report of the Committee on Ways and Means, both of these taxes are removed.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the stamp tax on the checks is paid by the user?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Yes; so is the tax upon the express companies' receipts.

Mr. HAUGEN. But why should the capital stock of the banks be exempted from taxation?

Mr. KLUTTZ. It is not. The stamp tax on checks has been removed; but, as I understand it, the tax still remains on the capital stock of the banks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is enough to say that the banks are more largely interested in other directions far than the express companies. They are interested in promissory notes and in everything relating to the business of the country that is done by the execution of commercial paper and by the execution of mortgages. Of course the national banks do not directly loan money upon mortgages, but the independent banks do and the State banks do, and the national banks come in, in a sort of indirect way, as the gentleman knows, into the very transactions which are the loans of money upon real estate. So that there is scarcely a reduction, except that upon proprietary medicines, that does not indirectly benefit the banks. At the same time I concede what the gentleman doubtless intended by his interrogatory. I concede that there is left an apparent inequality in the bill so far as banks are concerned.

But it must be borne in mind that the banks were thus silent, and the small amount of the tax as compared with the aggregate placed us in a position where we were doubtless more or less misled as to the opinion of the banks themselves.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the fact that they remained silent does not right a wrong.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It does not, but here is a tax of $105,000,000. We propose to reduce it about thirty-nine and three-quarter millions, and the tax upon the banks, as I have shown, amounts to but about three millions, so that at last, as compared with the sources of revenue from other directions, the banks are having a pretty easy time of it. Yet I admit that there is an unexplained and unexplainable inequality in this particular phase of the bill. If I had my way about it, if I could see as far ahead as some of the gentlemen upon the other side appear to be able to see, I would make a very different reduction from this one.

If we could only say that prosperity is to continue, I believe that a more simple course might have been taken. I am glad to see that in the House of Representatives of the United States we are acting upon the hypothesis that there is now widespread, general, and generous prosperity throughout the land. The people of the country understood it some time ago, and for once in the history of the Democratic party the managers of that party here have wisdom enough to understand a fact after it has been proclaimed by the Republican party and ratified by the people of the country. And if we could look forward, as I hope we may, to a continued condition of this prosperity, I for one believe that we might have repealed the entire war-revenue tax, letting it go into effect about one year from the coming 1st day of January. In that way we would have gotten rid of the discriminations that are alleged. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the war-revenue measure which was framed to meet the extraordinary expenditures caused by the war with Spain is now under consideration after that war is ended. For that war another war has been substituted, involving an extraordinary train of expenditures, in continuation of those made during the Spanish war.

THE PHILIPPINE WAR.

The war now being waged is unlike the Spanish war. That war was in vindication of the rights of man. It was for free government and to save a suffering people from cruelty and oppression. This war is conducted for the purpose of suppressing the aspirations of a people for independence and is in violation of all those essential principles of government upon which this country founded its greatness and its prosperity—the equality of man, the consent of the governed, and the inseparability of taxation and representation.

The minority realize the fact that the people of the United States, knowing the policy of the Republican party, have committed the destiny of the Republic to its hands for the next four years, and have, by implication at least, sanctioned this war. And whilst the minority continue their protest against it as an unnecessary and unjust war, we realize the fact that so long as this policy is to continue, extraordinary expenditures will be required. So, whilst we protest, we will not harass.

We insist that had the country adopted the policy declared by the Democratic party in the last campaign, these extraordinary expenditures would be unnecessary and that we should have secured all the benefits and advantages to be obtained by commercial expansion. We insist that our duty was to give the Filipino people assurance of ultimate independence, but meanwhile, recognizing the fact that the sovereignty of Spain had been destroyed and that the only government created by the Filipino people themselves had been destroyed by the power of our arms, an obligation rested upon us, not only to civilization throughout the world, but to the Filipino people themselves, that obligation being to hold power there for a time in trust for the Filipino people during which a stable government could be organized, with their aid and cooperation, capable of maintaining domestic peace and of meeting international obligations, and, that being accomplished, we should retire.

During this time we would obtain a commercial hold upon those islands which could never be loosened; and with the aid of naval and coaling stations, which would be secured to us as a part of the machinery of our Navy and commerce, we would secure all the advantages of great commercial expansion without the expense attendant upon the subjugation of a people having aspirations for independence, and without the contradiction involved in denying those essential principles of government upon which our Republic was founded.

It is necessary, therefore, if these extraordinary expenditures are to be continued, that provision should be made for them by law and that sufficient revenue should be secured for that purpose. The only question now before this Congress is what amount is necessary for these extraordinary expenditures, and how shall the burden of that expenditure be distributed amongst the various classes, interests, and properties in this country.

AMOUNT OF WAR REVENUE REQUIRED.

Now, as to the amount required. The statistics furnished us by the Secretary of the Treasury indicate a constantly increasing revenue; our surplus during the year 1899–1900 was $79,000,000; our surplus for the present fiscal year, existing and contemplated, is $80,000,000. Our surplus, according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury, that estimate involving an increase of pretty nearly $90,000,000 in our expenditures over those of the present fiscal year, will be $26,000,000 for the year ending the 30th of June, 1902, a total surplus of $185,000,000 to be derived from the three years' taxation ending June 30, 1902, assuming that the extraordinary estimates made by the various departments of the Government and submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury for the last year named is to be a guide to Congress in its appropriations.

Now, we have a present balance in the Treasury of $140,000,000, and that is entirely outside of the $150,000,000 reserved in the redemption fund for the purposes of redemption—$140,000,000, a working balance in the Treasury, subject to appropriations. To this, as we have already passed through nearly one-half of the current fiscal year, we must add the surplus from January 1, 1901, to June 30, one-half of the total estimate of $80,000,000, namely, $40,000,000; and to this we must add the surplus for 1901–1902, $26,000,000, the latter being an estimated surplus by the Secretary of the Treasury after full allowance for all the extraordinary expenditures covered by the estimates of the departments, making on the 30th day of June, 1902, a total surplus, if the law remains as it is to-day, of $206,000,000.

Now, we come to the deductions under the Payne bill. Assuming that the expenditures are the same, the reductions under the Payne bill will be operative for eighteen months.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like the gentleman to state what the estimated expenses were each of the three years named?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The estimated annual expenditures for each of the three years named are, for the first, $590,000,000; that is an actuality. For the second, part actual and part estimated, as the year has not yet been completed, $607,000,000; for the third, $690,000,000.

Now, coming to the reductions under the Payne bill, which scheme will be operative until June 30, 1902, at least eighteen months, the annual reduction of taxes will be $40,000,000, making for eighteen months $60,000,000. Deduct this sum from $206,000,000, the surplus which will exist on the 30th of June, 1902, providing that no reduction in our revenue laws be made, and we will have a surplus on the 30th day of June, 1902, of $146,000,000. Now, the minority propose to make reductions aggregating $70,000,000 instead of $40,000,000, and for eighteen months, at the rate of $70,000,000 per annum, the total reduction would be $105,000,000. Deduct this from $206,000,000, the surplus, if the present law remains unchanged, which will exist on the 30th of June, 1902, and we will have a surplus in the Treasury of $101,000,000, entirely outside of the $150,000,000 in the Treasury for the redemption fund.

Now, I ask whether it is not clear that neither of the parties have gone far enough in their proposals for reduction of taxation: whether a more radical reduction than either is not warranted by the facts and figures which are presented by the Secretary of the Treasury, no item of which is contested in this statement?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, permit me to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nevada if the entire war-revenue tax were repealed whether that would cause a deficiency in the revenues for the next and following fiscal year?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It would not create a deficit, as we now have a surplus of $140,000,000 on which to draw.

Mr. SULZER. Why not repeal the entire war revenue tax law?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I am opposed to that, because there are certain items in the war-revenue measure that put certain taxes upon the accumulated wealth of the country. I am in favor of retaining those taxes as a part of the permanent tax system of this country. I realize the fact that the ordinary expenses of the Government have been covered by tax laws which tax almost entirely the consumption of the country, and inasmuch as the war-revenue bill, the result of an emergency, called in the wealth of the country in partial support of that war I am in favor of leaving upon that wealth its proportion imposed by the war-revenue law and relieve to that extent the consumption of the country.

The total taxes of the National Government have been imposed for years on consumption. It is time that consumption were relieved in part of this burden, and that accumulated wealth should bear at least the small proportion imposed upon it by the war-revenue bill, and that such taxes should be extended to other classes of wealth hitherto exempted from national taxation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have shown that under the propositions of the minority we will have a surplus of $101,000,000 on the 31st of January, 1902. If we assume, as will undoubtedly be the fact, that the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury for the expenditures of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, will be cut down from six hundred and ninety millions to six hundred and seven millions, the expenditures of the current year, we will then have a surplus of nearly two hundred millions in the Treasury. So much, then, as to the amount of the reduction that should be made.

Now, we come to the question as to how that reduction shall be made.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman, before he leaves that question, whether he has made any investigation as to how the actual receipts and expenditures compare with the estimates made for a few years past by the Secretary of the Treasury. Do they overrun or not?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not made such a comparison, and can not, therefore, give the gentleman the information he desires.

Mr. SNODGRASS. In the gentleman's estimate, has he included the river and harbor expenses?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; my estimate of a surplus of $101,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1902, after making the annual reduction of $70,000,000 advocated by the minority, includes all the estimates made for the river and harbor, for the increase of the Navy, for the construction of battle ships, for the armor-plate contracts, and all the extraordinary expenses referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. This estimate of surplus is made after allowing all the estimates of the departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Have you included the subsidy of $9,000,000 to be given to ships?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No, I have not.

METHOD OF REDUCING WAR REVENUE.

We now come to the method of the reduction. Under the Payne bill as presented I have classified the items of taxation as follows: Upon beer a tax is placed—and I refer only to the war-revenue tax and not to the ordinary tax on beer that existed before the war—of $23,000,000; tobacco, snuff, cigarettes, with the reduction on cigars taken out, over $18,000,000. In special taxes bankers are taxed a total of $384,000, and bank capital is taxed about $3,139,000.

Brokers, pawnbrokers, billiards, and bowling alleys are also taxed, making the total of special taxes, so called, $4,227,854. In Schedule A certain items are retained under the head of stamp taxes. The total of stamp taxes is $14,000,000, being a reduction from about $32,000,000 imposed by the original war-revenue act. Then come the items: Wines, when bottled, $600,000; excise taxes on refineries of petroleum and sugar, $1,079,000; legacies, $2,384,000; making a total of $65,000,000 of war-revenue taxes imposed by the Payne bill in place of $105,000,000 imposed by the Dingley bill. I will read a schedule of taxes under the Payne bill which I have made up, and which I believe to be substantially correct:

Estimated revenue under Payne bill.

Beer		$23,598,509.40
Tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes		18,954,061.00
Special taxes:
Brokers	$309,000
Pawnbrokers	37,000
Billiards and bowling alleys	366,000
Bankers	384,495
Bank capital	3,129,404
		4,227,854.00
Schedule A.—Stamp taxes:
Bonds, debentures, certificates of indebtedness, etc.	$3,000,000
Shares of stock—transfers	9,000,000
Sales of merchandise on board of trade	1,000,000
Freight, including domestic bills of lading and freight receipts	1,200,000
Entries of merchandise at custom-house and entries for withdrawal from bonded warehouse	500,000
Sleeping and parlor car tickets	75,000
		$14,775,000.00
Wines, when bottled for sale		600,000.00
Excise taxes on refiners of petroleum and sugar		1,079,405.00
Legacies		2,384,491.00
		65,619,320.40

I wish to say, so far as these reductions are concerned, that upon the whole I think the majority have exercised good judgment, although they have not gone far enough.

PARTISAN CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE.

It is true I deplore the pernicious system which has grown up in the Committee on Ways and Means of having there only partisan consideration of and deliberation over proposed legislation affecting the revenue. It is a practice that exists, I believe, in no other committee in the House. I make no charge or indictment against the dominant party for it. It is a practice that has been indulged in by the minority party itself when in power, but it is entirely subversive of that deliberation which ought to characterize a legislative body.

In the interest of a speedy and orderly conduct of business, we have put a restraint upon debates in the House of Representatives. We have realized that this is a large and rather unwieldy body, and that in order to get through with our business it is necessary to impose restrictions upon debate, upon consideration and deliberation here. But we always realized that in our committees there existed full opportunity for the calm and deliberate consideration of legislation which would insure safe guidance to the House.

I may add that when I was on the Committee on Banking and Currency, though the question then was one which drew the line sharply between the parties, there was never anything of partisan consideration in that committee. Every measure was considered in full committee. Hearings were had, experts were summoned, arguments were presented by the various members of the committee with great elaborateness and detail, and although that committee for years was in a condition of contrariety of opinion that prevented any report, yet the deliberations of the committee, the keenness of the criticism of opposing minds, sifted out much chaff and served a great purpose by eliminating from discussion in the House and in the country many measures involving precarious theories and dangerous experiment.

So, also, in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on which I had the honor to serve, and where we were divided in one or two cases by party policy with reference to our external relations. And yet every measure was considered in full committee and ample opportunity was given for analysis, criticism, and deliberation. But in the Committee on Ways and Means the practice has been indulged by both parties, for years, of confining not only the framing of but the consideration and deliberation upon a measure almost exclusively to the party in power.

We have an instance in the measure before us. The majority were called together before the meeting of Congress. Many and prolonged conferences were held; the aid of Government experts was secured—all this in the absence of the minority—and then when the measure was fully shaped the minority members were called upon simply to hear its provisions explained by the chairman and to vote without the aid of the exhaustive processes for securing information which the members of the majority had enjoyed.

I claim that this is a pernicious custom, for the revenue stands at the very basis of our Government. Without it no other power of government can be exercised. And if there is any measure concerning which the thought, the deliberation, and the judgment of every member of this committee should be exercised, it is with reference to this power that involves the very source of government itself. The contest of mind in the committee, the criticism and suggestions of the minority members, having equal opportunity of information, ought to be valuable to the majority in framing a measure. If we are to add to restriction upon consideration and debate in the House restraints upon consideration and deliberation in the committees, legislative proceedings will lose much of effectiveness and force.

ITEMS ELIMINATED.

Now, I was saying that the majority have, in my judgment, selected wisely in the main the items for elimination. They propose to remove in a large measure the vexatious taxes—the taxes that harass and annoy. But at the same time I do not think they have sufficiently taken into consideration that a particular tax may be just in itself while the method of its exaction may be vexatious. Take, for instance, the tax on checks, giving an annual revenue of $7,000,000, gained largely from the wealth of the country. It should have been our effort to maintain this tax in some other form, and yet it is to be remitted, because, according to the assurance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the farmer has been vexed by it.

It is said that the farmer living 4, 5, or 6 miles from the county seat has frequently no stamp at hand and is unable to borrow one; so that he is subjected to vexation and delay. Yet, as a matter of fact, we know that the great bulk of taxes is gathered from the people in the commercial centers, and is imposed upon the exchanges of the commercial centers. It strikes me that some measure could have been devised for securing this revenue tax in some way from the wealth of the country and at the same time avoid the vexations to which the gentleman has alluded.

So also with reference to the tax on telegrams. Why, sir, when we came to tax sugar refineries and petroleum refineries, we did not place the tax upon the oil or the sugar, but we placed it upon the gross receipts of the companies. We called it an excise tax, and we imposed it upon all persons, firms, or corporations owning petroleum or sugar refineries—a tax of one quarter of 1 per cent upon their gross receipts over $250,000. Thus we taxed their wealth; and we gained a revenue from that source of over $1,000,000. But when we came to tax the telegraph companies, instead of imposing the tax upon these great common carriers, the act was so framed as to impose it upon the sender of the message; and from that tax we have realized $800,000 annually.

I appreciate the fact that out of the total of $100,000,000 of revenue collected under the war-revenue act $800,000 would have been perhaps too large a proportion to impose upon the telegraph companies. But surely some method could have been devised by which a portion of this tax intended by us, according to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio, as a tax upon the wealth invested in telegraph companies, should have been imposed on telegraph companies by some such method as is provided in the law with reference to sugar and petroleum refineries. We did this in the case of the telephone companies.

In the war-revenue act provision was made that telephone companies should monthly make a statement of all messages upon which they received over 15 cents and that a tax of 1 cent upon each message should be paid—not by the senders, but by the companies. And $315,000 was collected in this way from telephone companies. Possibly too large a proportion of the total war-revenue taxation was imposed upon this interest. But certainly some tax was just. What do the majority of the committee say when they come to consider this tax?

They say, "We propose to abolish the tax on telegraphic messages, and therefore we will abolish the tax on telephone messages." Was the relief of one a good reason for the relief of the other? You propose to relieve the sender of the message when you take off the tax on telegraph messages; you propose to relieve the company when you take off the tax on telephone companies.

I submit that in the reductions made by this bill it would have been wise for the majority of the committee to determine upon some sum—not $800,000, as in the case of telegraphic messages; not $315,000, as in the case of telephone companies—but some sum, say $100,000—say $150,000—to be collected in the aggregate; and when they had determined upon the sum which was to be collected from telegraph companies and telephone companies the method of its assessment by a tax in proportion to receipts or to messages could easily have been devised, as it was devised in the existing war-revenue bill regarding telephone companies.

BANKS—REFINERS OF PETROLEUM AND SUGAR.

Among the taxes especially to be approved in the amended bill is the tax on the aggregate capital of banks exceeding $25,000. From this source $3,120,000 has been secured in the last year. I think that if we are to tax the wealth of the country in order to sustain this war, which it justifies, we ought to tax banks, but we ought not to place so large a proportion of the general burden upon a single interest. If $65,000,000 is to be raised by the war-revenue act—only ten or fifteen millions of it to be gained from wealth—it strikes me that the imposition upon bank capital of a total tax of $3,000,000 is disproportionately large.

But I approve the principle of the tax; and if in diminishing it there should be any loss in the total amount of revenue, I would make up for this by extending the principle of the tax to other corporations, particularly those engaged in production in this country—those great combinations of wealth which are taking advantage of the tariff law to protect themselves from foreign competition and are destroying that domestic competition which it was the purpose of a protective tariff to promote by building up monopoly.

INDUSTRIAL CORPORATIONS.

Now, it may be asked, How would you do this? Well, what are the great combinations of which we complain? We are familiar with the department store. We are familiar with these so-called trusts whose names it is unnecessary for me to repeat. How would you reach them? Why, you can reach them just as you can the bank capital, where you impose a tax in the nature of an excise tax upon all capital exceeding $25,000. Or you can tax them as you did the refiners of sugar and petroleum, by a tax upon annual receipts exceeding $250,000. And you can make another classification by providing that all corporations engaged in manufacture owning or operating more than one factory or plant shall pay a tax, as in the case of the sugar refineries, of one-fourth of 1 per cent, or less, if you choose—one-eight of 1 per cent or one-tenth of 1 per cent—upon their annual sales exceeding $250,000.

In this way you will see that you reach the very class of persons you ought to reach. You reach out for the wealth of the country and tax it, not oppressively, but fairly, and it seems to me that by the exaction of the small tax imposed, and at the same time by the exclusion of the small producer, whose business does not exceed $250,000 annually, you promote a policy which will advance individualism and check monopolies.

Now, in regard to taxes upon the great business interests—the combinations of capital throughout the country, and to which reference has been made in this debate—it is only necessary to say that this form of tax is already incorporated in the legislation of the country. These taxes have been successfully imposed.

It is no new thing to impose such a tax. Bank capital is to-day taxed in the aggregate $3,000,000 throughout the United States by the war-revenue act. The sugar and petroleum refineries have paid $1,000,000, and the principle is already here embodied in the law. Now, why not extend it so as to embrace other classes of wealth which practically come under the same head, and, in this connection, by a simple clause, compelling these great industrial concerns to make statements to the Internal Revenue Commissioner under oath; statements which will exhibit their gross receipts, their operating expenses, the wages paid, the taxes paid—national and State; statements which can be classified and published by the Internal Revenue Bureau reports, as are the statements of the banks in the Comptroller's reports and the statements of the railroads in the Interstate Commerce Commission's reports? You will get the statistical information which will enable you hereafter to act intelligently upon this great question and to impose national taxes with a full knowledge of the facts.

I should make this legislation tentative for the present. I would impose a very low tax for this purpose, and I would make it the means of securing publicity of the operations of these great industrial combinations—that publicity which is regarded by all economists as an essential feature in any legislation regulating or restraining these combinations.

Mr. Chairman, the powers that Congress has are adequate, but the information we have is not adequate in connection with these matters. Under the clause of the Constitution relating to interstate commerce, under our constitutional powers regarding the mails and taxation, we can do much, if we will, to restrain law-created corporations from pursuing lawless purposes.

The taxing power is the power upon which I believe we can best rely, and I would make, as I have said, provisions of this character in this bill only tentative propositions, providing a low rate of taxation, capable of producing annually only five or six millions of dollars from all of these great aggregations of capital and compelling statements from them which in themselves would furnish us the information for our future action.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to ask if there is, in the judgment of the gentleman, any species of personal property in this country that is as fully taxed now, as excessively taxed, I may say, as the stock represented by banking corporations and trust companies? As I understand it, they are taxed in most of the States under the constitutional provision of the States, and are taxed at the full value of their capital stock, an imposition which is not placed upon any other character of personal property.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Permit me to continue and complete my question. Is it not true that the capital and surplus of these trusts and banking corporations throughout the country are taxed to the full extent; and is it not the most easily reached of all species of property for taxation, since the amount can be definitely ascertained?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the gentleman that I am not sufficiently familiar with the laws of the States in reference to taxation to answer his question fully. But so far as Federal taxation is concerned, we have derived from the total capitalization of all of these institutions $3,000,000 under the present laws of taxation, which I regard as an excessive proportion of the war revenue.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The constitutional provisions of the States in reference to taxation require that property shall be assessed, as a rule, by uniform rules and according to value; but, as a matter of fact, we all know that this is not done. But in the case of stocks, representing an investment of a trust company or a banking corporation, there is no opportunity of escaping the full amount of taxation provided by the State law; and, in my judgment, it is that species of property which is most easily reached for purposes of taxation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That may be true, so far as the trust companies and the banks are concerned. I am referring now to those corporations which are engaged in productive enterprise. But, with reference to them, I insist, in the first place, that the corporation is the creation of the State, and there is nothing it does that the State has not a right to know about, and its affairs ought to be open to governmental inspection, certainly so far as the exercise of any governmental power requires.

And, in the second place, I insist that we have already violated the privacy of corporations, and that violation has been just as strenuously resisted with reference to such corporations as with reference to those upon which I propose to fasten this obligation.

What corporations are those? Why, banking corporations. They are compelled now under the laws of this country to make clear, definite statements to the Comptroller of the Currency, which are published, which are accessible to us all, which contain every detail of information regarding general matters of receipt and expenditure. And we have also extended that to the railroads, against their protest.

The Interstate Commerce Commission every year publishes exhaustive reports containing classifications of the statements made by these great railroad corporations, statements that are most instructive, statements that have tended to make railroading a matter of science instead of a predatory warfare upon the people.

These statements have been beneficial to the corporations and to the people, and have presented a vast mass of statistical information which has not only been the guide of the United States but of the States and municipalities throughout the country in their relations to corporate transactions.

So that we enter upon no untried field. We have a right, when we impose a tax, to exact a statement, and we can require that statement from a corporation to be as full in details as we choose. I would avoid elaborate details, but I would certainly obtain those details that will give us the statistical information that is essential to enable us to act intelligently as a legislative body upon this subject, which will be the subject of legislation for many years to come. Besides this, these corporations are protected by the tariff, and if tariffs are to be framed, as heretofore, upon the principle of protection, we should have scientific protection based upon accurate information as to wages and profits, not casual protection based upon misinformation or misrepresentation.

But, you ask, what, then, would I propose in the way of affirmative legislation? Well, I would simply take the Payne bill as the basis, recognize, in the main, all the eliminations that have been made, and make further eliminations and extensions of the principle of the law to other forms of wealth. What, then, would I keep? I would retain, first, the item of capital of banks as under existing law—about $3,000,000.

I would not object to a reduction in that, which would, of course, mean a reduction in the rate of the tax, provided the portion of the total tax reductions were placed on other forms of wealth now escaping Federal taxation. I would do away with all the occupation taxes, including the tax on the bankers' occupation, from which $318,000 is received. I would do away with the brokers' tax and the pawnbrokers' tax, and the tax on billiards and bowling alleys and other amusements.

As to Schedule A, I would accept it substantially as it is in the Payne bill, from which a tax of $14,000,000 would be received in the way of stamps. These stamp taxes are not so vexatious in their collection as the other stamp taxes that have been eliminated in the Payne bill to the extent of $22,000,000. I would retain the tax on legacies of $2,384,000.

I would retain the excise taxes on refiners of petroleum and sugar as under existing law—$1,000,000—making a total of $21,000,000 of the $65,000,000 which I would retain—the $65,000,000 proposed by the Payne bill. In addition to this, I would include other forms of corporations, and put an excise tax upon them similar to that on refiners of petroleum.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SULZER. Do I understand the gentleman from Nevada to say that he is in favor of retaining the additional tax of $1 a barrel on beer?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no; I have not said that. I have said nothing with reference to beer. I will come to that in a moment.

Mr. SULZER. Are you in favor of the repeal of that additional war tax on beer?

Mr. NEWLANDS. A great part of it; yes. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. SULZER. Is it not a fact——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will cover that fully in a moment.

Mr. SULZER. Just a word.

Mr. NEWLANDS. All right.

Mr. SULZER. Is it not a fact that the additional tax of $1 a barrel on beer under this war-revenue tax law is really a tax upon consumption and that the poor people who drink beer are compelled to pay that tax?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it is largely a tax upon consumption; yes.

BEER—TOBACCO.

Now, I have stated that I would retain $21,368,000 of the taxes imposed by the Payne bill. I would add to them a tax from which in the aggregate about $3,000,000 could be secured, an additional excise tax on department stores and on corporations engaged in manufacture or production owning more than one plant or factory or having gross receipts in excess of $250,000, to be levied as in the case of refiners of petroleum or sugar, with provision for statements to the Internal Revenue Commissioner for publication.

Then, in addition to that, in order to make up the $35,000,000 which we require, I would reduce the war tax on beer from $23,000,000, as in the Payne bill, to $6,000,000, and the war tax on tobacco from $18,000,000 under the Payne bill to $5,000,000, making a total of $35,000,000, which, in my judgment, is amply sufficient to carry on the expenses of this Government in connection with the other revenue received, including all the extraordinary expenditures to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has alluded.

I would also eliminate from the Payne bill or reduce the tax on wines $600,000. That is a tax on consumption, and is a very heavy tax to impose on domestic wines.

Now, you ask me why we should relieve tobacco and beer of these taxes. Some think that the consumption of beer and the use of tobacco involve vices that ought to be prohibited by taxes.

Well, I do not think that that idea generally prevails, and I shall not discuss it. There is one use of tobacco which I would oppressively tax if it were in my power, and that is the cigarettes. If I had the power I would put the entire tax of $5,000,000 on tobacco, as suggested by me, upon the cigarette industry, because I believe the use of cigarettes is a pernicious habit, destructive of the health and morals of our young people [applause], a habit usually acquired before a boy grows to maturity and which stunts him on the way to maturing.

As to beer, we all realize the fact that it is the beverage of the masses of the people. A tax was imposed on beer during the civil war of $1 per barrel. It was never relieved of that, and when the Spanish war came up the Congress of the United States, instead of recognizing the fact that that industry was already laboring under one tax, sought to impose on it another, and thus a double tax was imposed to meet the emergency of that war. It is true that a rebate of 7½ per cent was given, which made a total tax upon a barrel of beer $1.85 instead of $2.

Now, what is the effect of that? We were to raise $105,000,000, and found beer already paying the Government $40,000,000 in taxes, and we imposed upon it $33,000,000 additional—one-third of the entire war revenue—and so it was when it came to tobacco, which has been characterized by a member of the Supreme Court as "the solace of humanity."

Instead of recognizing the fact that tobacco was also laboring under a heavy tax, imposed prior to that time, involving a total realization, I think, of nearly $40,000,000 annually, Congress imposed a tax upon it of nearly $20,000,000 more, if my memory is correct, and the reduction made in the Payne bill is only $3,000,000 on one form of tobacco, the tobacco used in cigars.

PER CAPITA TAXATION.

Now, it seems to me, when you realize the fact that we get all the revenue of the Federal Government from consumption, that we ought not in case of an emergency to increase the burdens upon consumption; for, recollect, a tax upon consumption means practically a per capita tax throughout the entire country, instead of a tax proportioned to wealth or proportioned to the ability of the man to sustain the burdens of government.

The customs tax is a tax on consumption. You say that the goods which come into this country and upon which customs taxes are levied are goods that go to wealth. It is true in a degree, but recollect that the customs duty as levied under the operations of both parties has protected at least the labor of this country by holding the price of domestic labor above the international price.

The Democrats contend that the Republicans have gone beyond that and have not only endeavored to legislate in the interest of labor, but in the interest of capital, maintaining its profits above the international level. However that may be, the effect of protective duties is to raise the domestic price of products corresponding to those imported above the international price, and thus practically a per capita tax is levied upon domestic products throughout the entire country. So the effect of customs duties is to levy a per capita tax upon all classes—consumers of foreign as well as of domestic products—and not a tax proportioned to the ability of the individual to sustain the burdens of the Government.

So it is with our internal-revenue tax. We get altogether $295,000,000 annually, including the war-revenue tax of $105,000,000. Of this amount we get over $100,000,000 from the tax on spirits, which is a per capita tax, a tax imposed upon the consumption of the entire country, upon every individual, rich and poor; and the poor consume as much, if not more, than the rich.

So it is with tobacco, from which the sum of $59,000,000 is raised; with beer, from which the sum of $73,000,000 is raised. About $240,000,000 out of the entire $295,000,000 imposed is upon consumption, which is a per capita tax, and of the remaining fifty millions a large part is imposed on occupations and activities, leaving less than $25,000,000 to be imposed upon the wealth of the country, the accumulations that represent the stored labor of past generations, accumulations not consumed in supporting the existence of their owners; and you impose almost the entire burdens of the Government, aggregating about $600,000,000, in the shape practically of per capita taxes, without regard either to proportionate taxation or progressive taxation according to the taxpayers' capacity to bear the burdens of government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have reviewed the conditions as to taxation that exist in this country. I have shown that if the existing war revenue could continue in operation, we will have on the 30th day of June, 1902, a surplus reaching $206,000,000.

I have shown that under the Payne bill we will have a total surplus on the 30th of June, 1902, accepting the extraordinary estimates made by the various Departments, a surplus of $146,000,000, and that under the bill proposed, the suggestion proposed by the minority, we will have a surplus over all such expenditures of $101,000,000; and that if these estimated expenses are cut down in the future as they have been in the past, we will have then a surplus of $200,000,000.

I contend, therefore, that the proposition of the minority that the taxes should be reduced $70,000,000 is a reasonable one. I contend further, that this bill should be returned or recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to reduce the war tax on beer to $6,000,000, to reduce the tax on tobacco to $5,000,000, and to impose additional taxes, in the shape of excise taxes, on department stores and on corporations engaged in manufacture or production, aggregating about $3,000,000.

Mr. DENNY. I notice that in the report of the committee you have stricken out the tax on foreign bills of exchange, export bills of lading, and have left in the bill, under the head of "freight," the 1-cent tax on railroads and steamboats, on bills of lading, manifests, etc. Would you not also include that? Would not you strike that out, and ought it not to be stricken out, in order to make a uniform reduction in the taxation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say that the principle of elimination of the express tax should also apply to railroads and other common carriers. The majority have stricken out the tax on express companies because the Supreme Court has declared that it can be shifted to the sender of the package.

The railroads have, however, voluntarily paid the tax—have never sought to put it on the sender of the package, and inasmuch as they are willing to pay it, I am willing that they should continue to pay it, although I think it would be more logical to take it off. But inasmuch as they have never sought to shift it to the sender, I am in favor of letting it remain.

PROSPERITY.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has stated that the Democracy, as illustrated by this debate, has at last found out that the country is prosperous, and he seems to conclude that the conditions of to-day, which are in marked contrast with the conditions existing from 1893 to 1897, are the direct result of Republican policies.

I would call the attention of my friend from Ohio to the fact that in the campaign of 1896 the contention of the reform forces was that the country and the world needed more money; that the stability of prices and values depended upon gradually increasing the volume of money in proportion to the increase of population and the demands of business, and that the effort made in 1873 to demonetize silver, when gold was at its lowest point of production for years, was an endeavor to contract the volume of money to prevent that gradual increase in the money volume necessary to maintain the stability of values, and that the world needed both gold and silver in order to properly augment its volume of money as the population and business and exchanges of the world increased.

Our contention was not for color or material; it was for quantity; silver was to be coined as the means to a desirable end; and it was upon this principle that the Republican party took issue with us. The contention which we made in 1896 has been absolutely vindicated by subsequent history. In the first place, the famine in the wheat-growing sections of the world, outside of the United States, caused a demand for our cereals which raised their price, turned the balance of trade in our favor, and caused the shipment of $80,000,000 of gold to our country shortly after the Republican party was ushered into power. This caused an increase of the volume of money in this country which tended to restore values, to promote enterprise, and to set the people of the country to work.

Contemporaneous with this, and following it in a constantly increasing progression, was the stimulated production of gold, absolutely unanticipated in 1873, absolutely unanticipated in 1893, an increase from $100,000,000 in 1873 and $150,000,000 in 1893 to over $300,000,000 in 1899. Nature, aided by the industry and energy of man in exposing her hidden riches, has given the relief for which the Republican party claims the credit.

The relief has been contemporaneous with the Republican Administration. It has not been caused by it. On the contrary, it rests upon the successful vindication of the quantitative theory of money, for which we have so vigorously contended and which the Republican party has so vigorously denied. There is no reason to believe that the increased production of gold will stop within the next few years.

The restoration of the Rand to the English mining companies will again restore its output, and there is no reasonable expectation that within a period of a year and a half the production of gold will diminish. That it will at some time, pursuing the usual course of metallic output for centuries, seriously diminish there can be no question, and when that occurs, the agitation for the restoration of silver will again be one of the vital and essential principles of monetary reform.

The minority hails this prosperity with as much satisfaction as the Republican party. Even had it come as the result of the economic falsity of their theory, they would have rejoiced. They rejoice all the more because it comes as a vindication of their financial theories. Quantity, irrespective of the material of which the money may be made, constitutes the theory of the Democratic party—a theory laid down by every economic writer since the time of Aristotle and only denied when the advocates of the gold standard hastened to fasten the policy of contraction upon the country.

That policy of contraction has been defeated by nature, and we are content. We claim, therefore, that the present condition of prosperity and conditions to be anticipated for the near future warrant the expectation of increased revenue under existing laws. Let us see to it that extravagant expenditures, that policies that are opposed to the liberties of man and intended to place power, avarice, and greed in control over the masses of the people do not neutralize the effects of the beneficent action of nature and of Providence.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, the bill presented by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee will, they claim, reduce the war taxes $40,000,000 and still leave an income under the war-revenue act of $65,000,000, which, in the language of the committee's report, "will be barely sufficient to meet the train of extraordinary expenditures which follow the close of actual hostilities."

The available cash balance in the Treasury to-day is $137,000,000 in round numbers, and in view of the fact that during the fiscal year 1900 the revenues of the Government from all sources were increased $58,613,426.83, while the expenditures decreased $117,318,368.14, it would seem that this statement of the committee was not founded on the actual state of our finances, nor upon the figures given in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The committee congratulates the country that they are able to report a bill striking off 40 per cent of the war taxes. I doubt if the people will find cause for congratulation in the reflection that at least $65,000,000, and possibly $80,000,000, in war taxes will be demanded from them during the ensuing twelve months, with no possibility of relief until Congress shall assemble in 1901, unless the wisdom of the Senate Finance Committee dictates a more liberal policy with regard to these reductions. The committee should be congratulated upon the easy method of evading the promise made upon the floor of this House that "when the war was over the war taxes would be cut out." Evidently the gentleman who spoke for the committee did not speak for the Secretary of the Treasury when he added that "bonds would be paid as bonds of the late war were paid, out of the usual and ordinary taxes."

Inquiry into these extraordinary expenditures which follow the close of hostilities leads to some interesting facts. Naturally we look to the war and navy and pension budget to find an increase in expenditure, and not to the other departments of the Government, which pursue their even course undisturbed by war. We find, however, that for 1900 the decrease in the expenditures for the military establishment was $95,000,000, while the naval establishment showed a decrease of $8,000,000. The legitimate expenditures following the close of the war related to the Medical Department of the Army, telegraph and cable lines, transportation of troops, as well as the establishment of military posts, and increased pensions, and these increased expenditures will not amount to more than $6,000,000, including the estimates for additional pensions.

The estimated expenditures for 1901 do not equal the increased revenues as computed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but will leave a surplus of $80,000,000, while the expenditures for 1902, after much labored calculation and the insertion of general and miscellaneous items, does not show a great increase for military establishment, but rather for Post-Office, Agricultural Department, and Department of Justice needs, and even with these increased expenditures there is still a surplus of $26,000,000. This $106,000,000 must be added to the surplus already in existence, which will reach the vast sum of $243,000,000, which will have been contributed by the people to uphold the national honor and welfare and which undoubtedly will be used by the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out a policy of finance as unsound as it is contrary to the wishes of the people, namely, the purchase of bonds not yet due at a high premium.

This absorption of money by the Treasury has been going on for three years, and the only relief the Secretary has afforded the people has been through the medium of a bond purchase.

When we consider that the surplus for 1901 will be $80,000,000, and further that this means a withdrawal from circulation of an amount of money equal to the gold production of the country, including the vast output of the Klondike, the extent of this Government absorption of money becomes apparent. No nation, however vigorous and however great its recuperative powers may be, can long endure such a drain, and the Secretary of the Treasury will be forced to do, tardily and awkwardly, what Congress is bound to do now—restore this sequestered wealth to the people by cutting off the war taxes, as promised, and not by the purchase of bonds, which will be the course the Treasury Department will adopt. The Secretary of the Treasury should bear in mind the acute stringency of 1899, when, in reply to my telegram of September 27 of that year, he denied that the Treasury was absorbing the surplus money of the country. He was forced, however, when almost too late, and when money commanded 106 per cent, to deposit in national banks the surplus lying idle in the Treasury, which he had previously claimed did not affect the course of the money market.

This accumulated surplus is as great a menace now as it was then; indeed, it is greater. Then it was thought that Congress would act promptly in "cutting out" the war taxes; now we know that $65,000,000 and possibly $80,000,000 will be turned into the Treasury during the next twelve months, and this amount, added to the surplus already existing and the reserve fund, will swell the amount of money withdrawn from circulation to $367,000,000, or about $4.75 per capita.

A full and overflowing Treasury excites the cupidity of everyone whose business it is to promote enterprises requiring public money. With a bare Treasury there would be no incentive for a raid upon it, and it would be the greatest safeguard that could surround the Administration.

But by far the greatest danger in this surplus lies in the opportunity it gives to the Secretary of the Treasury to indulge in his favorite pursuit of purchasing bonds not yet matured out of revenues contributed for war purposes only. It is true the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means claims that these bonds were purchased out of the surplus derived from the revenues of the Dingley bill. I beg to point out, however, that the receipts in 1898 were less than they had been for the four years previous, and no surplus was set aside then, while the receipts for 1899, under the Dingley law, showed only an increase of about $30,000,000 over 1897, and certainly this was not sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase $40,000,000 of unmatured bonds.

The assertion that there was never a moment where the war-revenue act was sufficient to meet all of the ordinary expenses of the Government, except possibly during the last three or four months, must not be taken to mean that the receipts from customs was drawn upon for that purpose.

It must be remembered that $200,000,000 was raised by the issue of bonds, and this must be added to over $300,000,000 collected during the past three years by war taxes, which certainly enabled the Government to carry on the war, meet all the expenditures incident to its close, and lay aside a surplus. This surplus, I claim, was used to redeem or purchase bonds, or, at least, if it had not been for these war taxes, bond purchases could not have been made, and it was the plain duty of the Secretary, when the surplus was apparent, to cut off the war taxes first, as demanded by the people, and not redeem bonds which the people were willing to let run.

Rather a national debt than an enormous and unprofitable bond purchase. It is an unwise policy which compels the present generation to bear entirely the burdens of government. It is a bad financial policy which encourages the accumulation of a surplus, but it is infinitely worse to employ that surplus to discharge obligations of the Government not yet due and which the people neither demand nor desire should be canceled. To exact from the people money earning 6 per cent, 7 per cent, or 10 per cent per annum for a definite purpose, namely, the carrying on of a war, and to use that money for another purpose, namely, the liquidation of obligations demanding but 2 per cent per annum, is not only unwarranted, but unjust, and to my mind is much like obtaining money under false pretenses.

Bonds of the United States are a favorite form of investment among all classes, but especially among our citizens of moderate wealth, and they are looked upon by them as the safest form of investment. The holder of such bonds becomes at once a participant in the business affairs of the nation, and it inspires a patriotism and love of country, in whose well-being his own welfare is so closely woven, not only as a citizen but as an investor. The feeling of security which prompts him to make the investment makes him the more eager to keep it secure by preserving the integrity and honor of the Government against the assaults of all isms and monetary theories.

We are laying the foundation for great wealth for future generations. We are building for posterity the greatest nation in the world. The rich heritage should be assumed to some extent by our successors. Having constructed and maintained the Govern ment which we will leave for their enjoyment, they should at least be willing to share the cost of our gigantic though successful undertaking.

The bill which is before the House should be enlarged so as to release at least $70,000,000 from the vaults of the Treasury to prevent that amount from accumulating there. While it relieves the people of many inconvenient and annoying taxes, it ignores entirely two classes of our taxpayers who beyond all others are entitled to the consideration of the Government.

The brewing industry has always stood by the Government. They have been paying internal taxes since the civil war, and have been paying a double tax since the Spanish war. It is not fair to keep this additional tax on, and it should be cut off, and this would release $20,000,000 in round numbers.

While their complaints have not been heeded, the committee has determined to remit a form of taxation which even those most affected by it have not complained against. The stamp tax on checks yields a revenue of $7,000,000 annually, and is collected largely upon the centers of wealth. Bankers and brokers in the larger cities, especially in New York, who have contributed $12,000,000 annually since the war to the revenues of the Government, have received no consideration at all from the Committee on Ways and Means, and yet the complaint of country banks has been heard and heeded, and because some of their customers will not affix the stamp on checks, entangling thereby a loss of possibly $100 a year on the country banks, the committee has determined to abolish entirely the check stamp tax, preferring to keep the tax on bankers and brokers of larger cities who favor the retention of this tax, but seek relief from the tax on bank capital and the sale of shares of stock and bonds.

This latter tax is a discriminating one, and unfair in its operation. Whether the 100 shares of stock dealt in represents a value of $100,000 or $100, the tax is the same—$2.

I am in favor of wiping out the surplus entirely—indeed, I would go so far as to advocate such an administration of Government affairs as would never leave a surplus; but I am not in favor of departing from the principles of Jefferson, who, while opposed to internal taxation, was more opposed to the visit of the tax collector to the homes of our citizens. We do not need an income tax any more than we need the war taxes or a surplus. If all the war taxes were "cut out," and a deficit followed for 1902, there would still be the present surplus of $137,000,000 to draw upon, and that should be done.

This Government is expanding commercially, and will continue to expand. Business enterprises are starting or being enlarged on all sides.

Our iron and coal and merchandise is filling the markets of the world. The tendency of money is to increase, and with our country never before in such a promising or prosperous condition, with all fear of a debased or disturbing currency removed, with every channel of trade open to capital, this great increase in the volume of money will find immediate employment in countless enterprises. The one discouraging element that will retard our commercial advancement is the continuation of the war tax and the consequent absorption of the surplus. The Committee on Ways and Means has an opportunity of removing that element of uncertainty now, and on behalf of the taxpayer, the merchant, and the great business enterprises of the country, as well as in the interest of the general welfare of the Government itself, I ask them to either abolish the war tax or enlarge their bill so as to relieve the people not of 40 per cent but 70 per cent of the war-revenue taxes. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. If there is no other gentleman on that side of the House in a position to speak, I would suggest that Mr. HILL of Connecticut occupy the time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is ready, but we have no objection to Mr. HILL proceeding.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States, in his annual message to Congress, says:

> It will be the duty, as I am sure it will be the disposition, of the Congress to provide whatever further legislation is needed to insure the continued parity under all conditions between our two forms of metallic money, silver and gold.

The Secretary of the Treasury, referring to the act of March 14, 1900, says:

> Nevertheless, the measures referred to, prolific as they have been in good results, will yet need reenforcement in some important particulars. Thus as to the redemption fund provided for in said act, while the powers conferred upon the Secretary are probably ample to enable a zealous and watchful officer to fully protect the gold reserve, there appears to be lacking sufficient mandatory requirement to furnish complete confidence in the continued parity, under all conditions, between our two forms of metallic money, silver and gold. Upon this point further legislation may become desirable. In the act of March 14 a forward step was taken, to the great benefit of all our material interests. Nothing should prevent timely and well-considered amendments where necessary to solidify and complete the work so well inaugurated.

This language is advisory and recommendatory; but on November 6 last the American people, who make Presidents and Secretaries and Congressmen, in my judgment, issued a peremptory order that the gold standard should be so firmly and definitely established that it could not be overthrown either by the negligence or willful act of any man or Administration, but that it should continue as the basis of our financial system until the people themselves should declare for a reversal of the policy just as emphatically as they have twice declared for its inauguration.

No higher duty devolves upon us than to heed that order and obey it now when the prosperity of the country and Treasury conditions make it possible.

Until this is done the many and deserving projects for the development of our banking system, the upbuilding of our commerce, and the aggrandizement of the nation can well afford to wait, for until the foundation of our financial system is firmly laid all of these other things will be but flimsy structures built on shifting sand.

I propose, as briefly as possible, to call attention to the defects in the act of March 14, 1900, entitled "An act to define and fix the standard of value and to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States," and to attempt to show what changes are necessary to perfect the measure so that it will do the thing which its title indicates.

When the bill went from the House it made every obligation for the payment of money in the United States, both public and private, payable in gold or in conformity with the gold dollar as the standard unit of value. When it came back to the House this was wholly eliminated, the silver dollar was continued as legal tender, and gold redemption was only provided for United States notes and certain bonds, provision for the issue of which was made in the bill itself, leaving all other outstanding obligations, both public and private, and all future contracts not specifically drawn as payable in gold dependent wholly upon the parity clause of the act, but prescribing no method and providing no means by which such parity of gold and silver could be maintained.

As the law stands to-day, we have two classes of Government obligations, one payable in gold and one in coin, and all private obligations solvable by legal tender, payable in either, or in paper promises to pay gold, in the shape of United States notes.

As the law stands to-day, we have two forms of money, one gold and promises to pay gold, the other legal-tender silver, redeemable in itself, exchangeable at the demand of the holder in nothing, dependent for its parity with gold upon its use by the people and its receivability at the custom-houses; in other words, nearly six hundred millions of silver promises to pay money good only for domestic use and dependent for their value here upon the continued prosperity of the people and the continuance in power of a political party which will not increase the quantity, and thus destroy their usefulness as a stable medium of exchange.

I submit that it is unworthy of this great nation, that it is beneath the dignity of 76,000,000 of the richest, the most intelligent, and progressive people on earth to permit the issue of a single dollar of full legal-tender money which is not exchangeable on demand at any time for any other legal-tender dollar which it may coin or issue, and I declare my firm belief that the rank and standing of this nation as a world power among the other powers of the world is more clearly marked and fixed by the character of the money by which its commerce is carried on at home and abroad than it is by the size of its armies and the strength of its fleets.

As the bill went from the House, while it provided no specific reserve fund for the redemption of silver dollars, it did authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use the gold reserve to maintain their parity by exchanging them for gold, and for the continued maintenance of that fund to issue bonds at his discretion.

When the bill came back the exchangeability clause was wholly gone, the gold-reserve fund limited to the redemption of United States notes, and the bond power limited to this purpose only.

That this is the clear intent as well as the language of the law is shown by the declaration of a Senator in explanation of the bill. He said:

> The committee believe that under these conditions, or in fact under any which are likely to arise, there will be no difficulty in maintaining a parity without directing the Secretary to exchange silver dollars for gold at the demand of the holder of the silver. They believe, in fact, that no public interests will be served by the adoption of a legislative provision for such an exchange.

And then follows this remarkable sentence:

> To make all our silver currency a direct charge upon the gold reserve might imperil at a critical time the sufficiency of that fund. We fear it would serve as an invitation for unfriendly drafts upon the Treasury resources.

I submit that the very reason given by the distinguished Senator for refusing to allow our immense volume of legal-tender silver to be a burden upon the gold reserve is the best possible one which can be given why some provision should have been made for the maintenance of its parity.

The discussion showed that it is the intent of the bill to accomplish this by use and by use only.

There can be no mistake about this.

It was not, as intimated in an able editorial in the Washington Post on December 9, a misunderstanding of the effect of the law, or, as was frequently suggested during the last campaign, a purpose to keep the question open for political effect, but it was an honest belief in the wisdom of the course deliberately taken.

Said another Senator:

> We have not provided here for the exchange of silver notes for gold. We have not made that provision because the committee think it wholly unnecessary, and unwise as well.

I lay down the broad proposition that parity can not be maintained between the two metals except by exchangeability at the will of the holder, when both are a full legal tender, and that no nation on the globe engaged in foreign trade ever has maintained silver at parity with gold at any fixed ratio for any length of time where exchangeability was refused as a clear and understood policy of government.

Of course I do not include any country where silver is used only as subsidiary coin or change money and where the quantity is so limited that the daily requirements of the people under all conditions hold the entire amount in constant use, so that it could not be presented either for public dues or for redemption; but I do mean every nation where silver is used as a general medium of exchange and for trade purposes.

I do not mean a country like Great Britain, where gold is the circulating medium, with a per capita of $11.50, and silver is only change money, with a per capita of $2.78, and where no small bank notes are issued.

Under such circumstances the silver is token money only, and tin money would do as well.

But even there silver is a limited tender.

I do refer to France, where silver coinage is limited under the agreements of the Latin Union, and where parity is maintained by exchangeability through the Bank of France, and where silver is 30 per cent of the general monetary stock, and where, in the past eleven years, the Bank of France has thought it wise to nearly double its holdings of gold and to largely reduce its silver stock.

I refer to Germany, which, in 1873, when it adopted the gold standard, had a per capita of silver of $7.47. Three years later its federal council was authorized to reduce the legal-tender silver to subsidiary coin, but instead of doing it sold it down to one-half of its former volume, and, still unable to keep a per capita of only $3.98 in circulation, have this very year legislated for its gradual recoinage into subsidiary coin.

Mr. LOVERING. Is it not true that a very large percentage of the subsidiary coinage is some other metal than silver?

Mr. HILL. Yes, probably; of course the gentleman refers to the nickel.

If Germany, with only 30 per cent of its monetary stock in silver, has been compelled to take this course, what hope have we of carrying 33½ per cent and maintaining its parity, wholly unsupported by the gold reserve and with no part of the burden placed upon the banks, as is done in France and Germany?

Indeed, with us the very reverse is true, for with any slackening of business here, the whole effort of the banks will be to force the silver certificates back upon the Treasury and thus make room for their own circulation.

But if it is true that use without exchangeability will maintain full legal-tender silver at parity when circulating concurrently with gold, it must be true that use will so maintain it when it is the sole currency of a country, and here we have a striking illustration of the utter falsity of the proposition.

I cite the case of Porto Rico.

It is a little country, but so far as its money system was concerned, it was a little world by itself.

Up to 1885 its currency was the Mexican dollar, with free right on the part of its people to import or export it at will.

In 1885 the fall of silver depreciated the value of the Mexican dollar and the government, believing that its parity could be maintained by use if the quantity was limited, forbade any further importation of it, and so ran on to 1890.

It continued to fall in value. In 1891 it was worth 80 cents; in 1892, 77 cents; in 1893, 73 cents; in 1894, 65 cents; in 1895, 59 cents, and the necessities of the island had proportionately risen in price.

The theory that parity could be maintained by use had utterly failed, and every adjustment of trade balances with other nations only emphasized that fact.

Mr. SULZER. Was silver a legal tender in Porto Rico?

Mr. HILL. Certainly; full legal tender.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman from Connecticut allow me to ask a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HILL. I will; yes.

Mr. FLEMING. I understand the gentleman holds that some additional legislation is necessary.

Mr. HILL. I think the gentleman from Georgia will understand that is the purpose of my remarks before I get through.

Mr. FLEMING. What will the gentleman say with reference to this declaration in the Republican platform as adopted at Philadelphia, on which the Republican party in November achieved a victory before the people?

Mr. HILL. I think the gentleman from Georgia will not need any answer to that question when I get through.

Mr. FLEMING. But will the gentleman listen to a question?

Mr. HILL. I will if it is a business question and not a political one.

Mr. FLEMING. I will read from the Republican platform——

Mr. HILL. Oh, I am talking business and not politics.

Mr. FLEMING. Well, I am talking both.

Mr. HILL. I do not care to enter into any political discussion at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut declines to yield.

Mr. HILL. Something had to be done.

The Porto Rican government then concluded that they would have a currency of their own, which would not be affected by the value of silver in the outside world, but which, exactly adjusted to the needs of trade among their own people, would thus maintain its parity by use.

So they gathered in the Mexican dollars at 95 cents each, and coined from these the Porto Rican peso, or dollar, with less silver in it, and issued them at a dollar apiece in lieu of the Mexicans, which had all been withdrawn.

It was a full legal tender, redeemable in nothing, exchangeable for nothing, exactly adjusted to the wants of the trade, for when the island would absorb no more the undistributed balance was sent back to Spain, and free coinage was not permitted; and so every element which could enter into the problem of maintenance of parity by use existed in a marked degree.

There was one thing, however, which they did not do.

They did not build a fence around the island and stop the import and export of commodities, and everything which went out or came in just as truly marked the value of the money there as if it had been gold, for the commercial world was doing business with gold as the measure of values.

Instead of equaling a dollar in gold in purchasing power among their own people, it started off in 1896 at 64½ cents, fell in 1897 to 59 cents, and when the American occupation came in 1898 went to 42 cents, its bullion value, and in just three years the curtain was rung down on the farce of maintenance of parity by use.

The illustration is all the more striking when we remember that in two out of three of these years the balance of trade with the world has been in favor of Porto Rico.

With unexampled generosity and at great loss to itself the United States is now taking in this money at 60 cents on the dollar, this being its average circulation value during its three years' life, and so as fair as anything could be to debtor and creditor alike.

If the papers report correctly, that the American commission in the Philippine Islands is putting a 10 per cent export tax on Mexican dollars, the reverse of the experiment is now to be tried.

Porto Ricans in Porto Rico tried to maintain the value of their silver coinage by stopping its increase. Americans in the Philippines try to prevent the Mexican dollar from an appreciation in value by stopping its export.

One attempt proved a failure and the other will, and the producers of the exportable commodities of the Philippines will pay the cost of the experiment.

But it is said we are on a gold basis and that the act of March 14 makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain the parity of the silver dollar.

I admit that legally we have the gold standard, but its maintenance is a question of conditions as well as of law.

Laws do not enforce themselves.

Other nations in Europe and South America measure values with gold and pay with silver and irredeemable paper. Now, I deny that there is any power given under the act of March 14 to maintain the parity of the silver dollar, but claim that the powers which Secretary Carlisle had under the resumption act, and which he exercised in 1893 to sell bonds for gold, are actually nullified by the act of March 14, and that the powers therein conferred are not only limited and restricted to the redemption of United States notes alone, but that the authority given under the new law is less than that previously held under the old one.

Let me quote again from a distinguished Senator's explanation of the bill. Referring to the Secretary's power to issue bonds to maintain greenback redemption, he says:

> Therefore this power is only a limitation and not an extension of the power which he now has. It is a power which requires him, under these provisions, first to exhaust other means and methods before he resorts to the extraordinary method of selling bonds for the purpose of maintaining redemption of these notes. So who is there on either side of this Chamber who can criticise this limited power compared to the power now on our statute books? I do not see how anyone can criticise this power adversely in view of the existing law, which gives the Secretary unlimited power for a like purpose.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Does my colleague undertake to say that the Secretary of the Treasury would not have this power——

Mr. HILL. The power to maintain the parity of the two metals?

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILL. He has neither the power nor the means under this new law. He must exhaust the greenbacks and the gold and the current funds of the Treasury before he can issue a bond; and when he issues bonds the proceeds can only be applied to the redemption of greenbacks and not to the maintenance of the parity of silver with gold. If the gentleman will refer to the law, he will see that I am absolutely right about this matter.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I am not challenging the gentleman's statement.

Mr. HILL. I am aware that it has been claimed that under the present law the Secretary can sell bonds for gold, that with this gold he can redeem greenbacks, and that under the power implied in the phrase "for any lawful purpose" he can exchange those greenbacks for silver, and so maintain its parity.

The law does not so read, for it specifically provides that bonds can only be issued for the maintenance of the greenback redemption fund, and both gold and greenbacks in the current funds of the Treasury must be exhausted before the right to issue bonds is available.

The test of the law has not yet come.

To-day the balance of trade is enormously in our favor; our revenues are largely in excess of our expenditures, and a river of gold is flowing in upon us.

You have but to turn the current the other way to show the weakness of our position and demonstrate the inadequacy of the law to maintain the parity of our two forms of money.

When the bill went from the House it gave discretionary power to the Secretary of the Treasury to coin the bullion in the Treasury into subsidiary coin and concurrently retire the Treasury notes, and thus relieve the gold reserve of the burden of their redemption.

As the law now is, after coining about twenty millions of subsidiary the balance is made into full legal-tender dollars, and nearly forty millions of additional liability created by the coinage of the seigniorage.

And this notwithstanding the fact that every ounce of that bullion could have been coined into change money and absorbed by our own people, with no probability of its ever being a burden upon the Treasury of the nation.

Unless the law is changed in this respect, the time will soon come when we shall have to buy more silver to meet an urgent and pressing demand for small coin.

The truth is that for twenty-two years this country has been engaged in wild and reckless financial experiments, and now when we come to face the results of our own folly we have not the courage to retrace our steps.

We will soon have nearly six hundred millions of legal-tender silver outstanding, full half of which will be shrinkage and promise, and nothing else.

Do not prudence and wisdom, and even common honesty, demand that we throw around this the same guaranties and give it the same redemption privileges as have been provided for the greenback currency, and meanwhile reduce the volume by a gradual change to subsidiary coin?

But there is another feature of our currency system which is sure to prove no less dangerous to the maintenance of the gold standard than the immense volume of silver, and that is the greenback or United States note.

Never in the experience of this generation at least has there been any object lesson in finance which has so impressed itself upon the minds of our people as that process of repeated greenback redemption, which has been most fittingly described as "the endless chain," by which, under the compulsory-reissue law, and in a time of deficient revenues, a small volume of greenbacks was kept in continual operation drawing gold from the Treasury.

Again and again the President of the United States has recommended to Congress that when a greenback was once redeemed in gold it should not be paid out again until gold was redeposited for it; thus, under what was termed the impounding process, practically making legal-tender gold certificates of them.

There is not a schoolboy in the United States who has ever read the President's recommendation but that knows that the purpose was to break the endless chain by holding the redeemed greenback until gold came in by voluntary deposit to take its place, so that never again should this great Government be compelled to hawk its bonds before bankers' syndicates to secure the gold to maintain its honor and credit.

Has the endless chain been broken and the possibility of the drainage of the Treasury gold been stopped?

By no means; but, on the contrary, it is made the duty of the Treasury itself to procure the gold by exchange or purchase or bond issue, and then the compulsory reissue law is reenacted in expre s and specific terms.

I am aware that fifty millions of greenbacks can be redeemed and held in the redemption fund, but when that limit has been reached, the mill begins to grind again and the "endless chain" to revolve.

Here is the danger as it was in 1893.

It is true that we have vastly more gold in the Treasury than we had then, but it is also true that through its demand notes the United States stands before all the world offering gold to anyone who wants it, without any power to control the demand by interest rates as the banks of Europe do.

The difference between what is and what was intended to be can be clearly shown.

The Treasury has outstanding to-day more than two hundred and fifty millions of gold certificates, and if every dollar of them was presented for payment to-morrow morning it would disturb nothing but the equanimity of the Treasury clerks who would have to count out the gold.

But the presentation of a like amount of greenbacks for gold would shake the financial world.

Now, I do not believe that the conditions of 1893 are soon, if ever, to be repeated in this country; but that panic was caused by presentation of greenbacks for gold at the Treasury, under the belief that with insufficient revenues and an excessive and increasing volume of depreciating silver gold redemption would soon cease and silver take its place.

Every dollar of greenbacks which was outstanding then is outstanding now, and our volume of silver is being increased about forty millions by the coinage of the seigniorage.

To-day our revenues are large, and the balance of trade with other nations is enormously in our favor.

What ought we as prudent men to do?

Drift on in confidence that to-day's conditions will never change, or so act now that, in the language of the President, we shall "insure the continued parity under all conditions between our two forms of metallic money, silver and gold."

I do not propose to go into a demonstration of the false economy of the greenback system.

It has been shown over and over again that they have been in the past and are to-day costing the country millions upon millions more than any saving made, by being practically a loan without interest.

Even if it were true that the system was a financial benefit to the country, the vicious object lesson in fiatism which it is continually presenting to the people would more than offset any advantage gained.

But above and beyond that is the greater objection that they make our whole monetary system dependent upon the prosperity of the country and the sufficiency of governmental revenues, when, as a matter of fact, there should be no relation between them and under any proper regulations would not be.

Does anyone suppose for a moment that a shortage of revenue in Great Britain, no matter how long continued, would in any way affect the validity and soundness of the gold and silver money of Great Britain?

Why should we longer tolerate a system which is strongest when not needed and weakest when reliance is to be put upon it?

Prudence, economy, the experience of other nations, and the still more bitter experience of our own demand that behind every dollar of this paper money should be a dollar in gold; and if by some magic power every greenback could be called in and a legal-tender gold certificate issued in lieu thereof to-morrow, I believe every business man and bank and commercial organization, and the Treasury Department itself, would thank God and take courage for the future which awaits us.

Well, why wait for the magician's wand, when the plain common sense of the American people can be infinitely better relied on?

Where is the business man that, with a demand note and a secured loan on long time and at an extremely low rate of interest, both outstanding, would strip himself of funds to take up in advance the long-time paper and permit the other to remain as a perpetual menace to his solvency?

And yet this is what the Government is doing, for the sole reason that it has no other way of using its surplus revenue.

I have no doubt but that the present redemption fund, together with the surplus of the fiscal years of 1901 and 1902, would be sufficient to enable the Treasury to transfer every United States note into a gold certificate and do away with the burdensome and dangerous greenback system and forever break the "endless chain."

There is another reason why this should be done, and that is for its effect upon the silver and silver certificate.

When the demand for gold comes, as come it surely will, it will first manifest itself by the presentation of greenbacks for redemption, and not, as indicated in the debates in the other House, by the cashing of gold certificates.

The gold represented by certificates, though nominally held by the Treasury, is actually owned by the holders of the certificates, consisting largely of banks and other financial institutions.

Human nature is much the same there as elsewhere, and the Treasury gold rather than their own will be the first drawn upon.

That this is true is shown by the fact that in the nine months since March 14, 1900, thirty-two millions of greenbacks and Treasury notes have been redeemed in gold, and yet in the same time gold certificates have been increased by $45,000,000.

With the greenback out of the way, the natural tendency would be to use the gold certificates held in the bank reserves and by moneyed institutions on which to draw gold rather than to gather up small silver certificates, even if they were exchangeable for gold, and present them for that purpose.

Indeed, with the greenbacks changed into the gold certificates of large denominations it is doubtful if silver or silver certificates could be gathered together in sufficient quantities to produce any strain upon the Treasury, even if they were exchangeable for gold, so that making such exchange compulsory would, under these circumstances, be largely a matter of sentiment.

Mr. PRINCE. Does the gentleman believe it is now possible to get together enough greenbacks to menace the Treasury?

Mr. HILL. I believe it is not possible to-day; but I believe if you cut down the war-revenue taxes to such a point as to produce a deficiency of revenues in this Government—if you go on with the expenditures which are now started, for which the preliminary steps have been taken in this Congress—before the end of this Administration you will find it necessary to take some stringent measures to preserve the honor and credit of this Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the gold in the Treasury is maintained by the Government receipts or by the fact that the balance of trade at the end of each year is in our favor?

Mr. HILL. Both. If my time were not limited I would be glad to answer the question more fully.

The act of March 14, 1900, was a long step forward toward a sound currency in this country.

Its declaration for the gold dollar as our standard unit of value alone justified its enactment.

For the first time in our history it put gold into a bond as a means of payment, and thereby lowered the interest rate.

It strengthened the greenback redemption fund and provided for its maintenance.

It loosened the rigid restrictions upon our national banking system, but it did not repeal the compulsory reissue law of greenbacks, it did not break the "endless chain," and it did not provide any means for maintaining the parity of the silver dollars or arrange for the reduction of their excessive volume.

Until these things are done the permanency of the gold standard is not assured and the will of the American people has not been met by their representatives in Congress.

Now, what are the remedies for this condition?

I venture to suggest something in the line of the following as perhaps worthy of some consideration as a basis for our action:

First. Whenever greenbacks are redeemed in gold they shall not be reissued, but shall be canceled, and when the gold has been secured, either by redeposit or under the provisions of the present law, legal-tender gold certificates in like amount shall be issued in lieu thereof. All gold certificates should be made a legal tender. The provisions of the present law for the maintenance of the gold redemption fund should be made to apply to keeping it at the same relative proportion to the remaining greenbacks which it now bears to their present volume.

Second. The silver bullion in the Treasury and enough of the legal-tender silver dollars to meet the requirements of the people should be recoined into subsidiary coin and all surplus legal-tender silver made exchangeable for gold at the will of the holder.

If this is done, the burden of greenback redemption will be thrown off and of maintenance of silver parity greatly lessened.

If England needs $3 per capita of change money and Germany $3.50 per capita, we can float a like amount, and that means two hundred and seventy millions instead of one hundred, as now provided.

The coinage of the Treasury bullion into subsidiary coin has been earnestly recommended by the Treasury for a long time, and the Committee on Coinage has reported favorably upon it for the past two sessions.

Mr. Chairman, other gentlemen may have better and far more effective plans for strengthening the gold-standard law. The President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury recommend some action at this session of Congress. The New York Chamber of Commerce, on December 8, declared as follows:

[Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York. Founded A. D. 1768.]

At the monthly meeting of the chamber of commerce, held Thursday, December 6, 1900, the following preamble and resolutions, reported by its committee on finance and currency, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas the President of the United States in his annual message has expressed the hope and the wish that Congress will provide whatever further legislation is needed to insure the continued parity, under all conditions, between our two forms of metallic money, silver and gold; and

Whereas in the various discussions relating to the gold standard, made during the ate Presidential campaign, it became evident that the action of Congress in March of this year, declaring for the gold standard, and providing for the redemption or payment in gold of United States notes and Treasury notes, made no provision for making as good as gold the silver currency of the country; and owing to this fact, grave fears were entertained lest the accession to administration of a party committed to the free coinage of silver might be followed by an attempt to force the country upon a silver basis in advance of any legislation to that effect; and

Whereas we are confident that the mercantile interests of the nation, as well as the interests of every individual, and particularly wage-earners, demand that the gold standard shall continue and be known to be permanently established as the basis of our currency system, and believe it to be a grave necessity that the matter should now be eliminated from partisan discussion by the passage of suitable legislation at the present short session of Congress, when no election is pending or near at hand to be considered; and

Whereas the recent election has shown conclusively that the majority of the people of this country are in favor of the maintenance of the gold standard and a sound currency; and

Whereas we believe prompt action on the part of Congress to remove any question of doubt as to the right to substitute silver for gold will be hailed with satisfaction by the people, and add another strong link to the confidence which now exists throughout the nation; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York respectfully request and urge upon Congress the vital importance of adopting at the present session a bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange gold coin for any other money issued or coined by the United States whenever it may be necessary to do so.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preamble and resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, and to each member of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

MORRIS K. JESUP, President.

Attest:
GEORGE WILSON, Secretary.
NEW YORK, December 8, 1900.

What are we going to do about it?

Other measures are pressing for right of way.

Subsidies, ship canals, irrigation schemes, armies, and fleets, all putting greater burdens upon the people and involving the Government in greater obligations, and no man can guess the ultimate cost.

Along with these comes an urgent demand for reduced taxation, and no man can estimate accurately the net income remaining.

Is it not wise, is it not prudent, to establish our currency system beyond the possibility of failure before we subject it to the test which surely awaits it?

But this test is one for which we alone are responsible.

There will be another which will come from without.

Our rivals to-day in the race for the industrial supremacy of the world are Great Britain and Germany.

One is already in condition and the other preparing for the greatest contest which the world has ever seen.

It will be one which will tax all of our energy, all of our resources, all of our strength. We can and will win, but to do it we must meet the enemy on his own battle ground with equal weapons, and at the same time be impregnable to attack at home.

The world's best money is none too good with which to fight the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who has just taken his seat, agreed to yield to me for a question, but before I could get the question properly propounded he changed his mind and declined to yield. In the three minutes now allowed me by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] I wish to place in the RECORD and before the House the point I was intending to put before the gentleman from Connecticut as a query.

I now read from the Republican platform adopted at Philadelphia, on which President McKinley was reelected last November:

We renew our allegiance to the principle of the gold standard, and declare our confidence in the wisdom of the legislation of the Fifty-sixth Congress by which the parity of all our money and the stability of our currency on a gold basis has been secured.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman wish an answer.

Mr. FLEMING. Not in my three minutes. I have only three minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a positive, unequivocal allegation by the leading lights of the Republican party who, in the opinion of some people, are presumed to have an exclusive knowledge of the intricacies of the great financial questions before this country. They state without condition that the stability of the currency has been secured. They state without qualification that the parity of the metals has been secured; that not only has this stability and this parity been secured, but the work has been so well done that the great Republican party in national convention felt called upon to applaud the action of the Republican majority in Congress in passing this legislation, in the wisdom of which they expressed their confidence. Yet, as soon as they have accomplished their purpose before the people and elected their candidate on that platform, we find one of the leading lights of the Republican party standing on the floor of the House of Representatives and simply tearing that platform, so far as this statement is concerned, into tattered shreds.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, in view of the unsatisfactory answers to my questions put to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] this morning, I desire to say: On the 20th of February, 1893, Mr. Charles Foster, then Secretary, ordered bond plates to be made for the purpose of issuing bonds to cover the deficit in the Treasury. In that order we find this language:

This authority is given in advahce of the enactment, in view of the pressing contingencies, and you are directed to hasten the preparation of the designs and plates in every possible manner.

I insert, by permission of the House, as a part of my remarks, a letter of the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gage, reciting this order of ex-Secretary Foster, and also giving the text of the proposed bond:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., March 25, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, requesting the original letter, or a certified copy thereof, written by Mr. Secretary Foster February 20, 1893, addressed to the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, authorizing the preparation of certain plates. In compliance with said request, I submit below a correct copy of the letter in question, also a copy of the text of the proposed bond.

[Copy of letter.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1893.

SIR: You are hereby authorized and directed to prepare designs for the 3 per cent bonds provided in a Senate amendment to the sundry civil bill now pending. The denominations which should first receive attention are 100s and 1,000s of the coupon bonds, and 100s, 1,000s, and 10,000s of the registered bonds. This authority is given in advance of the enactment, in view of pressing contingencies, and you are directed to hasten the preparation of the designs and plates in every possible manner. I inclose a memorandum for your guidance in preparing the script for the body of the bond.

Respectfully, yours,

CHARLES FOSTER, Secretary.

The CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

TEXT OF THE BOND.

"WASHINGTON, April 1, 1893.

"This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of section —— of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1893, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of April, A. D. 1898, in coin of the standard value of the United States on said March 3, 1893, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 1st days of October and April in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form, by or under State, municipal, or local authority."

Respectfully, yours,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives.

It was stated here this morning, and often elsewhere, that the anticipation of Mr. Cleveland's election superinduced this reduction in the revenue, producing a deficit; but Mr. Secretary Foster, on page 62 of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means of February 25, 1893, made this statement:

Secretary FOSTER. Now, I want to say to you these estimates are based upon conditions existing prior to the late election [1892]. What effect the expectations of the public will have upon the revenues I do not undertake to estimate. For the first time, this month begins to show that effect. The revenues for the present month [February, 1893] will be about what they were last year [1892].

Here is proof that the election of Cleveland had nothing to do with this deficit. It was already on. The then revenue—in February, 1893—was about the same as in February, 1892, as we have seen.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, we find that on February 20, 1893, this order for the making of bond plates preparatory to the issue of bonds was made. We also see on February 25, 1893, Secretary Foster states that the revenues at this date, February, 1893 (the month he ordered preparations made for a bond issue), were "about what they were last year," to use Mr. Foster's words.

Mr. Chairman, the previous year, under the Administration of Mr. Harrison, there must have been a deficit, because the Secretary of the Treasury says that the revenues were the same when he ordered those plates, February, 1893, as they were the year before, 1892, when he did not order such plates. But the fact is that the McKinley tariff made deficits and caused bond issues, although Mr. McKinley, in reporting in this House what was known as the McKinley bill, said:

Ample revenues for the wants of the Government are provided by this bill, and every reasonable encouragement is given to productive enterprises and the labor employed therein.

But he proved not to be a prophet in this case.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to publish in the RECORD a certified copy of this bond-plate order, which is quoted in some remarks of mine as they appear on page 309 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 30.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the papers he has referred to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

[Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is entitled to the floor for twelve minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended to twenty-five minutes. We are willing to yield the additional time out of that to which we would be entitled this evening.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the gentleman from Missouri will be recognized for twenty-five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice of an amendment which I propose to offer, and which I sincerely trust the House will adopt, providing for a reduction of the tax on malt liquors to $1.50 per barrel.

I find myself unable to approve the bill in its present form for two reasons: First, because it does not go far enough in the way of affording relief to an overtaxed industry, and second, because it will not prevent a surplus in the Treasury.

I do not question the good intentions of the Committee on Ways and Means, who have reported this measure. No doubt they honestly believed their ounce of relief to be ample for the pound weight of pain inflicted upon the beer industry by the war-revenue act. But in this they are honestly mistaken. It so happens that no one of the Republican members of that committee hails from a district in which that industry cuts any considerable figure, and it is therefore but human that their judgment should be somewhat at fault as to the damaging effects the excessive and onerous beer tax has had not only upon the brewing industry, but upon all the allied trades—the retailers, the consumers, and practically the people at large in all beer-producing localities. The farmer who grows barley suffers, the hop grower suffers; so does the cooper, the blacksmith, the wagon maker, the carpenter, and builder.

I hold in my hand a letter from a lithographing establishment, which I shall place in the RECORD, in which we are advised that the necessity of economizing on the part of the brewers has brought one-half of the presses of that firm to a standstill, has reduced the number of their employees from 128 to 70, and has deprived the home manufacturing markets of orders to the extent of at least $100,000 annually:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., December 5, 1900.

DEAR SIR: The message of the President to Congress contains, among other commendable things, a proposition that the burden of war taxes should be reduced. Among all classes of our people that have preeminently helped to carry the largest lot of this burden are, no doubt, the beer brewers of the United States. The increase of taxation on their specific industry since the beginning of the Spanish-American war amounts to nearly 100 per cent, while the commerce of spirits and wines escaped almost untouched. We will not speak of the heroic efforts which in many cases had to be made to put up the required spot cash in order to carry on the business of selling beer, because we know that you are well informed in the premises concerning this question. But the losses which have been inflicted upon our own industry since the inauguration of this heavy taxation entitle us to ask for your cooperation in the endeavor to repeal this excessive and therefore unjust tax.

As an immediate consequence of the increase of the beer tax the brewers necessarily began to economize on all sides possible. Their demands for lithographic work were reduced to the absolute necessities of trade, and the issues of finer art, such as calendars, show cards, and fancy-colored work, were abolished altogether. This curtailing measure brought in our establishment alone one-half of the largest presses to a standstill, reduced the number of employees from 128 to 70, and deprived our home manufacturing market of orders to the extent of at least $100,000 per annum. This latter amount represents about $15,000 in actual material, such as paper and colors, while the balance of $85,000 has been lost to our laborers and wage-earners.

Our existence and the existence of a great majority of the lithographic institutions in the United States depend in a large measure on the success of other industries, among which the brewers of our country rank foremost. If you cripple their business by excessive taxation, you will hurt their dependencies likewise.

If you remove the unjust part of the beer tax, you will restore to us the prosperity which our industry enjoyed heretofore, and for which we all cast our votes at the last election.

Very respectfully, yours,

MILWAUKEE LITHOGRAPHING AND ENGRAVING CO.,
FRED. BROSIUS, President.

Hon. RICHARD BARTHOLDT, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

So far-reaching, Mr. Chairman, are the dire effects of that exorbitant tax! It merely goes to show that you can not cripple one industry without injuriously affecting all others.

Twice in the last forty years the brewers have come to the relief of the country. During the civil war the first dollar was imposed on beer as a war tax, with the understanding that it would be taken off as soon as the financial condition of the country would justify it. It was never taken off, and the brewers, patriotically and ungrudgingly, paid it for thirty-odd years, even at a time when a President of the United States lost sleep over a large surplus in the Treasury.

During the Spanish war the second dollar was imposed as a war tax, again with the understanding that the extra tax would be removed as soon as the emergency should pass away. At that time the brewers of the country came forward and stated before the Committee on Ways and Means that if all of the other industries would be called upon to bear their fair share of the burden they would not object to an extra tax being imposed upon them. They little dreamed, Mr. Chairman, that the burden would be distributed so unequally as to compel them to carry one-third of it alone.

But that war was ended more than two years ago. In spite of "the train of expenditures" the Committee on Ways and Means mentions in its report as necessarily following the war, the Treasury Department to-day shows a surplus of $80,000,000 a year, and, consequently, is it not natural that the brewers of the country should come forward and ask for a substantial reduction of the burdens they are now carrying? It is true that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a surplus of but $26,000,000 for the fiscal year 1902, but in order——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Is is not a fact that this additional tax upon the beer industry of the country, under the war-revenue law, has caused a number of failures in that industry within the last year?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will come to that, let me say to the gentleman from New York, later on. I shall cover the point in my remarks and will reach it at a later stage.

Mr. SULZER. Then I would like to ask another question. Are you not in favor of and do you not think the House ought to keep faith with these people who are engaged in this industry and repeal the additional $1 tax per barrel on beer?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will say in answer to the gentleman that I am not aware that an actual promise was made to that effect. But the tax was imposed as a war measure, with the understanding that as soon as the war was over and the train of expenditures necessarily following in its wake had ceased the tax would be taken off.

Mr. SULZER. Is not the war over?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But the Committee on Ways and Means figures out a train of expenditures necessarily following the war——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And a most extraordinary train of expenditures.

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing). Which expenditures must be met from the revenues of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. One of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means to-day, in answer to an inquiry from me, said that if the entire revenue-tax law was repealed it would not cause a deficit in the Treasury this year, next year, or the following year.

Mr. STEELE. What statesman was it that made that assertion?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to me for a moment and allow me to ask a question of my colleague from New York?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have but a very few minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield such time as I may consume.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask my colleague if he asked anybody else besides the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that question?

Mr. SULZER. He was making his address at the time——

Mr. PAYNE. Did you ask anybody else?

Mr. SULZER (continuing). And he is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PAYNE. Will you answer that question?

Mr. SULZER. I will. I did not ask anybody else, but I will now ask the gentleman from New York the same question.

Mr. PAYNE. It would produce a deficit this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman from New York ought to be able to furnish the information, of course, for the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee seem to be the only ones who are able to answer such questions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. As I was saying when interrupted, Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a surplus of but $26,000,000 for the fiscal year 1902; but in order to do so it was necessary to inflate the expense account to the extent of more than $82,000,000. In other words, he estimates the expenditures for the year 1901 at $607,000,000 and the expenditures for 1902 at $690,000,000, in round figures. Why this tremendous increase in time of peace—a steady increase since the war—of one year over another? The committee themselves had misgivings about that Treasury estimate, for they say in their report:

> The committee are inclined to take a more conservative view of the amount of expenditures necessary for the year ending June 30, 1902.

And in the interest of the party which I have the honor to be a member of I hope that the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury is not a correct estimate of the expenditures for the year 1902.

The inclination on the part of the committee to doubt the correctness of that estimate seems to be borne out by a statement recently made by a high official of the Treasury Department, to the effect that they expected this bill to leave the Senate with a total reduction of $55,000,000. If this be so, why should any fair-minded man on this floor oppose an amendment which would increase the committee estimates by not more than $4,000,000, making a total reduction of only forty-four millions? The brewers are now paying $73,000,000 annually. If we reduce the tax on beer by 35 cents, as will be proposed, the revenue from that source will still be $60,000,000 a year, estimating the consumption to be about 40,000,000 barrels. In fact, such a reduction of the tax, though reasonable, will have the tendency of increasing the consumption, so that the Treasury would probably not lose more than about $12,000,000 on account of it.

In my judgment this is not all the brewers are entitled to; but it is perhaps all we can get in this House at the present time. Even then malt liquors would bear a higher tax than alcohol. Beer contains about 3 per cent of alcohol, which percentage, according to the tax rate of $1.10 per gallon, would be about 3½ cents, while the present tax on beer is 6 cents a gallon—in other words, nearly double the tax on alcohol. And even if we should make the reduction asked for in the amendment the tax on beer would still be over 4 cents per gallon.

The iniquity of the present tax is best shown by the following figures: In 1866 the receipts from internal revenues were $311,000,000, in round figures, of which only $5,000,000 were derived from malt liquors, then selling at $12 per barrel. At the present time beer pays $73,000,000 when selling, on account of fierce competition, at only five and six dollars a barrel. In other words, while this industry contributed only 1½ per cent of the total internal revenue imposed as a result of the civil war, it now pays, as an additional burden, fully 33½ per cent of the extra taxes imposed as a result of the Spanish war. And yet, Mr. Chairman, it is an American industry, employing American capital and American labor, paying the union scale of wages, and those engaged in it having their everything invested in their plants.

No one will seriously contend that this tax is a just one. Its effects are further plainly shown by these figures: On June 30, 1899, there were 1,959 breweries in the United States. On June 30, 1900, there were only eighteen hundred and sixteen, and now, according to figures furnished me by the Internal Revenue Bureau, there are only seventeen hundred and fifty-one. In two years the number of breweries was decreased by 208. And, mind you, there was no consolidation of breweries. There is no such a thing as a beer trust. These 208 breweries have simply gone to the wall, and many more, especially small ones, are now in the hands of receivers in consequence of the exorbitant tax on their product.

My friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] will probably call this a desirable consummation. If he does so he forgets that the cause of temperance has been greatly promoted by the introduction of beer in this country. I shall not now speak of what this mild and wholesome beverage has added to the quiet enjoyment of life—the sociability, the happiness, and the contentedness of the masses of our population—but I do lay it down as a wise principle of legislation that if we can not wipe out insobriety altogether we can at least promote sobriety by substituting, as much as possible, the milder for the stronger, the harmless for the harmful drink. The burdensome tax we are exacting from this article, which millions of our people regard as an article of food, has had the opposite effect.

Last year its consumption fell off nearly a million of barrels, and the increase of this year is not at all commensurate with the increase of population and the laws of natural growth. So that of all the industries of our country this one alone did not share in our general and unexampled prosperity. It was held down by the unyielding screws of taxation and kept down by the strong arm of the Government taxgatherer. While the committee in their bill have removed what they call vexatious taxes, they have not seen fit to grant a reasonable reduction of the most ruinous one.

It has been stated that English capital was largely invested in American breweries. The fact is that out of the 1,800 breweries in this country only 76 were purchased by the English. The total capital invested in all American breweries is $702,000,000, and the total capital invested in the 76 English syndicate breweries is but $80,000,000. Fully 40 per cent of this syndicate stock is held by American citizens, hence the English capital invested in American breweries really amounts to only $48,000,000, or less than 7 per cent.

I have also heard it stated, Mr. Chairman, that the tax on malt liquors was as high, or even higher, in European countries than in the United States. The truth is that the country in Europe which taxes beer the highest is England, and there the tax on a quantity of beer equivalent to the American barrel of 31 gallons was up to the time of the Boer war only $1.18. As a result of that war 17 cents was added, so that the present tax is $1.35. And this in a free-trade country, where practically all the needed revenues are raised from internal sources!

In this connection let me remind my Republican friends of the fact that internal taxes on American industries are really obnoxious to Republican principles. The Republican theory of government, as I understand it, is to levy from imports competing with our manufactures, and then to collect from real luxuries such revenues as are just sufficient to run the Government, while articles of food, the necessaries of life, should be as free from internal taxation as the air we breathe and the water we drink. The species of taxes we are now discussing should be raised only as an emergency and be abolished as quickly as the emergency ceases to exist. No wise legislator will contend, and you can not make the people believe, that war taxes on our own industries should be continued almost to their full extent when the Treasury experts report an annual surplus of $80,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I should like to have five minutes more.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If, however, the needs of the country should permanently require these increased revenues, then it is time to demand a more equitable distribution of the burdens which at a time of patriotic excitement were imposed and patriotically assumed by only a few hastily chosen interests. If what the committee proposed were really the best that can be done under present circumstances, then I am willing to admit, Mr. Chairman, that the sooner we can have an income tax the better it will be. That tax will fall on shoulders that can bear it, while the tax on malt liquors and other home products falls upon those who can not.

You ask who pays the tax on beer? There is no doubt that all suffer under it, as I have said before, the producer—that is, the employer and employed—as well as the consumer, but the main burden is being carried by the consumer, just as certain as an increase of property taxes is borne by the tenant. While the landlord is going into his pocket and laying down the money, he makes the tenant reimburse him by putting it on the rent. So in the case of the brewer, who under our present system acts as collector for the Government. He makes the outlay, but he is bound to charge at least a part of the tax to the retailer, because he simply can not afford to pay it out of his own pocket. The time when he might have been able to do it has long gone by. To-day the price of the product is down to the lowest point; the cost of labor has vastly increased, and the losses, even under normal circumstances larger in this business than in any other, have, on account of the increased burden, become a serious menace to many a once well-to-do man engaged in this business.

Beer has often been termed the poor man's drink. Therefore the onerous tax upon it is regarded as an unfair discrimination against the common people, their innocent pleasures and modest luxuries. Not many years ago, when an increase of the tax on ale and beer—only a slight one—was threatened in England, the people immediately lost sight of all other issues and a storm broke loose which swept the Gladstone cabinet from power, and could not be allayed until the obnoxious proposition was withdrawn. Let us remember that an injudicious exercise of the right of taxation has dethroned ministries, shattered empires, and swept crowns from the face of the earth. On account of it England lost the American colonies and Louis XVI his head. A government has nothing but what it receives from the people, and the very existence of government, it is true, involves the right for it to say how much it is to receive and from whom. In our country a political party can retain power only by exercising that most important right with the most scrupulous care and with equal justice to all. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, my views on this matter of tax reduction differ so radically from the views of the members of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means that I hope they will take my observations on their bill good-naturedly, and not regard them as strictures or criticisms upon the measure which they have presented as the result of painstaking work and mature deliberation. I dislike this bill not so much for what it does as for what it fails to do. I believe that we ought now to pass a bill that would provide for the ultimate repeal of this whole war tax within a specified time, and that for the next few years we ought to practice such a wise economy as would make our expenditures conform to our normal income. In determining what our present attitude ought to be on this question we should take into consideration the situation when this war-revenue bill was originally passed, and recall the promises which we, as their representatives, made to the people at that time.

I would like to recall the solemn words with which the late Mr. Dingley opened the discussion on the war-revenue bill on the 27th of April, 1898:

Mr. Chairman, this bill, as its title indicates, is a war measure; a measure forced upon us by reason of the fact that the United States is now engaged in a war with Spain.

How long, Mr. Chairman, shall we continue these taxes now that the impelling force of war has been destroyed? How long will the people continue calmly to pay war taxes in time of peace?

Let me also read the eloquent and emphatic words of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], uttered during the same debate.

Mr. Chairman, that the pending measure is one of extraordinary character will be universally admitted and may be frankly conceded at the outset. It contemplates an extension of our internal system of taxation to a point not to be thought of for a moment, unless demanded by the present exigency.

How long and to what extent, in ordinary times, shall we continue in force this measure of extraordinary character?

And during the same debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the chairman of the Appropriation Committee, for whose opinion we all have the most profound respect, in reply to a question of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] spoke these words with a force and conviction that impressed all his hearers:

Now, I say again, when anybody says there is to be $500,000,000 piled up in the Treasury, either he is ignorant on the one hand or desirous of misrepresenting on the other. Not one dollar will be raised by taxation, not one dollar will be raised by borrowing except as needed. If the war ends in six months, as the gentleman from Kentucky thinks it will, then we shall be in a position six months from now to repeal this taxation.

But the war ended two years ago, and the committee proposes to still continue indefinitely a part of this taxation.

May I also be permitted to call to mind those words of wisdom and eloquence spoken by the present distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, words which the RECORD indicates were met with general applause?

In reply to a suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walker] that the war tax should be continued for the purpose of paying the national bonds, Mr. PAYNE said:

The proposition of the committee is that when the war is over we cut off the war taxes—

These are the words that were received with applause—and that we pay the bonds as we paid the bonds of the late war, out of the usual and ordinary taxes of the Government.

The country applauded this sentiment in 1898. It applauds it now and commends it to our serious consideration.

I refer, Mr. Chairman, to these extracts from the original debate upon this bill for the simple purpose of refreshing our own minds respecting our obligations to the American people. We pledged them in the passage of this emergency measure that when the war and the emergencies arising from the war were over, these taxes should not be maintained; that the revenues resulting from this war-revenue bill should not be applied on the one hand to internal domestic improvements or on the other to retiring the bonds, either those issued under this war measure or other obligations of the Government.

Now, I admit that at the present time it would not be wise to repeal this entire measure, but I would favor a plan by which a portion of these taxes should be repealed at the present time, and by which the remaining taxes should be repealed at different intervals within one year. In other words, I would like to see the provision for the reduction of the tax on beer stricken out of this bill, so that there would be a present reduction of the taxes to the extent of about $30,000,000, the amount recommended by the President and indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury. I would then like to have the bill provide for a reduction of another thirty million of these taxes on the 1st of July, 1901, including a reduction of one-half of the tax on fermented liquors and the extinction of the remainder of the tax on the 1st day of December, 1901.

Mr. Chairman, I am led to the conclusion that this would be a wise treatment of this war-revenue tax, from a careful comparison of our receipts and expenditures during a series of years, and the estimated receipts and expenditures for the years 1901 and 1902. I think, perhaps, in this connection it might be well, too, for us to take a bird's-eye view of our receipts and expenditures during the last few years. In 1896 our total expenditures, in round numbers, were $434,000,000.

Our receipts for the same year were $405,000,000, leaving a deficit of $29,000,000. In 1897 our expenses were $448,000,000, receipts $430,000,000, leaving a deficit of $18,000,000. In 1898 our expenses were $532,000,000 and receipts $494,000,000, leaving a deficit of $38,000,000. In 1899 we reached the high-water mark, with expenses aggregating $700,000,000, while the receipts were $610,000,000, leaving a deficit of $90,000,000. During the year that closed on the 30th of last June our receipts were $669,000,000, our expenses only $590,000,000, leaving a surplus of $80,000,000. The estimated receipts for the year 1901 were $687,000,000, estimated expenses $607,000,000, leaving a surplus of $80,000,000.

Now, the estimated receipts for 1902 are seven hundred and sixteen millions, and our estimated expenses are six hundred and ninety millions, leaving a surplus of twenty-six millions.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of members of the committee to these important figures. From these estimates, furnished by the Departments and given in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, it appears that our estimated expenditures in 1902 will exceed the estimated expenditures of 1901 by $83,000,000 and that they will exceed the actual expenditures of 1900 by over $100,000,000.

Now, supposing that this present law should remain in force until June 30, 1902, we would have the following statement of surplus on that date, provided by strict economy we make our expenses for the next year conform to the expenditures for the year just closed: Surplus earned in 1900, $80,000,000; estimated surplus earned in 1901, $80,000,000; estimated surplus earned in 1902, $126,000,000; making a total earned surplus during the three years ending June 30, 1902, of $286,000,000.

Now, the plan which I have proposed, of an immediate reduction of $30,000,000, with a further reduction of $30,000,000 on June 30, 1901, and a further reduction of $45,000,000 on December 1, 1901, would make an aggregate reduction from that surplus of $103,000,000, leaving an earned surplus under such a reduction of the war taxes of $183,000,000 on June 30, 1902, to which should be added the available cash balance, over and above the $80,000,000 earned in 1900, of $60,000,000, making a total of $243,000,000 of surplus on June 30, 1902.

Now, in view of these considerations, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the people of this country will look to their representatives to proceed at once to a wise and at the same time a cautious reduction of these taxes, and that we should keep the pledge made to them when the law of 1898 was passed. War is a luxury, a very expensive luxury; and the people of this country look to us to see that this war-revenue tax is entirely extinguished and not used in the retirement of bonds or in internal and domestic improvements.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the gentleman's statement. How much does he make the surplus inside the next three years?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. On the basis of the expenditures of the year 1900 the total surplus earned in the three years 1900, 1901, and 1902 would be, with the war-revenue tax in full force, $286,000,000, and if my plan of reduction were adopted $243,000,000.

Mr. GAINES. If you divide that by three you reach an amount only a little greater than the amount of reduction which the Democrats propose—$70,000,000.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. I do not know what their proposition is.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Illinois was not in their caucus

Mr. GAINES. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding to me.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is not probable that at this late stage in the deliberations on this measure my suggestions in reference thereto will meet with approval, and with one or two slight amendments I expect, of course, to vote for this bill. If my proposition for a total extinction of these taxes within the next year ending December 1, 1901, does not meet the favor of the committee, I should like to have the privilege of voting for a few amendments, one, especially, fixing the tax on fermented liquor at $1.50 a barrel net.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SULZER. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. In this connection I would like to call the attention of the House to the attitude of the brewers of this country at the time the original war-revenue bill was under consideration in 1898, and I do this for the purpose of answering some of the reflections that have been cast upon the attitude of these gentlemen at that time and since the passage of that measure. I would like to quote a few words from a distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee—at that time a member of the minority of this House, but who nevertheless supported that bill—Gen. Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama. On the 28th of April, 1898, in speaking in favor of the passage of the pending war-revenue bill, he said:

> It is well that the first paragraph of this bill provides for raising $35,000,000 by doubling the tax upon the products of the breweries of the United States, and it is here worthy of note that the representatives of this great industry, very largely of German nationality, came voluntarily before the Committee on Ways and Means a month ago and stated, speaking for the entire industry, that they recognized that the condition of the country would demand a large increase of revenue, and that they came in a spirit of patriotism to say that they were ready and willing to submit to their full share of these increased burdens, and they proposed then and there that a tax should be fixed as it appears in the bill.
> They were the first volunteers to propose to contribute millions for maintaining the honor and safety of our country. All honor to the descendants of the Fatherland who have come and made their homes in this free Republic.

It must not be forgotten that the men who are engaged in the brewing industry have paid one-third of all the revenues that have been collected under this war tax, and now that we are contemplating a reduction of taxation we are justified in giving due weight to the patriotic action of these men in voluntarily offering to assume such a large proportion of the expenses of the war.

But everyone who pays these war taxes is entitled to relief as soon as we can bring our expenses well within our normal revenues.

We now have a large surplus and our revenues are increasing rapidly under the invigorating influence of Republican financial and economic principles.

But a large surplus and an increasing revenue are a constant inducement to extravagant expenditures. We should not allow the accumulations of this war tax to encourage unusual and unnecessary expenditures for internal improvements; on the contrary, until the last vestige of this tax has been repealed, while our pledges given to the people in 1898 are unredeemed, reduction of taxation should be the fixed policy and economy the constant watchword of our party. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12394, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman to withhold that motion for a moment.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. On May 1 (last session) Mr. WISE of Virginia was appointed a member of the Committee on Railways and Canals. This session the Chair, having overlooked the action of May 1, appointed Mr. KERR of Maryland to the same vacancy. If there be no objection, the Chair would like to have the number of the committee increased from 13 to 14 for the remainder of this session. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OFFICE OF SURVEYOR-GENERAL FOR WYOMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional estimate of appropriation for "Contingent expenses, office of surveyor-general for Wyoming," for the fiscal year 1902, $315, as submitted by the Secretary of the Interior; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MONTHLY ACCOUNTS OF WAR DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, explaining the importance of the provisions of the law extending the time for examination of monthly accounts by the bureaus and offices of the War Department after the date of actual receipt and before transmitting the same to the Auditor for the War Department, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF ILLINOIS AND WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of Illinois and Washington at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the surveyor-general for Nevada from $1,800 to $2,000 per annum, and increasing the allowance for clerks in his office from $1,500 to $2,500, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1676) for the payment of certain claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BOUNTY ON AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 727) to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That on the passage of this act, and after the lapse of fifteen months, there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to any exporter of wheat or wheat flour, rye or rye flour, corn, ground or unground, cotton, hops, or tobacco, produced wholly in the United States and exported by sea from any port in the United States to any port of a foreign nation, certain sums, to wit: Ten cents per bushel on wheat; 50 cents per barrel on wheat flour; 10 cents per bushel on rye; 50 cents per barrel on rye flour; 5 cents per bushel on corn; 7 cents per cental on corn, ground; 1 cent per pound on cotton; 2 cents per pound on hops; 2 cents per pound on tobacco.

"SEC. 2. That if any article named in section 1 of this act shall be exported in American vessels, the corresponding bounty on such export as designated in said section shall be increased by 10 per cent over the sum therein provided.

"SEC. 3. That all payments of bounty under this act shall be made upon negotiable vouchers, payable in thirty days from date, issued by the collector of customs at the port of clearance, and directed to the Treasurer of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby charged with making and enforcing the regulations necessary for the protection of the Government in administering this law.

"SEC. 4. That the President of the United States is hereby directed to notify all foreign nations of the desire of this Government to abrogate any treaty provisions in contravention of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the protection of agricultural staples and American ships in the foreign trade by authorizing the payment of bounties on exports of agricultural products of the United States, conditioned on their carriage in American or foreign vessels."

BURLINGTON BAY (MINNESOTA) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the present Congress a plan and estimate for the improvement of Burlington Bay, Two Harbors, in the State of Minnesota, based upon the examination and survey heretofore made of said bay.

SEIZURE OF COTTON IN INSURRECTIONARY DISTRICTS.

Mr. MONEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 602) to revive and amend an act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, a bill on the Calendar passed over without prejudice under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Secretary to read section 6, a new section which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims, the amendment having been offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 19 on page 5 insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall apply exclusively to the cotton belonging to private owners seized by the agents of the Government of the United States under the act of March 13, 1863, called the captured and abandoned property act, which cotton was sold and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States, and shall not apply to any other property seized under said act.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been read in full to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. As that bill is certain to involve a great deal of debate, I am obliged to move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MONEY. I have the floor I believe on the motion, and I do not see how the Senator from Massachusetts can take me off the floor. I made a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, and that motion has been entertained.

Mr. LODGE. Pending that, I make the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, which takes precedence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is clearly in order. It takes precedence.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment to present a report?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield for morning business.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that I shall call this bill up at the first opportunity, and I shall continue to press for an opportunity. It was clearly understood at the late session that if I gave way to appropriation bills——

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MONEY. I would be allowed an opportunity to have the bill considered at this session. That was not expressed in any proceeding publicly, but it was the understanding, and I now give notice that I am going to press the bill at every opportunity.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been no understanding about the bill to my knowledge, and I am sure there never has been any put into the RECORD or made outside of the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts yielded for morning business. Is there further morning business?

SENATOR FROM MONTANA.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back resolution No. 433, introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections in making the inquiry directed by the Senate concerning the credentials and appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senator from Montana, to send for persons and papers and incur certain expenses.

The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have not considered the resolution for the reason that it does not appear to come from a standing committee of the Senate. The committee believe it is necessary before a committee is authorized to incur expenses of this sort that it should be the judgment of that committee that they should have such authority.

I am directed to report the resolution back to the Senate, with the request that it be sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for their action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reports back resolution No. 433, authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in making the inquiry concerning the credentials and appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senator from Montana, to employ a stenographer, etc., and asks that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so referred.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I make a privileged report. I report back the resolution, with an amendment to be added at the close thereof, and ask that the resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire reports back from the Committee on Privileges and Elections the following resolution, with an amendment.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add at the end of the resolution—and said committee is further authorized to make the inquiry either as a full committee or by any subcommittee thereof duly appointed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. VEST. What is the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us hear the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CHANDLER on the 11th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in making the inquiry directed by the Senate in resolution 371, concerning the credentials and appointments of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis as Senator from Montana, shall have authority to send for and examine persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, the expenses of the inquiry to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear read the resolution that was passed to which that refers and upon which it is based.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the resolution which has just been read.

Mr. VEST. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both the resolution and amendment have been read.

Mr. VEST. Now let the amendment which comes in at the end of it be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. There was a resolution reported by the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and immediately the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported back the resolution. It was reported by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. COCKRELL. Have the Committee on Privileges and Elections had a meeting on it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee reported it back through the chairman with an amendment. The amendment has been read to the Senate, and also the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let them both be read together. There was a separate resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, a word of explanation perhaps will let the Senator from Missouri understand what this is.

There were two resolutions pending here as to the seating of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis. They were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. A resolution was then offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, and so forth. That was sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. That resolution having originated from a single Senator, and not coming from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, it was reported back by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate without action, to be sent to the Committee on Privileges and Elections to know whether or not the committee wanted the power to send for persons and papers. The resolution was sent back for that purpose. The committee had a meeting this morning, as I understand, and they have reported the resolution back favorably, asking for permission to send for persons and papers, and the regular course will be for the resolution now to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, that question will arise, I suppose, if objection is made to having the resolution acted upon at this time. I understand the amendment recommended by the committee has been adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for action upon the resolution at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. The resolution having once been to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I do not understand it is necessary that it shall go there again. I never have known of any case of this kind to happen in the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, to end it I will object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to say, in reply to what the Senator from New Hampshire just now said, that under the rule the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. They have not taken it up; they have not considered it; and I so stated when I reported it back. All we did was to report that the resolution came not from a committee, but from a single member of the Senate, and the committee were not inclined to take action on it. The committee believe that no resolution of that sort ought to be acted on except when it comes from a committee asking to be allowed to send for persons and papers. The committee had not asked for it, and to ascertain whether or not the committee wanted the power we reported the resolution back to the Senate and sent it to the committee.

Now, when the committee say they want permission to send for persons and papers, the question as to whether the contingent fund of the Senate is sufficient to authorize it is a question that must be looked into at this time by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The committee have never looked into that question before because the Committee on Privileges and Elections had not asked for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I never have known this course pursued before. I have never known a resolution of this character to go twice to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I have examined the rule, however. I think the Senator from Arkansas is right, and I shall ask to have the resolution referred to that committee again.

I congratulate the Senator upon the diligence with which he is seeking to enforce in this case for the first time a strict and rigid construction of the rule. I shall ask the Senator, the acting chairman of the committee, to report the resolution again to the Senate as soon as possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on two former occasions I have called attention to what I have thought has not been a proper procedure in the matter of sending resolutions to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate which involve questions as to whether or not investigations should be made or special committees appointed. This resolution belongs to that class, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is acting under instructions from the committee, without any dissenting voice, in reporting it back with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I quite agree with my colleague on the committee that the Committee on Contingent Expenses has not taken into consideration the question as to whether or not the contingent fund will warrant this investigation. I think the procedure is entirely proper, and that the resolution ought now to be referred without debate or objection to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is right. I think the committee have reached the true construction of the rule; but I ask my colleague from New Hampshire whether or not this has been the uniform course heretofore.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of this resolution some time ago, and I now insist that debate upon it is out of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Objection to the consideration of the resolution can not be made. I ask my colleague——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] asked unanimous consent, and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] objected. The question now is as to whether the resolution shall be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The Chair does not understand that there is any question raised about that.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no objection to it, but I desire to ask my colleague to answer the question which I put.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand the objection carries the resolution over until to-morrow under the rule.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President; but I ask my colleague whether it is not a new construction of the rule, and whether hereafter the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will refuse to investigate the question of whether an expenditure can be made until after a committee of this body has passed upon the necessity for it and asked that the expenditure may be sanctioned?

Mr. GALLINGER. The answer I can frankly give, so far as one member of the committee is concerned. I have always held to that view and have tried to enforce it in the committee. Whether or not the committee has always so acted I can not say, but I simply desire to repeat that it is not in accordance with the rules, and it is not correct procedure on the part of this body to send to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate questions as to the desirability of making investigations or appointing special committees for certain work.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I call attention to the fact that the universal rule of the Chair has been to refer resolutions of this kind immediately, in the first instance, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and we are now inaugurating a new rule, which I think is the correct rule and ought to have been pursued at all times.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then we agree, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair simply desires to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to the fact that the Senator's objection was made to the request on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] for the immediate consideration of the resolution, and if the Senator from Nebraska objected to the consideration of the resolution, it would go over under the rule.

Mr. ALLEN. I do object to it, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I dislike to differ with the Chair, but——

Mr. ALLEN. I do not think the Chair heard me. I objected to the consideration of the resolution before the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] made his remarks, and I now renew my objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I dislike to differ with the Chair, but the resolution has been before the Senate two or three days; it is a question of privilege, and now it may be acted upon by the Senate or referred. I do not object to the reference.

Mr. ALLEN. I also object to any further debate on this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 15, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 14, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES FOR DECEMBER.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I now send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection to its present consideration.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 2[illegible]) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the [illegible]nate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of December, 1900.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was read a second time, ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to lay on the table a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was adopted.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 12737) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to reserve all points of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That reservation will be noted.

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTIONS.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bill H. R. 12394.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill 12394.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the understanding is that the time this morning up to 2 o'clock, to be devoted to general debate, is to be equally divided between the two sides, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] controlling half of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That will give us fifty-five minutes this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. DALZELL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that gives fifty-five minutes on a side.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is right.

[Mr. MADDOX addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. OTEY].

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to ask the indulgence of the House on this bill, but I find that in the glamour of our military prestige one very important measure is about to be overlooked.

Mr. Chairman, it is in vain that we appeal for a reduction of tax on tobacco—tobacco, which is more universally used among mankind than any other one thing except the most ordinary articles of food; 980,000,000 of the earth's inhabitants use it, while 600,000,000 use tea, 400,000,000 use opium, and 100,000,000 use coffee, statistics on whisky not being just now at hand. [Applause.] So my appeal for the relief of the man who follows the plow and hoes the tobacco hill being in vain, I appeal for him who, on the sanguinary fields of Cuba, was forgot by you. When our soldiers marshaled against Spain the soldier and sailor were soon reminded that there was great deficiency in providing for their comforts and welfare. In no particular was this made more manifest than the deficiency, viz, in not providing tobacco for them. Encouraged by the hope that nothing would be left undone to sustain him in his heroism and supply his wants in his patriotism, I introduced the following bill:

A bill for the relief of soldiers and sailors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the weekly ration of tobacco for all enlisted men in the Army and Navy during the continuance of the present war shall be 1½ ounces of smoking tobacco and 2 ounces of chewing tobacco.

[Applause.]

It failed when the Army bill came before the House, and so I introduced it the next session on December 4, 1899, and it sleeps in the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the Charlotte Observer—Charlotte, N. C.—of the 10th, the following editorial appears:

The Observer confesses to some interest in the fate of Congressman OTEY'S bill to issue tobacco rations to our troops. What has become of it? The matter is called to mind by an article in the London Lancet bearing upon the same question of tobacco for the soldiers. That paper is regarded as the foremost medical authority in England, and after careful consideration of tables and statistics and regimental reports, it has concluded that the British soldier endured the ardors of the South African war so uncomplainingly and hardily by reason of indulgence in tobacco.

The Lancet declares that "used with moderation, tobacco is of value second only to food itself." The veldt war was a war of long marches and scant food. The Lancet finds that these long and stern marches "were borne by the soldiers with a grumble only when their 'smokes' failed them." These facts should inspire Mr. OTEY to renewed endeavors. The tobacco ration should be incorporated in the pending Army bill.

When it was before the House a Republican member of this body sneeringly asked me why I did not include "chewing gum," thus ridiculing the bill, but in earnest I was willing to accept the amendment if it comforted the sailors and soldiers. In the election that followed he was left at home. He was not reelected. Comment is unnecessary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have never heard a good reason for not passing this bill. We find its provisions in the regulations of other armies of modern times, and as tobacco is taxed so much heavier than any other product of the soil, it would seem that the Government could, without great strain on its resources, supply this much-needed want.

One and two-thirds ounces of smoking tobacco a week and 2 ounces of chewing tobacco—5 pounds per month of the one and 6 pounds per month of the other—11 pounds of tobacco per head, and, if you have 100,000 men, about 1,000,000 pounds per year. The tax on this would be $120,000, which will have been paid the Government, and the average price, say, even 10 cents, $100,000 outlay, and the Government would still have a surplus left of $20,000, if it applied its tax on 2,000,000 pounds to this lofty and patriotic purpose. It is a fact that there is no solace in camp life or on shipboard like the pipe, and nothing staves off hunger and thirst like the chew of tobacco. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is customary to refer to the Fathers, in politics, religion, and business. We revere the opinions of those who have gone before. We hear great men of the past as witnesses. So in the matter of tobacco I will not deviate from the time-honored custom. From its earliest discovery tobacco has been considered a curative. We speak of narcotic poison as if it would kill on sight, and yet what is known as solanine in the potato is an acrid narcotic poison, 2 grains of which produces paralysis in a rabbit in two hours. So says Dr. Emanuel Gardiner, London, a practitioner of "physicke" in 1610, and Dr. John Neander, in Leyden, 1622. Hariot—you all know who Hariot is [laughter]—who joined Sir Walter Raleigh, 1584, wrote in 1588 a true report of the new found land of Virginia. Speaking of "Uppowoe," called afterwards tobacco, he said:

They use the leaves to take the fumes or smoke thereof by sucking through pipes into the stomach and head, from whence it purged superfluous "fleams" and other gross humors; it opened the pores and passages of the body, by which means the use thereof not only preserveth the body from obstructions, whereby their bodies are notably preserved in health and knows not many grievous diseases wherewith all we in England are ofttimes affected.

[Applause.]

This is one reason why we should abrogate the anti-smoking rule in this House, the fumes of tobacco thus neutralizing the carbonic acid gas, which is heavier than air and which is always exhaled from the human system while breathing, every ounce of which falling from these galleries is inhaled by us, than which no deadlier poison could enter our frames. [Applause.]

I hope I will not be interrupted by applause, as I have only fifteen minutes.

Further on they say:

Since our return we have found many rare and wonderful experiments of the virtues of tobacco, of which the relation would require a volume by itself. The use of it by so many men and women of great calling and some learned physicians is sufficient witness.

Fairholt says—of course no member of Congress is unfamiliar with Fairholt [laughter]:

It was to the sanitary effects of tobacco that the honorable introduction in Europe was due. Queens, kings, and cardinals bowed to the dictum of physicians who seemed to look upon the plant as a divine remedy for most diseases and so speedily propounded cures for all that flesh is heir to from various applications, and it was christened Huba Panacea or Huba Santa.

[Laughter and applause.]

Old poets note the curative virtues of tobacco.

Spenser, in his Faërie Queene, where he makes Belphœbe include it as in other medicinal herbs gathered by Timias, says:

Into the woods henceforth she went
To seek for herbs that mote him remedy.
* * * * *
Then whether it divine tobacco were
Or panachasa or polygony,
She found and brought it to her patient dear,
Who all this while lay bleeding out his heart blood near.

After this can anybody deny tobacco rations to the defender of our country, our flag, our honor, both on land and sea? [Long applause.]

Henry Buttes—his name is familiar [laughter]—in his curious volume entitled "Diet's Dry Dinner," 1799, treats of the virtues of tobacco as a digestive power, and says:

Fruits, herbs, flesh, fish, white nuts, spices, sauce, all,
Concoct all by tobacco cordial.

[Laughter.]

He adds:

Its fumes are good against "rumes," catarrhs, hoarseness, ache in head, stomach, lungs, and breast.

Gardiner (quoted before), in his Trial of Tobacco, speaking of a patient who could hardly breathe and was given up by other physicians, said:

Directed him to take tobacco in fume, and little by little he recovered his former strength. It is an unguent to take away all pains of the gout.

[Applause.]

Remain analyzed it. I will not insult your intelligence by saying who Remain was. [Laughter.] Ten thousand parts of tobacco cases contain:

Six parts nicotine, 1 part nicotianine, 287 parts buter extractur [bitter extractive], 174 parts gum mixed with malic acid, 26.7 parts of green resin, 12 parts malate of ammonia, 4.8 parts sulphide of potash, 6.3 chloride of potassium, 9.5 parts potassa which has been combined with malic and nitric acid, 16.6 parts phosphate of lime, 24.2 parts lime which has been combined with malic acid, 8.8 parts of silica, 496.9 parts of febiores or ligneous matter, 88.28 parts of water, traces of starch.

[Applause.]

After this exposition, can you have it in your hearts to refuse this boon to the soldier who keeps your honor unsullied and protects your homes from the ruthless invader?

The analysis omitted a viscid slime equally soluble in water and alcohol and precipitable from both the subacetate of lead; also chlorophyl, a great pulverulent matter, which dissolves in boiling water, but precipitates in cold water; also a beautiful orange-red dyestuff, soluble only in acids, but it deflagrates in fire. [Long laughter and applause.] The animated countenance, the furrowed cheek, the trembling voice, the bending frame, the silent tear of an old soldier impart an interest and gives a touch to his story that no pen can portray, no eloquence imitate. His patriotism expires only with his life; his soul is enraptured with enthusiasm; his memory is on the wing and runs back with lightning quickness to the battles fought and victories won; but he will recall that the ration of tobacco plucked from his mind a rooted sorrow, razed out the written troubles of the brain, and with this sweet, oblivious antidote cleansed the bosom of perilous stuff that weighed upon his heart. [Long and continued applause.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the tax-paying people of this country and I compliment this Congress that at last we have ceased to permit our thoughts to run upon foreign scenes, have stopped fighting for the freedom of Cuba, and for the moment are not chasing the Filipinos; that for a brief time we have withdrawn our attention from the adjustment of the Chinese situation, are through with planning and regulating the increase of the Army, and are no longer employed in discussing the great ships of this country which were recently ordered built and which are now building; but that we have diverted our thoughts and attention once more to legislation in the interest of the people of this country.

I approve of this bill with all my heart. It is a good bill as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. The proposition offered by the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means I consider a far better bill, and I regret exceedingly that it is not before us rather than the bill we now have. I, for one, say that I am willing to do away with the entire war tax. It was my pleasure one year ago to introduce a bill to repeal the entire war-tax law, and I am sure it would have been proper had we done so, and the country could have well afforded it, its financial condition then, as now, warranting that course.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report shows that the total revenues of the Government from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, were $669,595,431.18. The total expenditures for the same period were $590,068,371, which left a surplus of $79,527,060.18 in the Treasury. Let me tell you what the Government has been doing while we were engaged in war, something that no other government ever did before in the history of the world. At great expense and under unusual taxation burdens this Government in 1898, when the war began, issued $200,000,000 of bonds which were sold in the market. What was done in 1899, the following year? The Secretary of the Treasury bought in $22,000,000 worth of unmatured bonds, expending money therefor at a time when heavy special taxes were being levied upon and paid by the people.

Again, the present year, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 14, 1900, the Secretary of the Treasury, in the conversion of outstanding bonds into consols of 1930, had paid out to November 1 last, for excess of value of these consols, $34,000,000 in round numbers, making a total of $56,000,000 that the Secretary of the Treasury has paid out under these unusual conditions. Now, adding these expenditures made on account of bonds to the $79,000,000 surplus in the Treasury, and you have a total of $135,000,000. Deducting the war taxes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, which the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows were $105,000,000, and the Treasury would have more money by $30,000,000 at the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, than it had at the same time in 1899. Therefore it is plain to me, and should be plain to everyone, that the entire war-tax act should be taken from the statute books, and that the people should be permitted to keep this money in their pockets. When a government is not in need of money, when it has an ample amount to meet its legitimate wants and to protect its credit, then to tax the people is unjust. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation.

What is England doing to-day? Is she resorting to any such financial tactics? It is true England is selling bonds in bunches and lots to meet the increased expenditures on account of the South African war, but we do not hear of England redeeming her unmatured bonds with the money thus obtained. Here we are constantly dealing in our bonds, selling them one year and buying them the next. What is the Government doing with the money collected from these taxes? To-day there are $96,000,000 of that money in the national banks of the country, for the use of which the Government does not receive one cent of interest. In times of slight financial trouble, when the banks become depressed and money gets high, if the Government calls in these loans and lessens its balances with these depositories the banks cry out that money is getting high and the Government is mistreating them in withdrawing their deposits from them.

If these banks of depository, holding these great balances from day to day, amounting, as stated, to $96,000,000—only $9,000,000 less than the total amount of war taxes collected last year—on which they are not paying one cent of interest, complain when these deposits are demanded, in the name of common sense what must the people say when this very money is being taken from their pockets by high war taxes, under the plea that these large sums are necessary "to meet the train of extraordinary expenditures which follow the close of actual hostilities," to swell the deposit accounts of favored national banks? We should leave this money in the pockets of the people. We do not want to put a great balance in the Treasury or in Government depositories. We have an ample amount of money to maintain the credit of the country, and that credit is as good as it can be.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, when the Spanish-American war-revenue bill was being discussed in this House in 1898, leading Republicans on this floor then stated that just so soon as the Spanish-American war was over the war taxes would be repealed. The American people—the taxpayers of this country—expect the Republican party to keep that pledge. It was a solemn promise. This bill willfully and unnecessarily violates it.

Mr. KING. They do not expect it. They think they ought to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Yes; that is about the truth of the matter. It is to be regretted that the majority of the Ways and Means Committee has failed to meet the reasonable expectation of the taxpayers, and has failed to keep the promise of the Republican leaders in this House when the war-revenue bill was being discussed in 1898. If the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee had done their duty they would have brought into this House a bill to repeal the war-revenue law, and to repeal it in toto. The Spanish-American war-revenue law was an emergency measure. It was to remain on the statute books until the war was concluded and then be promptly repealed. The war is over and the war taxes must go. They have no place on our law books in time of peace.

It has been stated here, Mr. Chairman, by one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee, and the facts and statistics confirm the statement, that if the war-revenue law should be repealed it would not cause a deficit in the revenues of the Government this year, next year, or the year thereafter. Why, then, I ask in the name of all that is fair, should these oppressive, unjust, and burdensome war taxes be indefinitely continued in time of peace? The annoying, harassing, and unnecessary war taxes should be repealed.

Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me by the gentleman from Tennessee it will be impossible for me to fully discuss this bill, but I desire very hurriedly and briefly to criticise one portion of it that seems to do a great injustice. I have received a number of letters from constituents of mine objecting to and protesting against that portion of the bill that continues the additional war taxes on beer. With the permission of the House I shall incorporate some of these letters in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The tax on beer is out of all proportion to the tax on other commodities. The manufacturers and consumers of beer pay more than their just share of the burdens of government. They want only what is just. They ask no favor. They want to be treated fairly, and they now demand, two years after the Spanish-American war, that those additional war taxes be repealed. Is this asking too much? Is it not just what you promised when you imposed the additional burden of $1 a barrel on beer? The tax of $2 a barrel on beer is too much.

You know the manufacturers engaged in this industry demand that the war taxes on beer be reduced to $1 a barrel, as it was before the Spanish-American war began. The brewers have sent several representative delegations here asking for the repeal of the war tax, and they have filed hundreds and thousands of petitions in favor of it. But if I know your intentions, and if I am any judge of your policy, their mission has been a failure, their work in vain, and the petitions have been thrown in the waste-basket.

Mr. Chairman, the manufacture of beer is one of the most important industries in this country. It is a legitimate business, and should not be persecuted by oppressive taxation. It gives employment to thousands and hundreds of thousands of men. It affects the producers, the wage earners, and the transportation companies of the whole country. To discriminate against it is unjust and the policy as far-reaching as it is ruinous. At the beginning of the civil war a tax of $1 a barrel was put on beer, and it was promised then, directly or indirectly, by the party in power that as soon as the emergency should be over that tax would be repealed. That was a war tax. But after the civil war that tax was continued, although most of the other internal-revenue taxes were repealed. This civil-war tax of $1 a barrel on beer was kept on from that day to this, and notwithstanding it was a war tax in time of peace and burdensome to the producers, the manufacturers, and the consumers they bore it without a murmur. When the Spanish-American war revenue law was passed in 1898 the Republican party doubled the war tax on beer, making it $2 a barrel.

And now, sir, instead of reducing that tax to $1 a barrel, as you promised the representatives of that industry when they appeared before your committee in 1898, you propose to continue this burdensome and unjust tax at the rate of $2 per barrel—or perhaps a little less—indefinitely. Is that fair? Beer is the poor man's drink, and the poor man pays most of this unjust and exorbitant tax. Years ago and during the civil war beer was selling for from $12 to $18 per barrel, and the tax then was only $1 a barrel. To-day beer is selling for from $5 to $6 a barrel and the tax is $2 a barrel. If justice were done in this matter, and members had the courage of their convictions, this House would almost unanimously make the tax on beer what it was before the Spanish-American war.

The brewers' industry pays more taxes to-day into the Treasury of the Government than any other industry in this country. This burdensome additional war tax has driven out of business a great many manufacturers, has driven others into bankruptcy, and forced out of legitimate employment thousands of honest toilers. This war tax falls with a heavy hand on the consumers and with disastrous effect on the manufacturers and retailers of our country. We should do our duty and repeal it.

Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, I listened to the remarks of my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. In the course of his remarks he said that at the proper time he would offer an amendment to this bill to reduce this unjust and iniquitous tax on beer to $1.50 a barrel. That is all right so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. If no one else does, I will offer an amendment to put the tax back to $1 a barrel, and I trust that this House will adopt that amendment and take off the additional war tax of $1 a barrel. It ought to be taken off. Under the Spanish-American war-revenue law the beer industry has paid more than one-third of the entire revenue derived from that act.

Under the provisions of this bill now being considered, according to the statement of the chairman of the committee, if you do not reduce the tax, beer will pay nearly two-thirds of the revenue to be derived. This is unjust to this industry. It is an injustice to the people who are engaged in it. The brewers were patriotic. When the Spanish-American war began, when the emergency arose, when the Government needed immediate funds to carry on the war, the brewers of the land came before the Ways and Means Committee and said, "If it is necessary to tax our industry an additional $1 a barrel to raise immediate revenue to prosecute successfully the Spanish-American war, we are willing to submit and pay such additional taxation on condition that just so soon as the war is over and the emergency passed this additional tax of $1 a barrel on beer shall be forthwith repealed."

That promise was made to the representatives of this industry; and they and thousands of others are looking to-day to this Congress to see if that promise will be fulfilled. I trust that every fair-minded man in this House, that every member who is opposed to discriminating in favor of one industry by robbing another, who is opposed to unjust and burdensome taxes when they are unnecessary, and who believes that unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation, will support this proposition to repeal this additional war tax on beer and keep the pledge of the Government.

And now, Mr. Chairman, to sum it all up, I am in favor of repealing the additional tax of $1 a barrel on beer, imposed by reason of the emergency of the Spanish-American war, for the following good and sufficient reasons:

1. That the Spanish war tax is a double tax, as their business had already been paying a war tax of $1 per barrel since 1862.

2. It exacted 40 per cent of the selling price of their product—$2 out of $5—a levy which made production a matter of loss from its imposition.

3. It has resulted, by closing and consolidating establishments in the endeavor to reduce expenses and keep their heads above water, in the loss of employment and the consequent loss of wages to thousands of employees.

4. That a decreased consumption has necessitated, of course, decreased production, and this means not only loss to the brewer, but to the farmer in markets for his products, to the mechanic in employment, to those who have money invested in the business in interest and profit which would eventually find an outlet and give employment to idle thousands, and to the Government in revenue.

5. Because it is unjust to saddle additional burdens upon an industry that has uninterruptedly and uncomplainingly borne the old war tax ever since its first imposition (aiding the Government in devising and maintaining means for its prompt collection), while all other internal war taxes have been totally abolished, except as to ardent spirits and tobacco, in which latter instances the rates of 1865 have been considerably reduced.

6. Because when the war tax of $1 was imposed beer sold at $12 per barrel, while to-day, the tax remaining the same, less than one-half of that amount is the average price, wages and the ordinary operating expenses of breweries and the capital required in the business having vastly increased in the meantime.

7. Because when this tax was first imposed the burdens borne by the traffic in the shape of local taxes or license fees did not exceed in any State the sum of $200, while at the present time in some States these local taxes range up to $2,000 for each saloon—the total sum of such local taxes and license fees throughout the country amounting to probably $60,000,000, a disproportionately large share of which enormous sum must be and is borne by beer, as may be seen from a single example in point, to wit: The State of New York, where out of a total of over $11,000,000 derived from the traffic the beer interests paid about $7,000,000. In the present condition of the market the brewer would be compelled to raise the price of his product, and the dealer, on his part, in order to make up the difference, would have to reduce the size of his measures.

8. Because neither from an economic nor from an ethical point of view does it appear justifiable to increase the war tax on beer while native wines are totally exempt from taxation.

9. Because as a revenue measure the increase is based on erroneous premises, for while it is true that under the present system, which imparted to the industry an exceedingly valuable element of stability, the production has steadily increased, it is more than probable that the increased tax will produce a decline in the business.

10. Because the increase would be a most potent incentive to the formation of trusts, and would most assuredly drive out of the business a large proportion of the smaller brewers. The significance of this will be appreciated if you state the undeniable fact that one-half of the beer produced in this country is manufactured by about 100 large brewers, while the other half is made in about 1,800 smaller establishments.

11. Because, although the tax may at first be borne by the brewers—to be used as a means of competition by the stronger trade rivals—it will in the end have to be paid by the consumer, in one way or another; and this we deem not only unjust, but extremely unwise from a temperance point of view, for beer, whatever fanatics may say to the contrary, has become and is to-day one of the necessaries of life to a large part of our people, and as such has a strong tendency to enhance the well-being of the consumers and to modify drinking habits in the direction of true temperance.

12. Because the increase is calculated to place a double burden upon the consumer, inasmuch as it is imposed in order to offset a loss of revenue, which would inevitably be caused by the proposed prohibitive duties on other articles of daily consumption, the price of which would thus necessarily be enhanced, to the great disadvantage of the consumer and for the benefit of certain domestic industries.

13. Because, instead of creating a "minimum of industrial disturbance"—a consideration which is urged by one of the foremost advocates of the increase as a paramount requirement of any change in the tax system—the increase will most assuredly unsettle and injuriously affect the brewing industry.

14. That the tax is continued although the war which made its imposition possible and which formed the only excuse for levying it is over, and that it has been continued beyond the needs of the Government, as an overflowing Treasury proves, and should be repealed.

These reasons, to my mind, conclusively show that this additional war tax is oppressive, burdensome, and unnecessary, and should be repealed now. Last year the brewing industry was taxed and paid into the Treasury about $75,000,000. There are about 40,000,000 barrels of beer manufactured a year, and if we return to the tax of $1 a barrel existing prior to the Spanish-American war, the industry now being discussed will pay an annual revenue of about $40,000,000—more in proportion, I believe, than any other industry in the country.

Now, sir, I contend that we do not need this additional war tax. In fact all these Spanish-American war-revenue taxes should be repealed; and if by chance there should be a deficiency in the revenues it is the duty incumbent on the party charged with the responsibility of legislation—charged with the responsibility of raising revenue for the economical administration of the affairs of the Government—to raise it fairly and justly and honestly, without favor to one industry as against another. I am in favor of an income tax. That is a just tax—fair to all—and makes wealth pay its just share of the burdens of government.

If you say that the United States Supreme Court has held an income tax unconstitutional, then I am in favor of a graduated inheritance tax and a graduated corporation tax on the stock and dividends of the great industrial combinations of the land. That will be a tax that can not be evaded; and it is conceded that it will be a fair and a just tax. It is a tax on the idle and the accumulated wealth of the country, which now practically escapes all taxation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I hope I may be allowed a few moments more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should be glad to accommodate the gentleman if I had the remaining time under my control; but I have promised it all away.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, some data in regard to this question of the additional tax on beer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I desire to insert in the RECORD the following succinct statements of Mr. Rudolf Brand, the president of the United States Brewers' Association, of Chicago, Ill., and also of Mr. Adolphus Busch, of St. Louis, Mo., printed in the Washington Post to-day:

BREWERS ASK RELIEF—WAR TAX ON BEER HAS CRIPPLED A GREAT INDUSTRY—APPEAL FOR FAIR TREATMENT—THEY INSIST THAT THE EMERGENCY NO LONGER EXISTS TO WARRANT THE FURTHER IMPOSING OF A HARDSHIP UPON THEM—TAX LEVIED ON ACCOUNT OF THE CIVIL WAR WHICH HAS NEVER BEEN REMOVED—CONGRESS IS URGED TO GRANT SIMPLE JUSTICE.

The president of the United States Brewers' Association, Mr. Rudolf Brand, of Chicago, Ill., in an interview with a Post reporter last night, said:

"In conjunction with my associates here in Washington, representing the brewing industry throughout the United States, I can only express surprise and disappointment at the conclusion arrived at by the Ways and Means Committee in their report to Congress, in which they recommend such a slight reduction of the tax on beer, while the majority of the other industries taxed under the war measure have received the committee's recommendation for the total elimination of the taxes imposed upon them by the Spanish war.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S MESSAGE.

"We very naturally deducted from President McKinley's message to Congress, in which he said relative to war taxes: 'I recommend that the Congress at its present session reduce the internal-revenue taxes imposed to meet the expenses in the war with Spain in the sum of $30,000,000. This reduction should be secured by the remission of those taxes which experience has shown to be the most burdensome to the industries of the people,' that the brewing industry, which has suffered more than any other industry, would be the first to be relieved, and we based our claims upon the actual figures we presented to the Ways and Means Committee, demonstrating conclusively the losses we have sustained under the grinding oppressive double war tax of $2 per barrel, or 40 per cent of the entire market value of our product.

"Again I call attention to the following extracts from our previous letter to the Ways and Means Committee:

CIVIL WAR TAXES NEVER REMOVED.

"This is only one side of the question, but it is the one which shows the pernicious effects of a most unjust tax in the most glaring light, and appeals to other sentiments besides that of justice in the abstract. In our opinion, it should not, however, require such appeals in order to bring about the immediate repeal of the entire extra war tax, superimposed upon the old war tax. There was no equitable justification for it at the time of its imposition, because the brewing industry had up to that time uninterruptedly paid the old war tax of $1 per barrel, while all other manufactures, products, professions, and occupations embraced in the original revenue system as organized between the years 1861-1864, have not paid a single dollar into the Federal Treasury since the termination of the civil war, and do not now contribute one penny toward the Federal revenue.

"Is it unfair or unpatriotic to ask why one American industry, consuming almost exclusively those highly protected American products which are a source of wealth to the American farmer, should pay a double war tax amounting to 40 per cent of the market value of its product, while all other American industries remain untaxed? It will not be deemed to be presumptuous, we trust, if we ask what justification there was for imposing, or what good reason there was for continuing, a tax of $2 upon a barrel of beer costing $5, in the face of the fact that at a time (thirty-five years ago) when the market price of beer was $12, a Republican Administration and a Republican Congress asserted and maintained that a tax of $1 'was fully up to the revenue standard and should not be increased.'" (See report of the Special Revenue Commission for 1865-66, p. 27.)

"We maintain that common justice imperatively demands the immediate repeal of the additional war tax upon malt liquors. In the entire war-revenue act of 1898 there is not a single tax item, excepting our own, that is unjust or inequitable in itself; none, excepting the beer tax, that has caused, or is likely to cause, widespread industrial ruin; none, again with the same exception, that must be borne by a comparatively small number of citizens for the exclusive benefit of all those numerous and immensely wealthy industries which, while protected by wise tariff laws, contribute not a single dollar to the internal revenue, and, finally, none that must ultimately affect such large masses of the poorer people.

"The most striking evidence of the correctness of our contention as to the inequality and injustice of the present tax rate lies in the fact that in 1866, when the receipts from internal revenue reached the highest point, viz, $310,906,984, the three revenue items which have remained in force (at reduced rates as to spirits) since the civil war, only yielded $50,129,877, of which the sum of $5,115,140 was derived from malt liquors, then selling at $12 per barrel. The remainder, amounting to $260,777,107, came from sources of revenue, the greater portion of which are not mentioned in the act which imposed upon our product an additional war tax of $1."

FAILURES DURING 1899 AND 1900.

"We have shown," continued Mr. Brand, "that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, no less than 36 previously successful breweries have failed, gone out of business altogether, their failure directly attributable to the double war tax. These figures can be easily verified by the records of the department of internal revenue. In addition to the actual failures, very many of our best establishments have been forced to combine in order to avoid failure, and many more will be forced to follow in their footsteps unless we have immediate relief.

BREWERS NOT EXACTING.

"We are not exacting. On the contrary, the brewers are extremely patriotic, the fact of our bearing the original war tax of $1 per barrel, or 20 per cent of the market value of our product, for thirty-seven years without reduction, proves that. The further fact of our uncomplainingly accepting the double war tax of $2 per barrel, or 40 per cent of our product since 1898, to provide revenue to conduct our war with Spain, intensifies our claim of patriotism, but now that war is over, and we cry aloud for relief from a burden that is crushing our industry and sapping our very life.

FAITH IN CONGRESS.

"We have faith in Congress. We believe that the justice—simply the common justice—of our claims will not appeal to Congress in vain. We only ask for fair treatment and a chance to live in times of peace. In times of war or any other distress that our country may suffer from, the Government will always find us ready, if necessary, to make any sacrifice called upon."

STATEMENT FROM MR. BUSCH.

Mr. Adolphus Busch, the president of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, of St. Louis, Mo., has only recently arrived from Europe. Before leaving for home last night, Mr. Busch talked at length on the situation.

"I should have remained in Europe another month," said Mr. Busch, "had it not been for my interest in the repealing of the double war tax now being levied by the Government on our industry.

"Its enactment has proven a terrible hardship, and its continuance means general disaster to the brewing interests.

"The original tax of $1 a barrel was in itself a war tax, imposed in 1861, and continued without any reduction up to the declaration of hostilities with Spain, when it was increased to $2 per barrel, just double the original tax, which means precisely 40 per cent of the general market price of beer.

"When the original war tax of $1 a barrel was inaugurated, thirty-nine years ago, beer was being sold for $18 per barrel. To-day beer is being sold at an average of $5 per barrel, and we pay $2 per barrel to the Government.

"As a direct result of this excessively unfair burden of taxation, the production of beer decreased 1,000,000 barrels during the year 1899, a year of unprecedented and marvelous prosperity, and within the past seven months seventeen combinations have been made, consisting each of from three to twelve formerly prosperous breweries, forced to thus combine in order to save themselves from bankruptcy through this distressing and oppressive double war tax. More are likely to follow, or suspend business altogether, unless immediate relief is afforded.

"During the past year the production of beer has materially increased, but what good does it do the brewer? None! A few—very few—have had a trifling profit, but the majority have either realized no profit at all or else continued business at a distinct loss, hoping and praying for the repeal of this grinding double war tax.

"Take my own brewery, for instance. We brewed a million barrels of beer this year, an increase of 100,000 since 1899, but with what profits? Merely nominal. Why? Because we have to keep the quality of beer up to the standard established by us and pay the Government $2 per barrel on each barrel brewed. This leaves the balance, $3 per barrel, to pay for hops, malt, barley, brewing, horses, feed, wagons, brewers, help, drivers, deliveries, expressage, coal, ice, invested capital—in fact, everything—depreciation, losses, and wear and tear.

"There is no chance for the brewers unless this double tax is reduced to $1 per barrel. The present tax is a terrible burden, more than we can bear, and is crushing our business life out. We must have relief in order to exist. We are now paying to the Government $78,000,000 yearly, or about one-fourth of the entire revenue collected by the Government.

"The brewing industry is an American establishment, one of the greatest of all industries. Beer is the poor man's drink and a national beverage. It is by far the greatest of all temperance promoters. We give employment directly to over 900,000 men, and indirectly, through the farmers who grow the hops, malt, and cereals; the lumbermen, maltsters, coopers, blacksmiths, iron workers, builders, railroads, shipping, and general trades, to nearly 3,000,000 men.

"Our invested capital is $650,000,000. During the Senatorial investigation of last year 400 samples of American beer, ales, and porter were purchased in the open market, and under the analysis of the chemists of the Government, who analyzed these samples, only two samples of American beer, ales, and porter were found to contain preservatives or adulterants, as against the wholesale preservatives and adulterations found in imported beers, ales, and porter.

"American beers are the best in the world. Such an industry should be helped and not crushed as it is crushed.

"The brewers are patriotic. We are faithful citizens, willing to uphold the Government and to pay a tax of $1 per barrel, or about 20 per cent on the market price of our product, which would amount to about from $38,000,000 to $40,000,000 a year. No industry can stand more than that percentage of taxation and exist. We have tried it for three years and know. But now the war with Spain is over, and we who have stood this double tax so uncomplainingly and patriotically from out of our distresses pray and hope for relief. The Government is getting all the profits now, and has been for three years. It is but fair, just, and equitable that we have a fair earning on our product, of which we are now deprived.

"We are here to petition Congress and the Senate for relief, and hope for a successful consummation of our efforts."

Also the following from the able pen of Col. Louis Schade, the veteran editor of the Washington Sentinel, probably the oldest and most influential Democratic paper sent to Congress, who makes the following able argument against the war tax in the last issue of his paper:

Taxes collected beyond the needs of the Government are unnecessary, and unnecessary taxation is unjust. Brewers point to the fact that receipts for this year are $80,000,000 in excess of appropriations, and they were assured that when this condition was reached their industry would be relieved of its onerous burdens. Their case should receive first attention, because the old tax was in itself a war tax, and thus they are paying not merely a war tax, but a double war tax.

Brewers invite attention to the fact that of the $210,000,000 collected under the war-revenue bill, beer has paid $75,000,000, or more than one-third of the whole. If any further argument were needed to show that their industry has borne more than its share of the expense entailed by the Spanish war, it is found in the fact that the present beer tax represents two-fifths of the average selling price of a barrel of beer. Appeals for reduction in behalf of other articles affected by this bill are based on the ground that the tax is annoying and burdensome. Their appeals would be entitled to consideration did they show anything approaching this presentation of the brewers' case.

What a howl would be raised if a bottle of patent medicine retailing for a dollar were taxed 40 cents, or a telegram costing 25 cents was assessed 10 cents, and other things in the same proportion. A moment's comparison should be sufficient to show any unprejudiced person that the levy on beer is annoying, is burdensome, is costly, is unjust, and, what is more important still, is throttling the industry, hampering its growth, and killing one of the best revenue-producing articles on the Government's tax list.

How long can a business subsist under such an impost? That this tax has been a millstone around its neck is proven by the decrease of 1,000,000 barrels in the consumption of beer during the past year, in the large number of suspensions in the same time, in the passing of dividends by the larger concerns engaged in the trade, and in many other ways.

In the hope that the cessation of war would bring relief in a short time, brewers made no attempt to collect the tax, or any part of it, from their customers. This was notably the case with the Washington brewers.

A continuation of the measure will make a change in this respect necessary. In all other cases the people have had to pay the tax. The people will have to pay this, too, before long. By people is meant the working classes. Is not the workingman taxed to the limit now? Of all business men, brewers alone have voluntarily undertaken to assume these charges. They have done so upon the strength of promises made them. When those promises are unfulfilled it is not in human nature to expect that they will continue to do so.

The Spanish war is over. The prolongation of the war tax, not for the object for which it was levied, but to provide means to carry out a ship-subsidy bill or to build the Nicaragua Canal, is a violation of the good faith of the Government. If Congress in its wisdom shall decree the passage of these measures, the first of which will entail an estimated expenditure of $9,000,000 a year for thirty years and the second a gross cost of $150,000,000, spread over a period of years, brewers will not object.

They ask, however, that the war tax shall be wiped out, as the occasion which called it into existence has disappeared. And then, if money is required for the defense of our new possessions, to extend trade, or to build up a merchant marine, which are all matters foreign to the Spanish war, let it be provided in new legislation, let there be a rearrangement of our sources of revenue, placing the cost equitably on all. It is unfair that revenues raised for war purposes should be continued after the war has ceased and used to furnish means to carry out projects not contemplated when the extraordinary levy was made. It is not merely unfair, it is dishonest. Brewers ask only for justice. Are they entitled to it?

Also the following letters, among others, from residents of my Congressional district:

NEW YORK, December 6, 1900.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am very much interested in the bill now pending in Congress known as the war-tax bill, to the end that this tax be either abolished or else greatly reduced, I having paid in war taxes from December 1, 1899, to December 1, 1900, $350.50, which, in addition to my State license, makes a total tax of $1,600.

I find that if this tax continues upon me for the next year I will be driven out of my present business and will be forced to support my wife and family at whatever business I can get for a day's pay.

I hope and urge that you will exert all your energies and influence to the end that the present war taxes be abolished, or so reduced that men in my business will be able to make a living.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

FRED. SCHWIEFERT,
91 Avenue D, New York City, Manhattan.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Congressman Eleventh Congressional District, New York City.

NEW YORK, December 11, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I, the undersigned, as a constituent of the Congressional district represented by you, respectfully request you to kindly use all of your influence toward having the so-called beer war tax reduced.

The reason that I petition you in this matter is that as far as we, the citizens of the United States, are aware there is no war existing at the present time, and it seems rather unjust that the so-called war tax should be maintained.

Furthermore, the expense thrown upon the dealers is extremely heavy; in fact, practically deprives me of making a living under the existing circumstances.

Trusting that you will do all you possibly can to have this tax repealed, I remain, respectfully, yours,

CARL KIRSHMANN.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Member of United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

NEW YORK, December 11, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: The writer, having been a resident for over thirty years in this district, and doing business at No. 520 Sixth street, asks one favor from your honor, and that is that you use all your power to abolish the war tax on beer. By doing this you will bestow upon me one great favor, and in the future if I can at any time return such favor, why, I shall only be too glad to return same.

Hoping and trusting that you will do all in your power to abolish that war tax,

I remain, very truly,

PETER KAEMPF,
520 Sixth Street, New York City.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER.

NEW YORK, December 11, 1900.

DEAR SIR: Am one of your constituents. I ask you to use your endeavors to have the tax on beer reduced as low as possible. The war is over, and I think the present rate is exorbitant. Thanking you for any trouble you may take in the matter, I remain,

Respectfully, yours,

JOE FÜGER.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER.

NEW YORK, December 12, 1900.

DEAR SIR: I write you to enlist your distinguished efforts in a cause which is of vital interest to myself and to the rest of your constituents, and that is the removal of the war tax on beer. I am a saloon keeper, and had at the time this tax was levied a small business, which in a very modest way supplied the needs of myself and family. The levy of this tax has now deprived me of the little I had, and with all others in my position are being slowly but surely being driven to the wall.

Beer as a commodity has been made the target for unjust taxation, both Federal and State, until now the retailer finds it taxed 100 per cent. The predominant party has always found a safe avenue for revenue by adding another burden to the back of the liquor dealer, and this last tax is to the small dealer the straw which will break his back.

A continuance of this tax either drives the honest man from business or forces him to those methods which has so besmirched the name of a legitimate business.

You are asked in the name of tax oppressed and for the sake of public morals to remove a burden so unjust, and which leaves a self-respecting man to chose between financial or moral ruin.

Your earnest effort and your vote are confidently asked for this purpose.

Respectfully, yours,

FRITZ BOHNER,
27 First Avenue, New York.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

---

324 EAST ELEVENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY,
December 15, 1900.

MY DEAR SIR: I wish to inform you that nearly all of the saloonkeepers, including myself, of your district desire you to put before House this bill to drop the war tax on liquors, as the war is over and we do not wish to pay any more war tax.

When you recall that there are many poor people in your district, I am sure that you will endeavor to furnish your valuable services. I am a leading Italian citizen in your district, and they have requested me to ask you to put this bill though.

Wishing you success in passing same, and thanking you for your past favor, with highest respects, I am,

Yours, truly,

FRANK SETARO.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. GAINES]. We have, I think, ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are ten minutes remaining on that side.

[Mr. GAINES addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, in the beginning of the year 1898 the nation found itself entering upon a foreign war. It was not a war of defense, nor yet a war of conquest, but a war voluntarily assumed in the cause of humanity. Centuries of Spanish misrule in Cuba had aroused the indignation of the American people. Outrages continued and that promised to be continued against the unhappy inhabitants of that neighboring isle had at last exhausted all patience and resulted in a demand for their immediate cessation.

The tragic fate of our splendid battle ship, the Maine, and her brave crew, sunken while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Habana, had lighted such a flame of resentment in the popular heart that diplomacy ceased to have any office and was followed by a hot and hasty call to arms. War was declared, armies were organized, battle ships and cruisers assembled in answer to the people's call. It was essentially and characteristically a people's war, in which party lines were obliterated, sectional strife buried, and common cause made against a common foe.

Under these circumstances there devolved upon the representatives of the people the duty of providing the sinews of war; for war is costly, not only of life and blood but of treasure, and the equipment of a peace establishment is wholly unfitted to deal with the problems that war presents. It was not because of any weakness in our then existing revenue system that legislation was demanded in order to meet war expenditures. The Federal Treasury was then, owing to Republican legislation and Republican administration, in a healthy condition. It was fully equipped to meet all the demands, current and future, that might be made upon it under normal conditions.

During the preceding Administration, which was Democratic, the country had experienced an era of extraordinary commercial and industrial depression. That state of things the Democratic party ascribed to the refusal upon the part of Congress to depreciate our currency and to engage in the wild attempt to create values by law. The Republican party, on the other hand, ascribed it to the operation of a tariff system that provided neither revenues for the Treasury nor protection for our capital and our labor.

Pursuant to their theory, immediately upon their accession to power they wrote upon the statute book a new tariff law, drawn along Republican lines, looking toward the protection of the people's Treasury and the protection of the people's industries. That law was enacted in 1897 and was known by the name of its now lamented author, as the Dingley law.

For many months prior to its enactment, in anticipation thereof and for the purpose of escaping the duties that would be imposed thereby, large importations were made. The effect of these importations was to postpone the effective operation of the law until these importations should have been exhausted.

In the month of January, 1898, a surplus came into view. In February there was an actual surplus of $2,000,000. In March there were large war expenditures, but, deducting these, there was a surplus for that month almost equal to that of the preceding month, so that in the absence of war, upon the basis of a peace establishment, no one doubted that from that time forward the Treasury would be able to meet all legitimate demands that could be made upon it; and so results have proved.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Dingley law was made for peace and not for war; hence the necessity arose for the passage of new revenue legislation to meet the emergency. It is proper to say just here, in passing, that all things then combined to lighten the anticipated burdens of such legislation. Under the stimulus of a wise protective tariff industry had revived, capital had forsaken its hiding places, manufactures flourished, wages were increased, our foreign trade was assuming tremendous proportions, and we had entered upon a career of unbounded prosperity.

I do not mean to say, Mr. Chairman, that these fortunate circumstances were at all essential to reconcile the people to accept the burdens of war taxation. They would have been willingly assumed under any circumstances by a patriotic people who have always held their national honor as cheaply bought at any expense, however great, whether of money or of blood.

Pursuant to the duty that devolved upon it, Congress passed a war-revenue law, the law of June 13, 1898, in the modification of which we are now engaged.

That law was regarded by common consent as an emergency law. It was not the intention upon the part of anyone that it should remain permanently upon the statute books. But its operation was not limited as to time. That was to depend upon the life of the emergency, and it was not anticipated that it would necessarily cease to operate upon the termination of hostilities. It was intended to cover the expenses of the war and its consequences, so that the ordinary revenues might be left free to meet the ordinary demands.

In reporting that law to the House the then chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means used this language:

> While all of these additional taxes are war taxes, which would be naturally repealed or modified when the necessities of war and the payment of war expenses have ceased, yet it is impossible now to place a limit on them, not only for the reason that no one can intelligently forecast the length of the war, but also for the reason that war always brings a train of extraordinary expenditures which do not terminate with the close of actual hostilities.

This law thus reported provided for the raising of money in the only two ways that it could be raised—by taxation and by borrowing—the one, if need be, to supplement the other. By its terms it imposed duties upon articles of voluntary consumption, or on articles or objects that would make such taxation fall mainly upon persons able to contribute to the national defense. It was expected that it would realize from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 a year. It was modeled in part upon the internal-revenue legislation of the civil war, and was capable of administration by the existing machinery of the revenue department. That law has vindicated the wisdom and the foresight of its authors. I have here in my hand a statement showing the receipts from the war-revenue act from June 13, 1898, to June 30, 1900, furnished by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is as follows:

	Receipts from June 13 to July 1, 1898.	Receipts during the fiscal year 1899.	Receipts during the fiscal year 1900.	Total.
Schedule A	$724,073.94	$38,618,081.20	$36,416,082.11	$75,758,237.25
Schedule B	70,343.66	5,219,737.46	4,548,283.19	9,838,364.31

Special taxes	46,973.00	5,370,941.80	4,844,743.97	10,262,658.77
Tobacco	367,639.64	14,226,994.63	16,736,622.13	31,331,256.40
Snuff	18,361.03	875,898.72	895,045.07	1,789,304.82
Cigars	110,268.16	2,717,851.34	3,189,764.14	6,017,883.64
Cigarettes	39,090.29	1,402,828.18	1,320,394.72	2,762,313.19
Legacies		1,235,435.25	2,884,491.55	4,119,926.80
Excise tax		643,446.41	1,079,405.14	1,722,851.55
Mixed flour		7,840.62	7,439.46	15,280.08
Additional taxes on tobacco and beer	9,945.13	947,424.37	18,734.82	976,104.32
Total	3,410,442.51	102,359,618.36	105,374,227.95	211,144,288.82

It will be observed that from the time of its passage until June 30, 1900, it has raised the sum of over $211,000,000. But, while I give credit to the law for its efficiency, I ought to say in passing that never during all its lifetime, unless possibly within the last few months, has it produced sufficient revenue to meet all war expenses. Even with this law upon the statute books it has been necessary from time to time to ask relief from the revenues collected under the provisions of the Dingley law.

But the time has now arrived when the emergency to meet which this law was enacted has ceased in part, though not altogether, to exist, and when it becomes proper, therefore, that there should be some modification of its terms. It can not now be repealed as a whole, because the train of extraordinary expenditures which do not terminate with the close of actual hostilities still exists and must be provided for. Two questions present themselves for answer. First, how much revenue can be spared; and, second, what subjects can be exempted in whole or in part from taxation.

Now it will be conceded by every fair-minded man that the determination of these questions furnishes a nice and a difficult task. It will be conceded also, I think, that no committee of this House is clothed with such an unerring judgment as to be able to report a bill that would satisfy everybody. The interests involved are varied and multiplied. In the hearings that were had before the Ways and Means Committee each particular interest insisted that it was the most grievously and most unjustly burdened and was entitled to the first relief.

It goes without saying, therefore, that your committee could not satisfy all. All that your committee can claim, and all that it does claim, is that it has given to this subject serious and conscientious consideration, has endeavored to do justice to all as it was given to it to see justice, and that it believes now, after all the discussion that has been had, that the bill reported is the best bill that could have been reported, and that it ought to be adopted by this House.

Now, as to the first question, How much revenue can we spare? As to this, up to a certain point, we all agree. We all agree that we can not repeal the law. We all agree that we can not remove all the taxes. At that point, however, we part company. The minority of the Ways and Means Committee say reduce taxation $70,000,000. Some other party says $60,000,000. Another party says $50,000,000. Your committee has reported in favor of $40,000,000, although their first judgment was that taxation ought not to be reduced to exceed $30,000,000.

All these various figures are determined from the standpoint, not of public, but of personal interest. Each man wants to save his own particular industry. One man says, "Do not remove the taxes or stamp duties from checks. They do nobody any harm. They are easily collected, and they result in a large revenue." Another man says, "Take them off. They are exceedingly vexatious. They result in multiplied losses, great and small. Let them be removed." One man says, "Remove the tax from bank capital and surplus. It is an unjust discrimination." Another says, "Let it remain. The banks are not suffering. They have not cut their dividends. They are able to and ought to be made to pay."

One man says, Take the duty off from transactions on the stock exchange; it is unjust to segregate them and treat them unlike other similar transactions." His neighbor says: "Why, it would not be safe to go to the country with a bill exempting from taxation 'puts' and 'calls' and imaginary sales and the gambling in Wall street and elsewhere." So it goes, and so arises the differences of opinion as to how much there ought to be of tax reduction.

Now, in this diversity of opinion, in this confusion worse confounded of reasoning, is there no arbiter to whom we can go and upon whose judgment we can rely for a safe decision? I answer yes; there is. Under our system the financial administration of the Government is intrusted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the law imposes upon him the duty of furnishing information to Congress. Under our system the Constitution provides that the President "shall from time to time give to Congress information as to the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

I am not arguing that the opinion of either the President or of the Secretary of the Treasury is not subject to review by Congress, or that they ought not in proper cases to be set aside. I am simply arguing that in the multiplicity and diversity of opinions upon a question of finance in this House of 357 members, none of whom is charged with special financial responsibility, knowledge, or experience, it would be the part of wisdom to hearken to the views of these public officers, upon whom responsibility does rest and who are eminently fitted by their experience and environment to arrive at a right judgment.

The Secretary of the Treasury is a financier of lifelong experience. Amongst financiers he is regarded as an authority. In character, in good judgment, in the successful administration of his Department, he will be rated as the peer of any of his great predecessors. The wisdom and patriotism of the President of the United States, his lengthy experience in public life, the responsibility of his great office—all these combine to render his conclusions worthy of commanding respect. Now, what do these gentlemen say officially as to the reduction of taxation?

The Secretary of the Treasury, in the first place, points out the uncertainty, from time to time, of receipts and disbursements. He says:

> The Treasurer calls attention to the marked irregularity in the receipts and expenditures, pointing out that while in July, 1899, there was a deficiency of $8,506,832.28, in June, 1900, a surplus of $17,895,152.86 was realized. The greatest difference between income and outgo on any one day was $4,047,396.05 in favor of the Treasury. The corresponding maximum deficiency was $2,318,621.42. In the face of such wide fluctuations the necessity for ample available reserves is apparent.

Then, having in mind these uncertainties and the responsibility of his position, he makes a recommendation with respect to the reduction of war revenues. He says:

> From the estimates of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1902 there promises to be an excess of receipts to the amount of $26,000,000. It is hardly necessary to point out that estimates are at best approximate. Exigencies in the public service which can not be anticipated may require expenditures not contemplated. Congressional appropriations, extraordinary in character, or failures to realize fully estimated revenues, are also influences which may operate seriously to derange all advance calculations. A conservative margin should, therefore, be reserved in forecasting definite results based on hypothetical calculations.
> An annual excess in receipts over expenditures is the best indorsement of the national credit, while a deficit is a depressing factor in public finance. It has been our wise policy in the past to reduce the public debt in time of peace, and to this good policy may be attributed, to a high degree, the low rates of interest, hitherto unprecedented, which now attach to our Government debt obligations. It is true that for a period of six years, from 1894 to 1899, inclusive, annual deficits appeared; but it may be hoped that this was a temporary interruption to a history of twenty-eight years, when each year showed annual expenditures less than annual revenues.
> The operation of the act of February 25, 1862, providing for a sinking fund, contemplates the payment or purchase and cancellation of substantially $50,000,000 annually of our interest-bearing debt obligations. Owing to the unfavorable conditions in the Treasury during the six years just referred to, the sinking fund was entirely neglected.
> In the absence of any expression to the contrary, it may be safely assumed that it is the desire of Congress to observe faithfully the general requirements of the sinking-fund act, and to provide revenue sufficient to meet the charges thus imposed upon the Government. The present and prospective easy condition of the Treasury justifies the belief that the sinking-fund requirement can be met, both for the current fiscal year and for the next fiscal year, and still permit a moderate reduction in taxes imposed by the war-revenue act. A reduction to the amount of $30,000,000 is therefore recommended to the consideration of the present Congress.

And the President of the United States, in his message to Congress, says:

> I recommend that the Congress at its present session reduce the internal-revenue taxes imposed to meet the expenses of the war with Spain in the sum of $30,000,000. This reduction should be secured by the remission of those taxes which experience has shown to be the most burdensome to the industries of the people.

It appears, therefore, that the Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States, both speaking under official responsibility and after a thorough examination of the subject, have determined that tax reduction ought to be had to the amount of $30,000,000 only.

But gentlemen say, "The Secretary has given us the figures for 1900, 1901, and 1902, and we are unable to see how he arrives at a surplus of only $26,000,000 in 1902;" and therefore he must be wrong. Well, if his figures are wrong, it must be either because for some undisclosed purpose of his own he is seeking to deceive the Congress or because he is incompetent to arrive at a correct conclusion.

I assume that no man on this floor will assert the truth of either of these propositions. Every presumption is in favor of the honesty of the Secretary, of his competency, and of the correctness of his figures. It is because gentlemen make wrong assumptions and pursue wrong methods that they and the Secretary do not agree. For example, one gentleman takes the surplus of 1900, $80,000,000, and that of 1901, $80,000,000; he then figures out a surplus of $126,000,000 for 1902; adds these all together and makes a surplus for 1902 of $286,000,000.

But the fallacy of his position lies in the fact that surpluses are not carried from year to year, but disposed of as they arise. To do otherwise would be poor financiering, and not in accordance with Republican policy. What the net balance in the Treasury may be at any time is not gauged by the surplus. For example, the net balance in the Treasury on the 5th day of March, 1897, when the Republican party became responsible for the administration of the Government, was $212,000,000, less gold reserve, $100,000,000, leaving the net cash in the Treasury $112,000,000. On yesterday, according to the daily report issued by the Department, the net cash in the Treasury was $138,000,000, or only $26,000,000 more than on March 5, 1897, notwithstanding the accruing in the meantime of several surpluses.

It would be easy to trace the disposition of the surplus had we the books of the Treasury and the requisite time. A glance at the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury will furnish some suggestions in this direction. For instance, since the passage of the currency law of last March $50,000,000 has been transferred to the reserve fund to make the $150,000,000 prescribed by the law. And I have here a statement, furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, which shows how much he has spent in the purchase and redemption of the interest-bearing debt, including redemption of bonds issued to the Pacific railroads, since March 4, 1897.

I will not stop to go into the figures. Suffice it to say that of the 4 per cent loan of 1907, the 5 per cent loan of 1904, the funded loan of 1891, and the Pacific Railroad bonds redeemed we have an expenditure amounting to $86,716,562. And when you add to that the premiums paid in the exchange of bonds under the act of March 14, 1900, thus reducing the principal of the outstanding bonded indebtedness $36,000,000 and more, you have a total expended by the Secretary since the 4th day of March, 1897, of $122,826,083. I insert here the statement in detail:

Statement showing the purchases and redemptions of the interest-bearing debt, including redemptions of bonds issued to Pacific railroads, since March 4, 1897.

Four per cent loan of 1907, purchased	$14,310,350
Five per cent loan of 1904, purchased	4,990,300
Funded loan of 1891, redeemed	23,410,400
	42,711,050
Pacific railroad bonds, redeemed	44,008,512
Total	86,719,562
Premiums paid in the exchange of bonds under the act of March 14, 1900, thus reducing the principal of the outstanding bonded indebtedness	36,106,521
Total	122,826,083

And I insert also another statement showing the saving to the Government in refunding to November 30, 1900, inclusive.

Issue.	Amount refunded.	Saving in interest.	Premium paid.	Net saving.
Threes of 1908	$82,091,700	$6,767,545	$4,621,027	$2,146,518
Fours of 1907	219,779,950	31,456,999	25,355,089	6,101,841
Fives of 1904	63,072,100	6,988,212	6,130,405	857,807
Total	364,943,750	45,212,687	36,106,521	9,106,166

In brief, then, the surpluses of preceding years must be eliminated from our calculation of the Treasury resources of 1902. Some of such surpluses may be carried into that year, but they may not be. This uncertainty eliminates them, therefore, necessarily, as a basis of and a factor in permanent legislation.

Again, take the basis on which the minority of the committee dispute the Secretary's conclusions. They say that the Secretary calculates upon an addition to the revenues of 1902 to the extent of $25,000,000, and that this must be taken into account. But this $25,000,000 is the customary advance expected to be realized year by year from the growth of the country. The same causes that produce this add to the expenditures, and so the one, as a matter of experience, offsets the other, and both must be eliminated from calculation.

But they say "The surplus of 1901 amounts to $80,000,000; the expenditures of 1902 will be the same as the expenditures of 1901, and therefore the surplus of $80,000,000 ought to be added to the Secretary's surplus of $26,000,000, making a surplus of $106,000,000." But there are two apparent fallacies in that argument. In the first place, it is apparent that the expenditures for 1902 will be largely in excess of those of 1901. But in the next place, if the surplus is $80,000,000, then the Secretary is wrong, and you can not add the $80,000,000 to his $26,000,000. The surplus will be only $80,000,000, and deducting from that $40,000,000 of taxes that we now take off, you will have remaining a surplus of only $40,000,000. As this is exclusive of the sinking fund, the $50,000,000 which under the law is due to it, you have, instead of a surplus of $40,000,000, a deficit of $10,000,000.

Now, this assault is made upon the Secretary's figures because they are based upon an assumption that Congress will appropriate the amount of the estimates; and it is said that Congress never does so appropriate. Conceding that to be true for the sake of argument, how much will Congress appropriate? Can anyone name the figures? Is not the final result an uncertainty and a piece of guesswork? And is it not better to have a surplus than a deficit—to realize money from taxation rather than from bonds?

But it by no means follows that if Congress fails to appropriate the amount of the estimates in the first instance it may not finally appropriate their amount, or even more, when deficiency appropriations are made. Regular and deficiency appropriations must be added together to get true results.

Nor does it follow that Congress will invariably appropriate less than the estimates. I have here a statement of estimates, appropriations, and expenditures, including postal service, for the fiscal years 1894 to 1902, inclusive, which I will publish with my remarks. This statement shows that in five out of eight years Congress appropriated more than was called for by the estimates.

But, Mr. Chairman, have gentlemen included in their estimates the extraordinary expenses which the Government must meet during 1902? Have they gauged the amount of a river and harbor bill; and if so, how much have they allowed for it? Have they included the expenses of armor plate, the resumption of work in the naval establishments of the country, the completion of the vessels already authorized, and the cost of others that are to be provided for? If so, how much do they allow for these items?

Have they allowed anything for the subsidy, so called, to our merchant marine, in case we pass the shipping bill? Has the possibility of a Pacific cable ever crossed their vision? Has the possibility of the Nicaragua Canal ever entered their minds as a factor of expense? Do they imagine that the year 1902 will pass into history without any provision for public buildings, so long neglected to be provided for by Congress? Have they taken into consideration, in these days of the happening of the unexpected, the various contingencies that may arise, not only from business changes at home, but from possible complications abroad?

Suppose, for example, that the contention of gentlemen on the other side of the House should prevail, and the Supreme Court of the United States should decide that the Constitution follows the flag—how much of unlawful duties have been collected in the United States and in the ports of Porto Rico? How much of illegitimate and unlawful duties have been collected in the ports of the Philippines from exports to them, and in the ports of the United States from imports from these islands? Will not all the unlawful duties have to be refunded from the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. And the Hawaiian Islands as well.

Mr. DALZELL. And the Hawaiian Islands as well. What will the amount be? Where shall the money come from to answer these demands?

But, Mr. Chairman, aside from all that it is the policy—the Republican policy—to reduce the national debt and to maintain a strong and powerful Treasury. The latter is much more to us in the interests of peace than fleets and armies.

That nation commands most respect in the councils of the nations that has the most available monetary strength to meet any contingencies that may arise. The Army, the Navy, the Treasury—these are the arms of our defense, but the most potent of them all is the Treasury. Better $100,000,000 in the vaults of the Treasury, at a cost of $2,000,000 annually, than two regiments of soldiers, which will cost as much.

Have gentlemen taken into consideration as a possible cause of complications the fact that we have three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks, sixty-odd millions of Treasury notes, and nearly six hundred millions of silver, all to be maintained at a parity, with a gold reserve of only $150,000,000?

I conclude, therefore, Mr. Chairman, and I do not mean to consume any more time on this proposition—I conclude that for the reasons stated, upon the figures furnished, from any and every point of view, the conclusion of the Secretary of the Treasury is unassailable, and that it would have been a wise policy on the part of the Committee on Ways and Means to have reported the bill reducing war taxation only to the extent of $30,000,000.

But we have exceeded that sum. We have proposed a reduction in this bill of $40,000,000. And why? We did it as a concession to members of this body. We did it as a concession to our colleagues, who demanded further reductions in the interests of a certain particular industry in their various districts, and as it was a concession on our part I wish to say that in justice and fairness concessions are now due to us.

Let us go no further in reductions. Let us stop right here. Let us adopt the bill as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means and not put in peril the future of the Treasury of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not stop to dwell at any length in answer to the second question, What subjects may we exempt, in whole or in part, from taxation under the operations of this law?

On that question I could not if I would add anything to the clear and exhaustive treatment that the subject has already received from the honored chairman of our committee [Mr. PAYNE]. We have sought to remove the most vexatious taxes and those that imposed most heavily upon the individual citizen. We have sought to remove the taxes that most often remind him that he is a taxpayer. There is necessarily some difference of opinion amongst the members of this House as to certain particular items. I have already mentioned some—bank checks, bank capital, exchange sales—but I apprehend that they are not at all material and that they will not in the end influence a single vote upon the passage of this bill.

There is one subject, however, about which there seems to be some considerable feeling and views of an extreme character, and that is the subject of the reduction of the tax on beer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when this bill was originally framed by the Committee on Ways and Means, as they understood that they were confined to a reduction of $30,000,000, no exemption was provided for upon beer. They thought that that was a popular tax, a tax approved by the American people, a tax upon an industry that could well bear it, and therefore it was allowed to remain; but, as I said only a moment ago, the committee were induced to make concessions, and at the instance of our colleagues in this House we added to the tax reduction in the interest of the brewers $10,000,000.

In my judgment that tax ought not to be reduced another dollar. In my judgment its reduction by a single dollar will render this bill unsatisfactory to and unpopular with the great masses of the American people. Furthermore, I have never yet heard a single good and sufficient reason given why the tax on beer should be further reduced.

What are the reasons? First, they say it is a double war tax. Well, it is nothing of the kind. They say because during the civil war a tax of $1 a barrel was imposed on beer, therefore the tax imposed by the act of 1898 is a double war tax. But the tax imposed during the civil war has remained for thirty-five years and has become a peace tax by the unanimous judgment and approval of the people of the United States.

Is there a man living who assumes for a moment the possibility of our taking all the tax off beer? Why, beer is a legitimate subject of taxation in every country in the world where there is any beer, and the man does not live and the child is not yet born who will see this tax entirely removed by the Congress of the United States. So there is nothing in that reason.

Then, in the second place, they say that the tax has decreased production. I deny it. I submit from the books of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the following:

Statement showing number of barrels of beer produced, number of barrels exported tax free, and number of barrels upon which tax was paid during each of the ten fiscal years beginning July 1, 1889, and ending June 30, 1900.

Year.	Produced.	Exported tax free.	Tax paid.
	Barrels.	Barrels.	Barrels.
1890	27,561,944	.....	27,561,944
1891	30,497,200	19,017	30,478,193
1892	31,856,626	38,790	31,817,836
1893	34,591,179	36,862	34,554,317
1894	33,362,373	27,590	33,334,783
1895	33,589,784	28,373	33,561,411
1896	35,859,250	33,152	35,826,098
1897	34,462,822	39,728	34,423,094
1898	37,529,339	36,033	37,493,306
1899	36,697,634	116,520	36,581,114
1900	39,486,715	155,605	39,331,110

It is apparent from these figures that beer production has had its ups and downs, year in and year out, without regard to tax. It is further apparent that the production for 1900 was the largest in its history, showing an increase over the preceding year of 2,750,000 barrels. When you tell me that the brewers are operating at a loss and yet have increased their production so enormously, you make a draft on my credulity that must go to protest, for I certainly shall not honor it.

So, there is nothing in the second reason assigned.

Then, again, they say the beer tax is too high. Why, it is not to be compared with the tax on whisky. It is not to be compared with the tax on wines. The tax on whisky is $34.10 per barrel. The tax on light wines amounts to $2.48 a barrel, while the tax on beer under this bill is only $1.60 a barrel. And so there is nothing in that reason. Whisky and wines and beers all belong in the same class of luxuries. Again, the brewers say they pay all the tax. No; they do not say that now. They did say that at the outstart, but it did not stand the test of cross-examination; and if I had the time I would read to you the testimony of the brewers themselves, taken before the Ways and Means Committee, which shows that the tax is distributed amongst the brewers, the dealers, and the consumers. And so there is nothing in that reason.

They say that this is a heavy tax upon the small brewers. But no small brewer has appeared before the Ways and Means Committee: no consumer of beer has been heard by that committee, either by delegation, in person, or by letter.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. DALZELL. I do.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it not true that the gentlemen who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in behalf of the brewing industry practically represented 95 per cent of all the brewers in the country? And is it not true that among that 95 per cent are included nearly every small brewery in the country?

Mr. DALZELL. I have no doubt that all the small breweries that have been absorbed by the great breweries were represented upon that delegation; but the small brewers outside have made no complaint, and when these gentlemen attribute to this tax the absorption of these small breweries by large breweries my answer is that their absorption is only in response to a universal law—the law of industrial evolution, the law that applies to modern enterprises and centers in great combinations the capital necessary to carry on great modern enterprises.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit me again to interrupt him?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my friend from Pennsylvania kindly cite a single instance in which a small brewery has been absorbed by a large one?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know anything about it except what those gentlemen said to us. Gentlemen who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee declared that the effect of this tax was to drive the small breweries into the grasp of the great breweries, and if the gentleman will read that testimony he will find that my declaration is exactly correct.

Now, I have not any more time; I have only a moment more left, and I must abandon this subject.

I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that in our patriotic endeavor to lessen the burdens of taxation upon our citizens the gentlemen upon the other side have announced that they will not oppose the passage of this bill. I am sorry that they can only give it half-hearted approval. In a general way dissenting from its provisions, they have offered no suggestions by way of its amendment. Asserting that there are interests unrelieved that ought to be relieved, they have failed to name a single interest.

If we may judge from their views as printed, they would take $30,000,000—the difference between forty millions and seventy millions—off beer and tobacco. I am unwilling to believe that. I am loath to believe that there are not gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber who will join hands with us against any further reduction under this bill. They rail at the protective tariff, and they renew the well-worn but derided cry of trusts; and yet they can not be oblivious to the fact that it is due to the great protective system that we have at last become the masters of the markets of the world. [Applause.]

I do not believe that our friends upon the other side would willingly cripple a Republican Administration by reducing taxation to such an extent as to compel the issue of bonds in time of peace or the reimposition of taxes once removed. That ought not to be the policy of either party. We all agree, Republicans and Democrats alike, that provision ought to be made for governmental revenues adequate for governmental needs; and so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, it believes in a gradual and progressive reduction of the national debt so as to escape large interest payments. It believes in the maintenance at all times of our national honor, the honor of our money, the honor of our flag, and will so adjust taxation from time to time as to impose the least possible burden upon the individual citizen, while it will at the same time so guard and protect the Federal Treasury that our splendid national credit shall continue to be, as it is, the wonder and admiration of the world. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 14, 1900.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HOPKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Friday, December 21, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, on Thursday, January 3, 1901.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the present Congress a plan and estimate for the improvement of Burlington Bay, Two Harbors, in the State of Minnesota, based upon the examination and survey heretofore made of said bay.

WAR REVENUE—BEER.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour having arrived to close general debate, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That there shall be paid, in lieu of the tax of $1 now imposed by law, a tax of $2 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors, brewed or manufactured and sold, or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons; and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law. And section 3339 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended accordingly: Provided, That a discount of 20 per cent shall be allowed upon all sales by collectors to brewers of the stamps provided for the payment of said tax: Provided further, That the additional tax imposed in this section on all fermented liquors stored in warehouse to which a stamp had been affixed shall be assessed and collected in the manner now provided by law for the collection of taxes not paid by stamps."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$2" in line 8, page 1, after the words "a tax of," and insert the following, "$1.60;" also strike out in line 5, page 2, "Provided, That a discount of," and the lines following down to and including "said tax" in line 8; also strike out "further" in line 8.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not change the rate from the bill, but makes a flat tax of $1.60 a barrel instead of $2 with the 2 per cent discount.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman state that again? I did not quite hear the effect of the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. It strikes out $2 and inserts in lieu of it $1.60.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do you strike out lines 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12? Do you strike out the second proviso?

Mr. PAYNE. We leave the second proviso in, but we strike out the first proviso, "Provided, That a discount," etc.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, that is all.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I wish to say upon this point at this time; but I wish that we might have some agreement to limit debate upon this section, and I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section be limited to one hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, we can not agree to that now. Let us debate it for a few minutes, and then we may agree to it later; but we can not agree to it now.

Mr. PAYNE. Objection is made, and I will take the floor afterwards and move to limit debate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to the amendment suggested by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, by inserting $1.20 in place of $1.60.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "one dollar and sixty" and insert "one dollar and twenty," so as to read "$1.20."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 8, page 1, after the word "of," the following: "Two dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "$1.50," and in line 5, page 2, strike out, after the word "accordingly," the words "Provided, That a discount of 20 per cent shall be allowed upon all sales by collectors to brewers of the stamps provided for the payment of said tax."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to raise a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. PAYNE. This is an amendment in the third degree. It is not a substitute, but it is piling up a third amendment. It will be in order after the votes are taken on the other amendments.

Mr. SULZER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. This is simply a third amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to offer it as a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. It is an amendment, and it is not a substitute. It is an amendment to the section and not a substitute for the section. After the vote is taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada this amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this can not be made a substitute by simply calling it a substitute. It is simply a third amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the amendment proposed by myself reducing the tax on beer to $1.20 per barrel, I have this to say:

A tax of $1 a barrel was imposed on beer during the civil war. That tax was never taken off. Under it beer pays to the Government of the United States $40,000,000, outside of the tax added for the prosecution of the Spanish war. When the Spanish war was inaugurated the framers of the Dingley war-revenue bill concluded to put upon this article of consumption a double war tax.

They made the tax $2 a barrel, but gave a rebate of 7½ per cent, which really made the total tax $1.85 per barrel. Under this war tax $33,000,000 more was raised during the last fiscal year, making a total annual tax of $73,000,000 imposed on beer—a tax of $73,000,000 out of the internal-revenue taxes aggregating $295,000,000.

In other words, one-third of the war tax and one-fourth of the general internal-revenue taxes was imposed upon beer.

The Payne bill, now under consideration, proposes to make the rebate 20 per cent instead of 7½ per cent, which would make $1.60 per barrel.

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. PAYNE] now seeks to amend that section simply by changing its phraseology without changing its effect. The rebate is done away with by his amendment and a direct tax of $1.60 per barrel is imposed by it. Of this tax $1 was the tax existing before the war-revenue bill was framed, and 60 cents a barrel on 40,000,000 barrels—the annual product—makes $24,000,000 to be imposed upon this particular article of consumption out of a total of $65,000,000 carried by the Payne war-revenue bill.

Now, my amendment makes the rate per barrel $1.20, of which 20 cents is a war tax. Twenty cents a barrel on 40,000,000 barrels makes $8,000,000 of the entire revenue intended to be carried by the Payne war-revenue bill, namely, $65,000,000, and nearly one fourth of the entire revenue which the minority insists is sufficient, namely, $35,000,000.

Now, I wish to say to the minority members that if we conclude to reduce the war-revenue taxes to $35,000,000 and yet permit the large tax upon beer and tobacco provided by the Payne bill—aggregating $40,000,000—to stand, it logically follows that we must exempt every other item of taxation contained in the Dingley war-revenue bill from war taxation.

It means that we will relieve the accumulated wealth of the country, which for the first time in years has been placed under contribution by the revenue system of the country, absolutely from any burden. For instance, if you vote for war taxes upon beer and tobacco, aggregating $35,000,000 or more, it will be necessary, if that be the limit of your revenue, to strike out the item of $3,000,000 taxes imposed upon bonds, certificates of stock, etc., of corporations, of $9,000,000 upon the transfers of shares of stock in the stock exchanges, of $1,000,000 on the sales of merchandise in the mercantile exchanges.

You will have, also, to strike out the item of $75,000, the tax upon sleeping and parlor car companies. You will have to cut out the taxes on legacies, aggregating $2,300,000. You will have to cut out the excise taxes on refiners of petroleum and sugar, aggregating $1,079,405, a tax of one-quarter of 1 per cent upon the gross receipts of corporations which rank among the greatest combinations of the age. You will have to cut out the tax on bank capital of $3,000,000, and the tax on bankers, brokers, etc., aggregating nearly $1,000,000.

Now, these are all taxes practically upon the wealth of the country, levied in the Dingley war-revenue bill and continued in the Payne bill; but unless you bring the war tax on beer and tobacco down within reasonable limits it will be unnecessary for you to tax these forms of wealth, and then you will practically be voting against your convictions. You believe that the consumption of the country is seriously taxed now and that wealth should be taxed.

Your course, therefore, should be to retain the taxes in the Dingley and Payne bills which are imposed upon wealth and to relieve the taxes which are imposed upon consumption. The tax upon tobacco and beer belong to this class. Such taxes are in the nature of per capita taxes, for they reach out to pretty nearly ever individual in the country and their imposition is not at all proportioned to the wealth of the individual or to his ability to sustain the burthens of government.

I therefore contend that the war revenue derived from beer should be reduced to $8,000,000 and that the total war revenue derived from tobacco should be reduced to $5,000,000.

In my remarks of yesterday I neglected to incorporate the schedules upon which my argument was based, and I submit them now for the information of the House.

The first is a statement of surplus, and is as follows:

Statement of surplus.

1899–1900:
Receipts	$669,595,431.18
Expenditures	590,068,371.00
Surplus		$79,527,060.18
1900–1901:
Receipts	$687,773,253.92
Expenditures	607,773,253.92
Surplus		80,000,000.00
1901–1902:
Receipts	$716,633,042.00
Expenditures	690,374,804.24
Surplus		26,258,237.76
Present balance in the Treasury	$140,000,000.00
Add surplus from January 1, 1901, to June 30, 1901, 6 months	40,000,000.00
Add surplus for 1901–1902	26,258,237.76
Total estimated surplus under existing law, June 30, 1902	206,258,237.76
Deductions under Payne bill, 18 months, from January 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902, at the rate of $40,000,000 per annum	60,000,000.00
Total surplus June 30, 1902		146,258,237.76
Total estimated surplus under existing law on June 30, 1902, as above		206,258,237.76
Deductions under minority proposition, eighteen months, at the rate of $70,000,000 per annum		105,000,000.00
Total surplus June 30, 1902		101,258,237.76

The estimates of expenditures above stated cover the extraordinary estimates of the Departments for the year ending June 30, 1902, and if the appropriations for 1902 are cut down to the amount appropriated for 1901 the surplus in 1902 will be eighty-three millions greater than the above estimate.

The second is an estimate of receipts under the Dingley bill, the Payne bill, after deducting $40,000,000, and the revenue under a suggested distribution of war revenue, after deducting $70,000,000, an additional excise tax being imposed on manufacturers whose receipts exceed $500,000 annually, this tax being imposed on the same principle as the tax on refiners of sugar and petroleum by the Dingley bill:

Estimate of receipts of war-revenue bill.

Articles.	Dingley bill.	Payne bill, showing war revenue after deducting $40,000,000.	Suggested distribution of total war revenue after deducting $70,000,000.

*The item on express companies is eliminated in the Payne bill, leaving only the tax on freight of railroads and other common carriers except express companies.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order, as there are already two amendments pending.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Will the Chair recognize me in support of the amendment after the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] closes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I only have to say in regard to this amendment that it means a reduction of 65 cents a barrel upon the beer tax, which would make a reduction of $26,000,000 in the revenue, which, added to the other reductions in the bill, would make a total reduction of $56,000,000.

Now, I do not suppose that this amendment of the gentleman from Nevada will find favor even on the other side of the House, because I know there are gentlemen over there who wish to make reductions in other items in the bill—substantial reductions; and, of course, if we strike off this revenue of $56,000,000, no man would be wild enough to vote for a larger reduction in the whole revenue, because no man wants a deficiency. No man wants to go right straight ahead with a deficiency in sight. Nobody wants to make any amendment to this bill which will, without any qualification, produce a deficiency in the revenues of the next two or three years. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the reductions proposed by the Payne bill would amount to $56,000,000?

Mr. PAYNE. No, sir; I did not say any such thing. I said that the reduction in the bill before the House other than the beer tax is $30,000,000, and the gentleman proposes a reduction of $26,000,000 on the beer tax, which with the other reductions would make $56,000,000. I hope we shall have a vote on this proposition.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS, there were on a division (called for by Mr. SULZER)—ayes 60, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I now renew my amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the amendment proposed by Mr. PAYNE, strike out "$1.60" and insert in lieu thereof "$1.50."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I do not wish to occupy any time upon this question now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to be forced to take issue with some of my Democratic colleagues on the proposition involved in this bill. In winding up my long and brilliant Congressional career, I must say that the criticism I have to make against the Committee on Ways and Means is not that they do not take off enough of the war taxes, but they take off too much.

Mr. Chairman, I spent the first ten or twelve years of my Congressional life in efforts to prevent and curtail extravagant appropriations. In this I generally failed. Therefore, of late years I have given much attention to the question of how the funds for these large expenditures should be raised, that the burdens might fall lightest on those of our people least able to bear them, and after two years of experience under the operation of this war tax my judgment is that in the main it is not only more easily collected, but bears less oppressively on the great masses of the American people than any other tax imposed on them.

There are some annoyances and inconveniences that I would gladly see remedied in the operations of the war tax, but I do not believe it is oppressive on anybody not able to bear it. If I had my way, I would make telegraph and express companies pay the small tax imposed on their messages and receipts. It is said we do not need all of this revenue. That is true; and I would reduce the tariff on many of the necessaries of life and on many articles that are now controlled by trusts, instead of reducing this war tax. I remember distinctly that one of the accusations that we as Democrats used to bring against the Republican party was the fact that that party after the close of the civil war repealed most of the taxes such as are collected under the late act to raise revenue to support the war, and retained the taxes on the necessaries of life used and consumed by the great mass of the people.

I would not myself reduce by one cent the revenue now collected on beer. It is true I have read much in the public prints in the last few days about the ruinous oppression of this tax on the brewing industry. I admit they have sent up a wail calculated to soften the hardest of hearts; they have even informed us that the oppressions of this tax have forced many of them to combine. I fear they mistake the causes that have brought about these combinations. If they will look about them, they will find that many other interests and industries that are not the victims of the war tax have also combined. May they not be mistaken as to the real incentive for their combinations?

If I had no other information than that derived from their petitions and interviews, I might be more touched by them. But, Mr. Chairman, in my peregrinations over this country and my visits to the various cities I have found that in those portions of the cities where the most beautiful residences are found the finest and most striking and palatial ones are the homes of the brewers. My opinion is that there are more enormously rich men in this country who have been made so as a result of brewing than almost any other one business. I do not invoke any prejudice against them because they are rich, but I only make mention of this to show that they are not such objects of sympathy as the uninformed might be led to believe.

I want to say now to my Democratic brethren that the contention of the Democratic party has always been that the luxuries instead of the necessities of life should bear the burden of taxation, and I do not see how they are to reconcile their votes in favor of taking the tax off or reducing the tax on beer while it is retained on the necessaries of life. While I do not stand here to encourage extravagance, I would go on collecting this tax. There are many laudable and legitimate uses to which it might be applied, one of which is the building of the Nicaragua Canal.

I am as willing as anybody to reduce taxation, but I had hoped that much of the tax imposed by the war-revenue bill had come to stay. I believe, notwithstanding the great complaint of the brewers about the effect of the beer tax on their industry, that the statistics show there was more beer made and consumed within the last year than ever before. I have heard no complaint of their not making enough of it, even with a tax of $2 per barrel, and I am not prepared to say that a tax that would diminish the consumption would be a bad thing for the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, I differ with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] in that I am not closing a long career in legislative bodies. It is somewhat surprising, Mr. Chairman, to find the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] making such an attack upon a class of people who have undoubtedly amassed what property they now possess by their frugal and industrious habits. The brewers of this country have, by close attention to their business, by industry, and by following sound business principles, built up a great industry that furnishes employment for many thousand mechanics. I live in a district of a great city in which there are only two breweries; and yet the tax collected on beer in the old city of Brooklyn under the war-revenue bill amounts annually to $1,440,000, and this in addition to the tax collected under the old revenue act. This tax, Mr. Chairman, is paid partly by the consumers of beer, partly by the retailers, and partly by the brewers. I believe it should be removed.

I feel thankful, Mr. Chairman, that even if I be not ending a long and honorable career in this House, neither have I lived in the classic precincts of Tupelo; but rather that I come from a section of this great country which is not only progressive but whose people are broad minded enough to give credit to men who by honest industry have been able to better themselves. Because we have made money and have built up in an honorable manner legitimate businesses is no justification for the attack made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN].

I favor the reduction not only of the tax on beer, but on all things enumerated in this bill.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, was designed to raise revenue for a war. That war has been ended now some two years; yet by reason of the extraordinary expenses resulting from it, and to be continued indefinitely, these taxes are to go on. When they will cease, no one knows. Among these extraordinary expenditures are those occasioned by the maintenance of a standing army of 100,000 men, provided in the bill which was recently passed in this House. Who knows what other schemes may be placed to the credit of this war as "extraordinary expenditures." Perhaps some gentleman will suggest that the proposed subsidies to ships are an outcome of the late war. We have taken possession of distant lands. We must have, we will be told, a merchant marine subsidized and supported by the Government to control the trade in other parts of the world. We not only tax the beer industry—and I speak, Mr. Chairman, not for the brewers of this country alone, but more particularly for the retailers and the people who consume the beer. I have never considered beer to be a luxury. To many workingmen it is an absolute necessity. They use beer with their meals because it furnishes nourishment and is a mild stimulant necessary to many men engaged in laborious occupations. This tax upon beer is a burden to such men.

Perhaps in the country districts men may drink applejack or hard cider and get along very well; but in the great cities the mechanic, the laboring man, the working people generally, require beer just as much as people in other parts of the country require other kinds of beverages. I am not familiar with the favorite drink of the people of that section represented by my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], but whatever be its name I am confident that a careful examination of the revenue act will disclose no such onerous tax as that upon beer. Such people pay nothing additional for the use of the beverages to which they are accustomed and require. Certainly we ought to make some provision which would equalize the taxes collected under this act, and I hope, therefore, that this House will vote for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], reducing the tax proposed by the gentleman from New York on malted liquors. My only regret is that the amendment to reduce the tax on malted liquors to $1.20 a barrel instead of $1.50, as proposed by the pending amendment, did not prevail.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that that amendment would not now be in order, there being already two amendments pending.

Mr. SHATTUC. I ask that the gentleman from Missouri may be heard.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the time for the discussion of this amendment be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I shall not object to that if I can have one minute of the time.

Mr. SULZER. I object.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the committee for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate is exhausted on this pending amendment.

Mr. SHATTUC. We think not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. And the amendment which is now pending will be reported, on which a vote is to be taken.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I have asked unanimous consent for five minutes' time in which to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that he be allowed five minutes' time?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to answer the remarks of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN], who has just addressed the committee, either in kind or spirit, because that would be impossible. I shall refer briefly, however, to some arguments which have been made during the last two hours on the floor of the House on this question. It was said that the tax on beer is a very easy tax to be collected. Mr. Chairman, that is true. That, however, is the argument of the highwayman, who goes out upon the road and holds up a traveler, believing that to be the easiest way of making money.

The only question before the committee is whether the tax on malt liquors is just or whether it is unjust. The fact that many brewers of the country are wealthy should have no bearing whatever. They have made their money at a time when beer commanded a price of about $12 a barrel. That price, by reason of fierce competition, has been reduced to ten, eight, six, and down to five dollars a barrel, and to-day, when wages are high, when competition is ruinous, when the expenses of collection are large, when the losses on account of this onerous tax are greater than ever, do you wonder when you find the brewers to complain and ask for relief? It has been stated in the course of this discussion that as much beer was consumed last year as the year before. That is not true.

The fact is that the consumption has fallen off, the decrease being nearly 1,000,000 barrels during the last year, and the increase this year up to the present time is not at all commensurate with the general prosperity of the country. In other words, of all the American industries and trades the brewing industry was the only one which was not permitted to share in the general and unexampled prosperity of the country, and this mainly because of this burdensome tax upon its product. It was forcibly held down by the strong arm of the taxgatherer. During the last two years 208 brewers have gone to the wall. It is not true that they have been absorbed by larger ones; it is not true that they have formed a combination, and the decrease in the number can not be explained in that way. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that they have gone to the wall because they were unable to conduct business profitably under the present tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTHOLDT and Mr. SHATTUC demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 119.

Mr. BARTHOLDT and Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. PAYNE and Mr. BARTHOLDT.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 139.

So the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. BARTHOLDT was rejected.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for a vote on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words on this question. I am in favor of entirely repealing the additional war taxes on beer. But I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and I practically concur in all that he said regarding it. No one who is fair and just, and who does not want to inequitably discriminate against one industry in favor of another, can possibly object to the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

If this amendment were adopted, the brewing industry would pay into the Treasury of the Government from forty-eight to fifty million dollars a year, or more than one-third of all the revenue intended and expected to be raised under the bill proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. The Republican party, it seems, does not intend to keep faith with the brewers. It is the old story.

We have just witnessed in this Hall a spectacle that will be long remembered by those oppressed, and which should be discussed from one end of this land to the other by people engaged in the beer business, and that is that the Republican members of this House almost unanimously either voted against the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to reduce the tax on beer to $1.20 a barrel and against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] to reduce the tax to $1.50 a barrel, or refrained from voting at all. A little help from the Republicans and the amendment would have been adopted. What a spectacle of deception and hypocrisy these votes display!

Do you imagine you can again successfully deceive the brewers of this country? The brewers of the country now know how the Republican party has betrayed them. They have not forgotten your promises in the last campaign, and I believe you will not get as much help from them in the coming campaigns as you did in the last. If the brewers respond again to your cries for campaign funds, they are more foolish than I imagine, and deserve to be robbed.

Let me say here that during the recent campaign the Republican speakers in my district—and I doubt not in others—told the people that if the Republicans were returned to power they would repeal this additional tax of $1 a barrel on beer. What a difference between now and then! What a difference between promise and performance! The way you have voted here to-day on this question will not be forgotten. You have broken your pledges and voted against all your promises.

Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate that the brewing industry is being unjustly and unnecessarily taxed. The Republicans are driving to the wall the people engaged in this industry, and the business is being harassed, oppressed, and destroyed by taxation that practically means confiscation. And yet, sir, the Republican party will have the temerity—the brazen effrontery—during the next campaign to go to the brewers and their friends and ask for contributions to elect its members to Congress. I trust the brewers will not forget the vote here to-day.

I hope that when the Republicans go to the brewers for campaign contributions they will be met with the record you have made here to-day. [Applause.] And I am inclined to believe that hereafter if Republican speakers tell the people that the Republican party is in favor of repealing this additional war tax on beer they will be hooted into silence and laughed from the platform. [Laughter.] You can fool some of the brewers all the time, and all the brewers some of the time, but you can not fool all the brewers all the time. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move that all debate on this section and the amendments be concluded in five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Make it ten minutes. I want two or three minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well; make it ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. CORLISS. Before that motion is put, I ask that the amendment which I desire to offer be read.

Mr. PAYNE. The amendment will be in order anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. This will not cut off the right to offer amendments.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Will there be any other opportunity to discuss any other amendments proposed to this section?

The CHAIRMAN. Not if this motion is adopted.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to.

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, and ask unanimous consent that it be made a part of the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1, page 2, by inserting at the end of line 12 the following:
"Provided further, That in addition to the present regulations, all stamps used for denoting the tax imposed by this section shall be canceled by perforations, to be made in such manner as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it is an independent amendment, and will be in order after the committee amendment is disposed of. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What amendment is it?

Mr. PAYNE. It is the amendment I offered.

Mr. STEWART of New York. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. STEWART of New York. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1:
"Provided further, That the beer shall be pure beer, made exclusively from malt and hops, so pronounced by inspectors to be appointed by the Government for that purpose, the inspectors to be appointed by the Treasury Department and paid at the rate of $3,000 per year: Provided further, That a violation of the above provision shall be a misdemeanor, punishable upon conviction by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; and if such beer is found on such inspection to be impure, then a tax of $2 shall be imposed."

Mr. SHATTUC. I raise the point of order against that amendment that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not an amendment to the amendment and is not in order until we have voted upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand it now, Mr. Chairman, the pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to fix the tax at $1.60 a barrel, and that is in lieu of the provision in the bill which the gentleman has presented. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe we have exhausted all the amendments that can be offered. We saw the majority vote down the proposition fixing this tax at $1.20 a barrel. They have also voted down the proposition to fix the tax at $1.50 a barrel, and now we are brought to vote upon the proposition made by the chairman of the committee, to fix the tax at $1.60 per barrel. I have stated, Mr. Chairman, that I should vote for every reduction. I have voted for the preceding propositions to reduce the tax, first, to $1.20, and then to $1.50. It is true the majority on the floor have decided that there shall be no such reduction. They have so decided in caucus or conference. There is nothing left, therefore, but to vote for $1.60 or leave it at $1.85, as it now stands, after the discount of 7½ per cent.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an injustice to this great interest The figures of the Secretary of the Treasury show that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, there was a surplus of over $79,000,000 in the Treasury. For the present fiscal year it is expected that the surplus will be $80,000,000. There is already a surplus in the Treasury of $140,000,000. Add these various sums together, and we have a surplus of nearly $300,000,000 in the Treasury, or will have at the expiration of the fiscal year which I have mentioned if there is no reduction and no change in the present law. Notwithstanding these figures, notwithstanding it is shown that we do not need this vast sum, the majority are unwilling to reduce the tax below $1.60 per barrel. For myself, I would reduce the revenue, if I could, under this war-revenue bill $70,000,000, and then I would feel that I had not given the full measure of relief that the people are entitled to. But we are up against the majority and their united party action, and we are compelled to submit. For one, therefore, I am ready to vote for the lowest rate we can get, which is $1.60 per barrel.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have but very little sympathy with that method of debate indulged in by the gentleman from Mississippi a few minutes ago. I do not think the slur that he uttered against the brewers adds to his reputation or to the dignity of this body. I think the brewers of the country are entitled to live in as fine houses with proper surroundings as are any of the members of this House or men engaged in any business. The brewing industry is a legitimate one, neither harmful nor detrimental to the people of this country. On the contrary, beer, as a food and medicine, is a great blessing to thousands of people in this country.

Last year the production in this country was more than 40,000,000 barrels, or 1,200,000,000 gallons, amounting to more than 17 gallons for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

With this enormous use of beer by the people of this country, how can the members of this House sit here when there is no public demand for this legislation and when the Treasury is bursting with a huge surplus and vote this extortionate tax upon beer? I feel certain that the members of this House in their hearts know that the brewers of the country, as well as the beer consumers, are taxed too heavily now. I do not think there is a man in this body who does not feel that $73,000,000 is too much money for one industry to pay the National Treasury.

There is no business in the country which suffers so much to-day from unjust taxation as the brewing industry.

Just think of beer selling at $5 to $6 per barrel by the brewer and $2 of this amount going to the Government. How can the brewers pay decent wages to their employees under this taxation and get any profit themselves? Years ago, when beer brought $12 per barrel, only $1 tax was paid to the Government. The brewing business was a paying investment then, but now, save in exceptional instances, there is no money in the brewing business. I know of two or three failures in Boston within the past two years. Better wages are paid the workmen in the breweries than in any similar industry in this country.

Competition is sharper and the expense of collection so great that the profits have been reduced to a minimum.

To show how absurdly unnecessary it is to continue any of the war-revenue tax on beer, I quote some figures on the condition of the Treasury now and its condition during the next two years:

Statement of surplus.

Deductions under Payne bill, eighteen months, from January 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902, at the rate of $40,000,000 per annum	60,000,000.00
Total surplus June 30, 1902		146,258,237.76
Total estimated surplus under existing law on June 30, 1902, as above		206,258,237.76
Deductions under minority proposition, eighteen months, at the rate of $70,000,000 per annum		105,000,000.00
Total surplus June 30, 1902		101,258,237.76

The estimates of expenditures above stated cover the extraordinary estimates of the Departments for the year ending June 30, 1902, and if the appropriations for 1902 are cut down to the amount appropriated for 1901 the surplus in 1902 will be eighty-three millions greater than the above estimate.

With this condition of the public Treasury, is not the demand by the brewers for fair treatment one that should be acted upon favorably by this House?

How can we expect the breweries to turn out pure beer if nearly one-half the price received for their product goes into the coffers of the Government? All the hospitals in my own city of Boston prescribe beer for the patients. Nearly every reputable physician in the country will prescribe beer and porter for the building up of a constitution broken down from overwork or other causes. If, then, beer is a tonic and medicine, why should we tax it so as to make its manufacture in a pure state practically prohibitive? Therefore, in the interest of the health and welfare of the millions who drink this beverage, this war tax should be repealed.

It is time for men belonging to a representative body such as this House of Representatives is supposed to be to vote upon questions where the beer and liquor interests are affected honestly and conscientiously. It is time to stop levying unjust and iniquitous taxation upon the brewing interests of the country just because a small and impractical percentage of the people of this country applaud these efforts. It is time to stop the humbug and nonsense which lead men, as in the vote upon the canteen question last week, to vote against their own convictions of right and justice and honesty in order to cater to and satisfy a false, intolerant, and impracticable idea of conducting the affairs of this country.

I know a great many men engaged in the brewing industry. They are as respectable, as able, and as substantial business men as we have in any industry in this country.

The beer business requires brains, application, and an intelligent understanding of the laws of trade. Hundreds of millions of dollars are invested in this great industry, and it deserves the encouragement of the Government rather than its unjust and unfair discrimination.

I applaud the men in the brewing business who, as the gentleman from Mississippi says, live in magnificent houses. If they have been successful in their business it is due to the intelligent application of business methods and to their honesty, frugality, and untiring energy. They have not been successful through the favor of but rather in spite of legislation by the National Government. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART of New York. I now offer my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1:

"Provided further, That the beer shall be pure beer, made exclusively from malt and hops, so pronounced by inspectors to be appointed by the Government for that purpose, the inspectors to be appointed by the Treasury Department and paid at the rate of $3,000 per year: Provided further, That violation of the above provision shall be a misdemeanor, punishable upon conviction by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; and if such beer is found on such inspection to be impure, then a tax of $2 shall be imposed."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman?

Mr. STEELE. It is legislation upon this bill and is not germane. As a matter of fact, nine-tenths of the brewers of this country do not use malt exclusively made from barley. Everybody knows that.

Mr. CANNON. It is in the nature of an alleged pure-food bill.

Mr. STEELE. Yes; but no one alleges that corn is impure.

Mr. CANNON. I say this amendment is in the nature of a pure-food bill.

Mr. STEELE. The subject of the bill is taxation, and the amendment is a regulation of pure food.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is the objection to pure beer?

Mr. STEELE. Not a bit. But I say that just as pure beer can be made of corn as can be made out of hops.

Mr. RAY of New York. Then let it go through; nobody objects to it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, considering the merit there must be in this proposition to have pure beer, this is neither the time nor the manner in which it ought to be brought about. This is a bill to reduce taxation. It is not germane to that question, in my judgment, to regulate the quality of the various articles, cigars and tobacco and all that sort of thing, on which these taxes are to rest. But if the Chair should overrule that suggestion, what is there in this provision—who is to tell? Are we to suspend the collection of the taxes, are we to stop the whole machinery of the Internal Revenue Bureau while we analyze and test each barrel of beer? These taxes are to rest upon pure beer. What is to be the tax upon impure beer?

Mr. STEWART of New York. Two dollars a barrel.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not believe there will be any money collected from taxes if this proposed amendment is to go into the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard upon the point of order. I do not think the point of order is well taken, for this reason. It seems to me that you can fix one rate of tax upon one article, composed of a certain material, and another rate upon the same article, known by the same name, when composed of another material. Suppose, for example, it was proposed in this bill to tax whisky made out of rye so much a gallon, and whisky made out of corn so much a gallon, at different rates. Suppose the bill was brought in for whisky generally. Suppose somebody offered an amendment providing that when the whisky was made out of corn it should be fixed at so much, would anybody contend that the point of order would lie? It seems to me that when you say that beer shall be taxed so much, and beer not made out of malt and hops should be taxed so much, or a different amount, that you have certainly not violated the rules of the House, certainly not the rule as to germaneness.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the very ground on which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] objects to the amendment shows that it is clearly a proper amendment to this section. The bill, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, is a bill to reduce taxation. There is now upon the statute book a tax upon beer of $2 a barrel. The proposition of the gentleman now is that beer of a particular quality shall be taxed $1.60. The beer that is impure stands without special regulation, remains as it is now. Why is not this germane to the general scope of the bill as well as to the particular clause in question?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, there are two classes of beer contemplated by this amendment, and it provides a different tax for each. It provides the instrumentalities by which beer shall be classified for purposes of taxation. In that portion of the bill referring to cigars there is not only a clause fixing the amount of taxation, but there are provided instrumentalities for carrying out the operations of the law, and also an appropriation to aid in that purpose. It seems to the Chair——

Mr. PAYNE. May I interrupt the Chair a moment? Does the Chair understand that this amendment proposes two different taxes for different kinds of beer?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, certainly I should say it is out of order, for the reason that we have already voted upon a provision fixing but one tax for all kinds of beer, and the Committee of the Whole can not alter that provision now; no amendment to that tax is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman's position is not tenable, and has no doubt as to the germaneness of this proposition. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. TAWNEY. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment of Mr. STEWART of New York was again read.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "malt" the word "barley."

Mr. STEWART of New York. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by inserting before the word "malt" the words "corn and barley." I would like to say a word on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the committee, debate of this section has been closed.

Mr. CANNON. I did not understand that the debate was closed.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Without offering a further amendment, I would like to make a suggestion on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been closed.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAY of New York. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I withdraw my amendment.

The question being then taken on the amendment of Mr. STEWART of New York, there were on a division—ayes 3, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CORLISS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, on page 2, at the end of line 12, insert:

"Provided further, That in addition to the present regulations, all stamps used for denoting the tax imposed by this section shall be canceled by perforations, to be made in such manner as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue."

Mr. CORLISS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has closed.

Mr. CORLISS. I ask a vote, then, on the amendment. The committee, as I understand, has agreed to it; and it is desired by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

A MEMBER. What is the object?

Mr. CORLISS. The purpose is to prevent fraud.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. CORLISS was agreed to, there being on a division (called for by Mr. UNDERWOOD)—ayes 102, noes 23.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to amend by inserting two additional sections, which I ask the Clerk to read, to come in after section 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 339 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out of said section the following:

"In estimating and computing such tax, the fractional parts of a barrel shall be halves, thirds, quarters, sixths, and eighths; and any fractional part of a barrel containing less than one-eighth shall be accounted one-eighth; more than one-eighth, and not more than one-sixth, shall be accounted one-sixth; more than one-sixth, and not more than one-fourth, shall be accounted one-fourth; more than one-fourth, and not more than one-third, shall be accounted one-third; more than one-third, and not more than one-half, shall be accounted one-half; more than one-half, and not more than 1 barrel, shall be accounted 1 barrel; and more than 1 barrel, and not more than 63 gallons, shall be accounted 2 barrels, or a hogshead. The said tax shall be paid by the owner, agent, or superintendent of the brewery or premises in which such fermented liquors are made, and in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified."

And by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"In estimating and computing the tax imposed by law the fractional part of a barrel shall be halves, thirds, and quarters, and any fractional part of a barrel containing less than one-fourth shall be accounted one-fourth; more than one-fourth and not more than one-third shall be accounted one-third; more than one-third and not more than one-half shall be accounted one-half; more than one-half and not more than one barrel shall be accounted one barrel; and more than one barrel and not more than 63 gallons shall be accounted two barrels, or a hogshead. The said tax shall be paid by the owner, agent, or superintendent of the brewery or premises in which such fermented liquors are made, and in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified."

SEC. 3. That section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That section 3341 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3341. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall cause to be prepared, for the payment of such tax, suitable stamps denoting the amount of tax required to be paid on the hogsheads, barrels, and halves, thirds, and quarters of a barrel of such fermented liquors (and shall also cause to be prepared suitable permits for the purpose hereinafter mentioned), and shall furnish the same to the collectors of internal revenue, who shall each be required to keep on hand at all times a sufficient supply of permits and a supply of stamps equal in amount to two months' sales thereof, if there be any brewery or brewery warehouse in his district; and such stamps shall be sold and permits granted and delivered by such collectors only to the brewers of their districts, respectively. Such collectors shall keep an account of the number of permits delivered and of the number and value of the stamps sold by them to each brewer.'"

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a very important amendment to be put in now.

Mr. PAYNE. Let me explain. These two sections are simply a bill which at the last session of Congress was reported unanimously by the Ways and Means Committee and passed unanimously by the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Is the language identical?

Mr. PAYNE. These two sections are in the identical language of a bill which is now pending in the Senate. It has not been acted upon.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The first section of this bill has just been passed, and all amendments were refused. That section has been passed as submitted to and approved by the Republican caucus. I ask whether these provisions have been submitted to the caucus.

Mr. PAYNE. No, sir; this amendment has not been submitted to any caucus, so far as I know.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think it ought to be.

Mr. PAYNE. It has been submitted neither to a Republican nor a Democratic caucus, so far as I know.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; although I think I am going to answer the question I believe the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I simply wish to know how much reduction on the beer tax this amendment provides?

Mr. PAYNE. Not a farthing. It does not reduce that at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, if a brewer chooses to fill his kegs one-half full he pays the tax only on one-third; that is to say, as I understand the amendment, he pays the tax on the smaller of the two quantities.

Mr. PAYNE. No; that is a mistake. He pays the tax on the larger quantity.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood the reading of the amendment differently.

Mr. PAYNE. No; it simply gets rid of the sixth and eighth barrel taxes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do I understand that this is identical with the bill that we passed in and sent to the Senate?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I sent up a copy of the printed bill as the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What is the status of the bill we passed? I have forgotten.

Mr. PAYNE. It has not been acted upon in the Senate, and we propose to bring it before that body in such shape that we can probably secure action upon it at this session.

Now, when this bill was before the House on a former occasion, on a motion from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FLETCHER], it was amended so as to take effect at some future time; I think in July last. I propose to offer an amendment to the last section of the bill so that the two sections in question shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1901, so as to meet the objection of the gentleman from Minnesota at that time.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that debate on this section has been exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. This, as the Chair understands it, is an additional section.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. PAYNE. There are five minutes in opposition to the amendment, and, of course, the gentleman can take the floor in his own right if he desires to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Chairman, this bill is identical with one which was passed at the last session of Congress, and was sent to the Senate. It seems that that body was unable to act upon it, and it never was passed. It comes up here to-day in a new form, and, as I understand it, a kind of a compromise measure, for the large brewers of the country would be willing to accept $1.60 tax if they could get this bill passed, as it would thus enable them to drive out the smaller brewers from the market. This is simply a process for crushing out the smaller brewers in the interest of the larger ones, and I hope the committee will vote it down.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, and I think that when the committee come to understand it they will also be opposed to it.

The object of this pending proposition is to regulate the brewing industry of the United States with reference to taxation, and is undoubtedly in the interest of the larger brewers against the smaller producers and others in the country. That, at all events, is the effect of it. If the Internal-Revenue Bureau is not allowed to sell stamps for the smaller sizes of beer packages, it prohibits the use of packages of that size.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the extent of the prohibition?

Mr. BARNEY. This cuts out both the sixths and eighths packages, and the result will be that all sales must be in the larger packages—one-quarter, one-half, or a full barrel.

Now, what does that mean? It means, Mr. Chairman, the crushing out of the smaller breweries and putting the business altogether in the hands of the great ones, who can afford to manufacture in large quantities and whose trade is mostly in large packages. That seems to be the only object of it.

As the law is, there is nothing to compel a brewer to buy one-eighth or one-sixth barrel stamps if he does not want to. He is not required to do it, unless he chooses to use packages of that character. He can confine himself to the using of quarter barrels, or half barrels, or full barrels, and leave the smaller trade to small breweries; but when you come to prohibiting the issuing of stamps of this character the natural consequence is to break up the smaller establishments. No man ought to ask Congress to regulate his business for him in this way.

It would not only crush out the business of smaller establishments, but the smaller retailers of beer as well, because they deal almost exclusively with the smaller packages, while the large saloons, which of course are their largest purchasers, deal almost entirely in half and full barrels; and, besides, the farmers, the laboring people, and the public generally throughout the country where beer in packages is used on occasions, buy in the smaller packages and not the larger, and do not wish to be compelled to buy either as large a package as a quarter, or bottled beer, which is much dearer, and at the same time is not as good.

There is another industry in this country that is affected by this amendment, and that is the large number of coopers who have invested considerable money in staves, and who have kegs on hand at the present time for the purpose of supplying the brewing interests of the country.

Now, they do not ask, and they have not a right to ask, for legislation on the part of Congress for the purpose of widening their market; but they do, in my judgment, have a right to ask that this Congress shall not pass an amendment to this law which shall ruin their industry, which shall drive the product of their shops out of the market, and which will not allow the people of this country to purchase their product who are anxious to purchase it at the present time.

I repeat, then, if the large brewers of this country do not want to put up eighths and sixths they do not need to. There is no law on the statute book which compels them to do so; but the small brewing interests of this country desire to do it, and I do not think it right or fair for this Congress to enact legislation the inevitable effect of which will be to drive out of the trade the small brewing industries of this country.

I am in favor of, and in the consideration of this bill have voted for, a substantial reduction of the beer tax, and a larger reduction than that proposed in this bill. I believe at least one-half or more of the war-revenue tax ought to be taken off. But I am not in favor of aiding the brewing industries of this country in this way and at the expense of the smaller breweries, the coopers, and others who are accommodated by the putting up of the smaller packages of beer in wood.

In my judgment this is the most obnoxious kind of class legislation. It is asking the Government by law to regulate the brewing trade, and to discriminate in favor of the strong against the weak.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard for a moment, to corroborate what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BARNEY] has said. There is no question in my mind but what if this amendment is adopted it will drive out of business every small brewery in the country. The small breweries, situated in the more thinly settled localities, can not put up bottling establishments. The regulations prescribe that bottling establishments shall be in buildings detached from all other buildings. They must be constructed and operated in certain ways; all of which is very expensive. The small brewers sell their product to the saloons in their neighborhood, delivering it to them by wagons. They also sell many of their small packages to the consumers direct, to farmers and others, who purchase a sixth or eighth for their own use.

Mr. TAWNEY. If that is so, then this measure is in the interest of temperance, is it not?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I am not discussing that question. It is not involved here. This contest is between the small brewer and the combine, and I propose to play fair with the men who are doing business in the country, as well as the large breweries doing business in the cities. I do not believe we should adopt a measure that will drive the small brewer out of business, simply to give an extended market to the large brewer who can afford to construct bottling establishments and send his goods out in that way.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you mean to say that the small brewer does not manufacture anything above eighths or sixths of a barrel?

Mr. DAVIDSON. I mean to say that nine-tenths of the product of the small breweries is put up in quarters or less, and that not more than one-tenth is put up in halves or in full barrels. By far the larger part of their product is put out in the small kegs, in sixths and eighths, and this measure will absolutely wipe them out of existence.

It must be remembered that these small breweries have a large amount of capital invested in the small kegs. If this amendment passes, that capital is absolutely lost, as the small kegs could not be used and would be of no value.

I know the argument is made that many of these kegs are not returned, and this is a heavy loss upon the owners, but I want to say that you might as well pass a law to compel grocers to sell sugar in not less than 5-pound packages as to say that the small kegs shall not be used for beer. To those who sustain a loss in their use they have the alternative of using something else in their place. They can ship their goods in large packages or in bottles, if they so desire. Because they may lose a small keg occasionally is no reason why the small brewer in the country districts should not be permitted to use the small keg if he so desires.

The people who drink beer, the most of them, like to have it freshly drawn from a wooden package. They do not want to use bottled goods and they can not use packages as large as a quarter or a half of a barrel.

Farmers in doing their thrashing and other work where they have a number of men employed very often buy a sixth or an eighth of beer to use on such occasions.

On social and festival occasions very many of our best people make use of this beverage, and there is absolutely no reason why the use of the small package should be prevented and they compelled to use goods bottled by some large concern in the larger cities. A bottling establishment, I am informed, can not be constructed for less than $2,000. This the small brewer can not afford to invest.

There is absolutely no reason for the adoption of this measure except to favor the large breweries for the purpose of driving out of business the competition which they have in the small breweries located in the country districts. For these reasons I am opposed to this amendment and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to enter a protest against this legislation which prevents the one-eighth barrel of beer from being manufactured and sold by reason of the fact that the United States provides no stamps for that quantity. I am well aware that in the first session of this Congress a measure passed this House identical with the proposed amendment. Up to this time it has not been enacted into law; but if the proposed amendment is incorporated into this bill, we who believe in reducing the war taxes to the uttermost cent that it can be done will be obliged to vote for it, and it certainly will be enacted into law.

When I returned to my district I found that the brewers regarded the measure of no particular benefit to them. The hotel and saloon keepers were opposed to it, especially those who sold small quantities of beer, for the reason that before closing for the day they often are obliged to put on tap more beer than they could dispose of before closing, and much spoiled over night or until their business places reopened.

But the greatest objection to the measure was urged by individual citizens who claimed that for many occasions they were obliged to buy more beer than they wanted or do without keg beer, which was generally preferred. Again, there has been no general nor special request from any body of people asking for this legislation. It will require a general readjustment in the business of breweries and occasion, for the time at least, a decided loss from the kegs on hand; and so far as I have been able to understand there is no existing mischief which is to be remedied, and the present law, well understood as it is, works to the general satisfaction of all interests.

The district I represent has a number of breweries in it, and being a community with a large German population, who drink beer instead of whisky, the present law finds no objectors among its people. I hope this amendment will be defeated and no change be made, at least until there is a general demand made by the people for its passage and better reasons than I have heard to-day are given.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to strike out the last word only for the purpose of saying that, as I understand this, it does not interfere with the business of the small brewers any more than it does with the business of the large ones. The brewers all want it. They want to get rid of these small packages. They say that these small packages are lost, and the waste is so great on them that they want to get rid of them, and they can not get rid of them unless they all do it, and hence they want this legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. BARNEY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PAYNE. One moment. I wish to speak for a minute without being interrupted. Now, the opposition last year came from some gentlemen who represented the coopers, and the coopers had a lot of these small packages on hand; and it was stated that by putting off the time when the law should go into operation the coopers could be accommodated and could work off their small packages, and it would do nobody any injury. So it was at the suggestion of these gentlemen that the time when the law should go into operation was postponed.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well, let the gentleman ask his question.

Mr. STEELE. I want to ask if it is not a fact that it was represented to us by a gentleman from Wisconsin that 92 of the 106 breweries in that State had petitioned for the enactment of this law?

Mr. PAYNE. No; I do not remember that. If the gentleman says that, he is undoubtedly correct, as he generally is. Now, that is all there is in this amendment that I have introduced.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If all these brewers want to get away with these small kegs, why do they not do so?

Mr. PAYNE. If one of them should sell these small packages, and the people want them, they all have to keep using them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You want Congress to compel them to enter into an agreement?

Mr. PAYNE. I hope we will have a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 78.

Mr. PAYNE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BARNEY, will please act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act special taxes shall be, and hereby are, imposed annually as follows, that is to say:

"1. Bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $25,000 shall pay $50; when using or employing a capital exceeding $25,000, for every additional $1,000 in excess of $25,000, $2, and in estimating capital surplus shall be included. The amount of such annual tax shall in all cases be computed on the basis of the capital and surplus for the preceding fiscal year. Every person, firm, or company, and every incorporated or other bank having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or sale shall be a banker under this act: Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors and which does no other business of banking shall not be subject to this tax.

"2. Brokers shall pay $50. Every person, firm, or company, whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker: Provided, That any person having paid the special tax as a banker shall not be required to pay the special tax as a broker.

"3. Pawnbrokers shall pay $20. Every person, firm, or company whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker.

"4. Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $5 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or where games of billiards or pool are played, and that are open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or a billiard room, respectively."

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], reporting this bill, if he has reduced this proposed tariff to such an extent as to cut off the appropriation that must be made if the Hanna-Payne ship-subsidy bill became a law? I see no notice whatever of the ship-subsidy bill in the report of the distinguished chairman and his committee. I have with pleasure read his speech and examined into it closely, and I find there nothing on this point, and I should like to know whether he took the ship-subsidy question into consideration in making this bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman ask me a question?

Mr. GAINES. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say in the first year or two of the ship-subsidy bill the highest estimate of the expense is about $4,500,000, and we save $1,500,000 a year we are now paying for carrying the mails; so that the necessary expenditures would be only $3,000,000. I did not think it worth mentioning a little matter of that kind.

Mr. GAINES. I desire to state to the gentleman from New York that the expense is put at not less than $9,000,000 a year.

Mr. PAYNE. Not more than $9,000,000 a year. Do not put it at not less than $9,000,000.

Mr. GAINES. Then, we will have to pay that out of the revenues of the Government, and this ship bill is to be the law of the land, if passed at all, for twenty years.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in his pathetic appeal said he was responding to the cry of the oppressed people of this country in reducing this tax at all, and he regretted that he was not able because of the war expenses and "expenditures" resulting from the war, and not expenditures for ship subsidies, to reduce it more. Not one word is found in his lengthy report, not one syllable is said about the ship-subsidy matter in his speech of several pages in the RECORD; and yet we find the people that support him in this matter, in the House and out of it, are the rich corporations and the rich firms—people, Mr. Chairman, who are able not only to live without subsidies, to build ships without subsidies, but to carry on the foreign trade without subsidies, and have done it until our trade to-day reaches every civilized market in the world; and yet the gentleman comes here, and his party, and says that he is reducing taxes, forsooth, because the poor people of this country are crying out against this war tax.

Mr. Chairman, I was surprised to find a matter that is before the public—a matter about which he knows that members of Congress are written to every day by the people, that the press is discussing all the time, and the plain people are praying against it, and yet the distinguished gentleman and the equally distinguished committee and his great party are absolutely mute in their speeches in this House and in their report on this subject. Yes, Mr. Chairman, they can reduce the tax, and say they reduce it because the people want it done, and yet they retain $65,000,000 for the ship-subsidy bill, a measure which he is the great father and defender of upon the floor of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, there is another omission in the report of the gentleman from New York, and there is another omission in his speech, and a little scheme about the amount of the probable expenditures, not on the ship-subsidy bill, but on a single improvement upon one shoal in the Tennessee River. I am in favor of it.

Mr. GAINES. And I am glad my friend is in favor of it and announces it publicly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am, because I am a little broader gauge than the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES. And you say you are in favor of it publicly?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman keep still just once? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. I will.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is not an estimate upon the Colbert Shoals in the report of the committee. Yet if it is carried to that perfection which I hope it may be, it will take a greater expenditure, net, for the next two years than the entire possibility or reasonable probability of the ship-subsidy bill.

Mr. Chairman, the time, I hope, is coming in this country when the advocates of special interests for special localities, instead of measuring their hope by such a matter as the Tennessee River, will become the champions of an opposition measure calculated to benefit all the people of all the States in this Union.

I would point the gentleman to the great commercial convention recently held, in which delegates from his own State were present, and the statement of one of the distinguished Senators from Alabama that it was the most completely representative body that the South has had since the war, in that it rose to the dignity of American citizenship. They got out of the ruts of mere provincial politics and indorsed the very scheme by name that the gentleman has so bitterly denounced. It is a good sign, Mr. Chairman, when the representatives of a great section get bigger, larger, more patriotic, more American than the individual member of a single delegation, who has imperiled possibly his own best interests by assailing the interests of other people. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 4, lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides for the elimination of the taxes imposed on pool and billiard tables and bowling alleys. I offer this amendment because a great many associations which have been formed for the purposes of enabling men to meet socially for their mutual improvement are supplied with pool and billiard tables and bowling alleys. For some years I have been active in young men's associations, both in my own city and throughout the country. These societies are organized and exist, not for the purpose of making money, but in order to bring young men into a better moral atmosphere and away from corrupt companions and environments. It is for their moral improvement and advancement. The tax gathered under the section of this bill amounted in 1899 to $428,423.87. In 1900 the amount collected was $366,733.66, a reduction of $61,690.21. These figures are taken from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the present year. Considered in connection with the entire amount collected under this act, this is an insignificant sum; yet many associations with two or three pool and billiard tables, besides a bowling alley, have found the $20 or $25 paid yearly under the provisions of this act to be a heavy burden when added to their ordinary expenses. I trust the chairman of the committee will agree to this proposition. Every young man's association, every Christian young men's association, every social organization of every kind is subjected to this tax. It is a tax upon the instrumentalities of morality and virtue—unjustifiable, unreasonable, and unwise.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Would it not answer the gentleman's purpose if we simply exempted all the religious billiard tables and bowling alleys of the country? [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD of New York. I never knew of a religious bowling alley, though the gentleman may have some in his district. But I say that the pool table and the billiard table are not things that should be taxed. They are used to bring people where their associations and surroundings will be better and more elevating, and it is not well to hinder or to place obstacles in the way of such gatherings. I trust that my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will concur in this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this item simply brings in about $44,000 a year, instead of $366,000, as the gentleman states. The committee left it in, thinking that the business could afford to pay, and that it was one of the things that should be left in.

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been exhausted on this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if this is not a tax upon every association, organization, whether religious or not, that has a billiard table or bowling alley on its premises?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I do not understand it is confined to any religious organization or association.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Do not these associations have to pay the tax?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know of any religious association that has billiard tables and pool tables, but if they do they ought to pay the tax.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I understand that a great many organizations formed to safeguard the morals of young men have billiard tables and bowling alleys on their premises. These are harmless amusements, particularly when used as agents to improve the morals of our young men, and I do not think they should be taxed. We take the tax off theaters and music halls, why not off these innocent amusements? I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD of New York and Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts) there were 24 ayes and 81 noes.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after line 12, on page 3, the following:

"That every person, firm, corporation, or company engaged in manufacture whose gross annual receipts exceed $500,000 shall be subject to pay annually at the end of each fiscal year a special excise tax equivalent to one-tenth of 1 per cent on the gross amount of all receipts of such persons, firms, corporations, and companies in their respective business in excess of said sum of $500,000. True and accurate returns of the amount of such gross receipts shall be made and rendered yearly by each of such associations, corporations, and companies, as in the case of refiners of petroleum and sugar. Such returns shall include such data as to capital, surplus, operating expenses, wages, taxes, national or State, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe. Such returns shall be classified and published by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his annual report."

Mr. PAYNE. I move that all debate on this section, and amendments thereto, be concluded in ten minutes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. I make that motion.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to, there being—ayes 99, noes 83.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to impose an additional tax upon corporations and other branches of industry which now bear no part of the burden of the war taxes—the great trusts and combinations of the country. It declares that all manufacturers whose gross receipts exceed $500,000 annually shall pay a tax of 1 per cent on such receipts. In this connection, let me state that upon gross receipts of $1,000,000 such a corporation would pay a tax of $1,000. The amendment provides also that these corporations shall make returns, which shall be published, containing such statistical information as will be a guide to Congress in future legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that this additional tax will be imposed. It will not raise in the aggregate more than a million or two of dollars; and it will relieve to some extent the stamp taxes which this bill in subsequent parts proposes to continue.

There is a precedent for legislation of this kind in this very bill. In the section now under consideration bank capital is made a subject of taxation. There is imposed a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon all banking capital and surplus over $25,000. On bank capital alone $3,000,000 of taxation annually is raised, both under the Dingley bill and under the proposed Payne bill.

There was also a tax of this kind imposed by the Dingley war revenue upon one class of combinations or trusts; that is, the refiners of petroleum and sugar. Upon them a tax was imposed, not of one-tenth of 1 per cent as I propose in this case, but a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent upon gross receipts exceeding $250,000. That tax is continued in the Payne bill, and under it over $1,000,000 is annually secured from refiners of petroleum and sugar.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does this proposed amendment apply to corporations only, or does it apply to capital generally?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It applies to all associations, firms, or individuals whose transactions exceed $500,000 per annum, just as the clause relating to the refiners of petroleum and sugar applies to all persons, firms, and corporations refining sugar or petroleum. Under the tax to which I have just referred upon petroleum and sugar we have gained a revenue of $1,000,000 per annum, the provision for which is retained in this bill.

My purpose in this amendment is partly to obtain a revenue from this tax and also to provide the machinery for securing information which will enable Congress in the future to act intelligently upon this question. Publication of these returns by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is provided for, corresponding with the publication which is made of the statements of the banks by the Comptroller of the Currency and of the statements of the railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In those published reports data have been given in full detail which have been of assistance not only in framing legislation regarding banking and railroading, but also to those interests themselves, tending to develop the science of both.

This amendment is not offered in any hostile spirit. It will impose upon these great trusts and combinations a total tax not exceeding a million or two. At the same time it will enable us to obtain information upon which we can act intelligently in the future in legislation relating both to the taxation and regulation of these industrial combinations. There is hardly an economic writer who does not insist that publicity is the first thing to be secured.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary to discuss this amendment at any great length. It is true that there were two cases of special taxation provided for in the war-revenue bill. Those were put in by an amendment offered in the Senate, and when they came to the committee of conference they were acquiesced in. I remember making a remark at that time to my associates on the conference committee that they knew, and I knew, that if this tax should be imposed the people who were expected to pay it would simply put up the price of sugar and petroleum enough to reimburse themselves for the tax which they paid and allow them besides a handsome profit. No doubt such has been the case. I have no doubt that those interests that have been required to pay this tax have collected from their customers more than the amount which they have paid over to the United States in the form of taxation. But that is one of those taxes that there is no use trying to get out of the bill. It is in there. It has produced $1,000,000 a year. If it has been a burden to those interests, they can of course stand it better than anybody else.

Now, the gentleman from Nevada comes here with a proposition to tax every manufacturing concern in the country, not a fifth of 1 per cent, but a tenth of 1 per cent. And his idea of a trust or combination seems to be that where a manufacturing concern produces more than $500,000 worth of any given commodity during a year it is a trust or combination. I do not know but that this is as good a definition of a trust as that I heard given on the stump by a member of the gentleman's party, who declared his belief that "a trust is a combination of capital that we are not in." Of course, as a rule, when gentlemen undertake to define a "trust" they seem to have a very vague and indefinite idea, just as they have when they undertake to discuss it.

But, Mr. Chairman, here is a tax brought in on a bill which is intended to reduce taxation. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] says it will produce $1,000,000 or $2,000,000. Why, he has no conception of the vast business of this country when he speaks of one million or two millions as the product of such a tax. He has signed a report recommending that we ought to reduce taxation by $70,000,000, under the bill we are now considering, and yet he comes in and proposes to add a tax, as he says, of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000. He says one or two millions will be the amount of the revenue produced by the amendment, but I say five or ten, and we are both making mere guesses, because it may be more than either of us can imagine. And why, Mr. Chairman, should we adopt such a proposition? The idea seems to me to be preposterous. Do not gentlemen understand the object and spirit of the bill we are considering? We are removing war-revenue taxation as far as it is safe and possible to remove it at the present time. He says that these people do not pay taxes. Well, he is greatly mistaken about that. If he will come into the State of New York, I will show him that these people are paying just as large a proportion of taxes as anybody else.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I referred to revenue taxes.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). By the franchise-tax law, passed recently in New York, these people are paying really more than their share of taxes. That law works against the corporations.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. And that law is unconstitutional.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). It works against persons engaged in this class of business. By this amendment an additional hardship would be imposed.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment, for it is scarcely necessary to discuss it further, and all others that tend to increase taxation under the bill will be voted down.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended for five minutes longer for the purpose of enabling me to answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, I must object to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. NEWLANDS. You have made statements which are absolutely unfounded, and I want to answer them.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, well, they will go into the RECORD, and I will meet that issue when they come.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is exhausted and the question is on agreeing to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOMPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of subdivision 4, section 2, the following:

"Excepting, however, from the provisions of this subdivision Young Men's Christian Associations and social clubs and associations that do not conduct bowling alleys or billiard rooms for hire."

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That section 3 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "and sixty cents," in the first paragraph, after the words "three dollars," and before the words "per thousand on cigars," so that said section, as amended, shall read as follows:

"TOBACCO, CIGARS, CIGARETTES, AND SNUFF.

"SEC. 3. That there shall, in lieu of the tax now imposed by law, be levied and collected a tax of 12 cents per pound upon all tobacco and snuff, however prepared, manufactured, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale; and upon cigars and cigarettes which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or sale there shall be levied and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, namely, a tax of $3 per thousand on cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, and of $1 per thousand on cigars made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand; and a tax of $3.60 per thousand on cigarettes made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand; and $1.50 per thousand on cigarettes made of tobacco or any substitute therefor and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand: Provided, That in lieu of the 2, 3, and 4 ounce packages of tobacco and snuff now authorized by law there may be packages thereof containing 1¾ ounces, 2½ ounces, and 3½ ounces, respectively, and in addition to packages now authorized by law there may be packages containing 1 ounce of smoking tobacco.

"And there shall also be assessed and collected, with the exceptions hereinafter in this section provided for, upon all the articles enumerated in this section which were manufactured, imported, and removed from factory or custom-house before the passage of this act, bearing tax stamps affixed to such articles for the payment of the taxes thereon and canceled subsequent to April 14, 1898, and which articles were at the time of the passage of this act held and intended for sale by any person, a tax equal to one-half the difference between the tax already paid on such articles at the time of removal from the factory or custom-house and the tax levied in this act upon such articles.

"Every person having, on the day succeeding the date of the passage of this act, any of the above described articles on hand for sale in excess of 1,000 pounds of manufactured tobacco and 20,000 cigars or cigarettes, and which have been removed from the factory where produced or the custom-house through which imported, bearing the rate of tax payable thereon at the time of such removal, shall make a full and true return, under oath, in duplicate, of the quantity thereof, in pounds as to the tobacco and snuff and in thousands as to the cigars and cigarettes so held on that day, in such form and under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. Such returns shall be made and delivered to the collector or deputy collector for the proper internal-revenue district within thirty days after the passage of this act. One of said returns shall be retained by the collector and the other forwarded to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, together with the assessment list for the month in which the return is received, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess and collect the taxes found to be due, as other taxes not paid by stamps are assessed and collected.

"And for the expense connected with the assessment and collection of the taxes provided by this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be required, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the employment of such deputy collectors and other employees in the several collection districts in the United States, and such clerks and employees in the Bureau of Internal Revenue as may, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be necessary, for a period not exceeding one year, to be compensated for their services by such allowances as shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to employ ten agents, to be known and designated as internal-revenue agents, in addition to the number now authorized in section 3152 of the Revised Statutes as amended, and the existing provisions of law in all other respects shall apply to the duties, compensation, and expenses of such agents."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 4, strike out "twelve" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six."

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has expressed the desire that all propositions looking to an increase of revenue shall be voted down. I therefore hope the gentleman will not interpose serious objection to this proposition which will reduce revenue by decreasing the tax on manufactured tobacco and snuff.

The members of the House know that the tax prior to the war with Spain was 6 cents a pound on manufactured tobacco and snuff. The war-revenue act increased that to 12 cents a pound. The tobacco as it goes from the farmer's hands is worth, on an average, only about 6 cents a pound, and the present tax is double the value of the raw material which our farmers produce and place upon the market.

In 1890 the production of tobacco in this country was estimated by the Department to be a little over 500,000,000 pounds, and it was estimated to be worth something over 8 cents a pound to the producers. This of course includes the coarse tobacco of other States, as well as the bright tobacco of Virginia and Carolina. The last estimate prepared by the Agricultural Department for tobacco was for the crop of 1896, and placed the amount at 400,000,000 pounds and the average value at abont 6 cents a pound.

In my judgment the entire tax upon manufactured chewing tobacco should be removed in the interest of the great agricultural class engaged in the production of tobacco, but as we are revising the war-revenue law and have no reasonable grounds to hope for the abolishment of the entire tax upon tobacco by this Congress, I ask this House to fix the tax upon it at the rate that it carried prior to the war with Spain. I think this tax in any view acts injuriously upon the producer of tobacco just as a heavy tax upon beef and mutton would hurt the sheep and cattle growers. I do not attribute the entire decline in the price of leaf tobacco to taxation, though in my judgment these taxes are a great burden upon the farmers as well as the consumers of tobacco. Abolish the taxes on plug tobacco, and then farmers who so desire will manufacture their own tobacco, for the manufacture of plug tobacco is a simple process. Small manufactories will spring up in every tobacco-growing community. The tobacco trust will then have serious competition, and the result will be greatly beneficial to that great and worthy part of our population engaged in the cultivation of tobacco.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the people of this country that they are going to be relieved from so many of these stamp taxes. This bill destroys the vexatious taxes on notes, duebills, checks, drafts, deeds, mortgages, and medicines. The country will rejoice at this. Many of the stamp taxes are completely abolished in this bill. It reduces the taxes upon cigars and upon beer, but upon manufactured tobacco and snuff it offers no reduction whatever. Since it is admitted, or at least satisfactorily proven to my mind, that the revenues of the country can safely stand a reduction of $70,000,000, even upon the basis of the large estimates of next year's expenses sent us from the Executive Departments, it seems to me that the House can well afford, in the interest of agriculture, to reduce this tobacco tax to 6 cents, which will amount to a reduction in the revenues of about $9,000,000. The entire revenue collected during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, from manufactured tobacco and snuff was about $17,000,000, and this amendment that I offer will cut that amount in two, making the tax 6 cents instead of 12 cents per pound, and will accomplish a reduction of about $9,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, all I wish to say in reference to this is that the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that this little amendment, taking off half of this tax on tobacco and snuff, will make a reduction of $17,500,000, which would make the total reduction in the bill some $57,000,000. That, of course, would go beyond anything that the committee have believed could be done in the matter of the reduction of taxation. If we were going to make a big cut like that, we should not put it all on tobacco. There are other interests that we should look after. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken on the amendment, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KITCHIN demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 106.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 14, page 4, strike out "twelve" and insert "one."

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, if the view of the minority is correct, that this bill is scaled to meet the appropriations that will be made during its life, then this amendment would produce a deficiency. The proposition that the people of this country are to be called upon to contribute a revenue of $700,000,000 for the support of this Government means that when these figures are added to State and municipal taxation the people of this country, in upholding the spirit of taxation which involves the right to destroy, are approaching the line of confiscation.

My comment upon this bill is that it would be far better that you should have a deficiency than that you should have a surplus created by the hand of taxation. Reduce the expenses of this Government to the standard of proper economy and no such taxation as this will be necessary.

Let me instance to the majority of this House one of the avenues in which this money is to be expended. The President of the United States within a month appointed a gentleman in New Jersey to an office having a salary of $2,000 a year, an assistant collector in Jersey City. That gentleman openly stated that he would contribute that salary to the Republican committee of Hudson County in that State. Knowing the financial ability of that gentleman, I was certain that if he gave his time to the office he could not afford to make to the Republican committee a gift of the salary. So I investigated, and I call upon the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], whose name fathers this bill, to make further investigation. I investigated to find out what were the duties to be performed for that $2,000, and I say to you, sir, that during the next four years that man will not have one hour of labor to perform. During the past four years not one hour of labor has been performed in that office.

Now, if that instance, which is called into public notoriety by the fact that the occupant of the office makes a contribution of his entire salary to the Republican campaign fund—if that illustrates the manner in which the $700,000,000 is to be expended, then I warn you to remember that the people of this country have intelligence enough, when a few more flagrant instances of that kind have been called to their attention, to strike down this method of taxing them and appropriating their money. I am willing to vote every dollar necessary to subdue the Filipinos, every dollar necessary under the laws, with decent economy, to conduct every department of this Government; but I am unwilling to take from the people of this country money under an official sanction that is official robbery in order that it may contribute to partisan campaign funds. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The tax on tobacco before the war-revenue bill was 6 cents a pound. Under the war-revenue bill it is 12 cents a pound. The gentleman from New Jersey has found some man somewhere not earning a salary of $2,000, and to even up things he wants to take off $32,000,000 and make the tax 1 cent a pound on tobacco. I do not believe any gentleman on his side will vote with him.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. If there is $2,000 in one State of the size of New Jersey, multiply it by the Union and you will find it is about $32,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 9 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the word "Provided," and words following to the end of the section; so that the section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That in any and all cases where an adhesive stamp shall be used for denoting any tax imposed by this act, except as hereinafter provided, the person using or affixing the same shall write or stamp thereupon the initials of his name and the date upon which the same shall be attached or used, so that the same may not again be used. And if any person shall fraudulently make use of an adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this act without so effectually canceling and obliterating such stamp, except as before mentioned, he, she, or they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. A few moments ago, for the purpose of obtaining information, I asked the distinguished chairman who reported this bill if the $65,000,000 that will be left after the passage of this bill will be appropriated to the paying of our ship subsidy if it becomes a law. The gentleman's reply to that question was, I think, that we would save about a million of dollars in carrying the mail. That was his reply to the question. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to read on this point from the RECORD, page 57, from the elaborate speech made by Senator FRYE, who reports this bill to the Senate:

There is a limitation of $9,000,000; no more than that sum can be expended in any one year. So far as the cost to the Government is concerned, it is practically $7,500,000, because these ships are required to carry the mails without charge. I think last year the mail pay was about $1,400,000, and in a year or two years it will amount certainly to the $1,500,000.

So taking that, Mr. Chairman, as a criterion we have $7,500,000 which we pay to carry the mails, which cost us now $1,400,000, and that is what we will get for the ship-subsidy outlay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, this bill provides for the payment annually of $9,000,000, not simply for one year, but for twenty years. It does not even stop there; and we have the very best authority that can be had that it will not stop there. The Journal of Commerce of December 11, published in New York, says:

II. The limitation of the amount to be disbursed to $9,000,000 is a deception. At the hearing before the House committee the chairman, General GROSVENOR, said: "I presume that we may assume that if the $9,000,000 is exhausted and the result has been very beneficial that our successors will have intelligence enough to increase"——

"Undoubtedly," interrupted ex-Senator Edmunds, the attorney for the shipbuilders.

The North American of to-day contains the same statement.

Mr. Chairman, while in the Senate Mr. Edmunds was a great foe to the ship-subsidy bills we have had heretofore. He is now the employed counsel in this matter, the press states. Now, the point of my inquiry was, Why is it that such an insidious bill, such an insidious expense, should be hovering over this Congress without an explanation of the distinguished gentleman who reported this bill. Instead of him replying, I find the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]—the mouthpiece for everything upon that side of the House—rising up here and saying that I am endangering the proposed appropriation by the River and Harbor Committee for the Tennessee River. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Tennessee River project has been reported upon by the sworn officers of this Government, and I want to say that before a cent will be paid for the digging out of this river and opening her commerce to the world it will be sanctioned by a man of brains, courage, and intelligence—the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] of the Rivers and Harbors Committee—and his splendid colleagues. Let all this be as it may, I shall never bow to what I think is wrong, here or elsewhere, nor surrender principle for pelf for my people, who honor me with a high office I try fearlessly and conscientiously to fill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES. I want to say in conclusion——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 13 of said act is hereby amended by striking out the words "Schedule A of," and also by inserting in the first proviso, after the words "bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness," the words "or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act;" so that said section as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That any person or persons who shall register, issue, sell, or transfer, or who shall cause to be issued, registered, sold, or transferred, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in this act without the same being duly stamped, or having thereupon an adhesive stamp for denoting the tax chargeable thereon, and canceled in the manner required by law, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $50, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both, in the discretion of the court; and such instrument, document, or paper, not being stamped according to law, shall be deemed invalid and of no effect: Provided, That hereafter, in all cases where the party has not affixed to any instrument the stamp required by law thereon at the time of issuing, selling, or transferring the said bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock or of indebtedness, or any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act, and he or they, or any party having an interest therein, shall be subsequently desirous of affixing such stamp to said instrument, or, if said instrument be lost, to a copy thereof, he or they shall appear before the collector of internal revenue of the proper district, who shall, upon the payment of the price of the proper stamp required by law, and of a penalty of $10, and, where the whole amount of the tax denoted by the stamp required shall exceed the sum of $50, on payment also of interest at the rate of 6 per cent on said tax from the day on which such stamp ought to have been affixed, affix the proper stamp to such bond, debenture, certificate of stock or of indebtedness, or copy, and note upon the margin thereof the date of his so doing and the fact that such penalty has been paid; and the same shall thereupon be deemed and held to be as valid to all intents and purposes as if stamped when made or issued: And provided further, That where it shall appear to said collector upon oath or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any such instrument has not been duly stamped at the time of making or issuing the same by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity, and without any willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, then and in such case, if such instrument, or, if the original be lost, a copy thereof, duly certified by the officer having charge of any records in which such original is required to be recorded or otherwise duly proven to the satisfaction of the collector, shall, within twelve calendar months after the making or issuing thereof, be brought to the said collector of internal revenue to be stamped, and the stamp tax chargeable thereon shall be paid, it shall be lawful for the said collector to remit the penalty aforesaid and to cause such instrument to be duly stamped. And when the original instrument or a certified or duly proven copy thereof, as aforesaid, duly stamped so as to entitle the same to be recorded, shall be presented to the clerk, register, recorder, or other officer having charge of the original record, it shall be lawful for such officer, upon the payment of the fee legally chargeable for the recording thereof, to make a new record thereof, or to note upon the original record the fact that the error or omission in the stamping of said original instrument has been corrected pursuant to law; and the original instrument or such certified copy, or the record thereof, may be used in all courts and places in the same manner and with like effect as if the instrument had been originally stamped: And provided further, That in all cases where the party has not affixed the stamp required by law upon any such instrument issued, registered, sold, or transferred at a time when and at a place where no collection district was established, it shall be lawful for him or them, or any party having an interest therein, to affix the proper stamp thereto, or, if the original be lost, to a copy thereof. But no right acquired in good faith before the stamping of such instrument, or copy thereof, as herein provided, if such record be required by law, shall in any manner be affected by such stamping as aforesaid."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, simply to perfect the text.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 21, page 10, after the word "copy," the following: "or instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever mentioned in Schedule A of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. In line 1, page 11, where the word "and" should appear it is "ana." I ask an amendment correcting that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will correct the typographical error.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That Schedule A of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SCHEDULE A.

"STAMP TAXES.

"Bonds, debentures, or certificates of indebtedness issued after the 1st day of July, A. D. 1898, by any association, company, or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock by any such association, company, or corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents, and on all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries or transfers of shares or certificates of stock in any association, company, or corporation, whether made upon or shown by the books of the association, company, or corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, or to secure the future payment of money or for the future transfer of any stock, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents: Provided, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the company the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases of an agreement to sell or where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers. And any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale, or who shall in pursuance of any such sale deliver any such stock, or evidence of the sale of any such stock or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, any products or merchandise at any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, either for present or future delivery, for each $100 in value of said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 1 cent, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 1 cent: Provided, That on every sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell as aforesaid there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale. And every such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale or agreement to sell shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person or persons liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person or persons, who shall make any such sale or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, or who shall, in pursuance of such sale, or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, deliver any such products or merchandise without a bill, memorandum, or other evidence thereof as herein required, or who shall deliver such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale, or agreement to sell, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both, at the discretion of the court.

"Freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such (except express companies, or persons, corporations, or companies doing an exclusive express business) to issue to the shipper or consignor, or his agent, or person from whom any goods are accepted for transportation a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included; and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as is in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifests, or other memorandum, and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of 1 cent: Provided, That but one bill of lading shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment. Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum, as herein provided, shall subject such railroad or steamboat company, carrier, or corporation or person to a penalty of $50 for each offense, and no such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum shall be used in evidence unless it shall be duly stamped as aforesaid.

"Certificate of profits, or any certificate or memorandum showing an interest in the property or accumulations of any association, company, or corporation, and on all transfers thereof, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents.

"Entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at any custom-house, either for consumption or warehousing, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents.

"Exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500 in value, 50 cents.

"Exceeding $500 in value, $1.

"Entry for the withdrawal of any goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I desire to offer has been sent up to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 17, page 15, all after the word "freight" to and including line 13 on page 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Express and freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, to make within the first fifteen days of each month a sworn statement to the collector of internal revenue in each of their respective districts, stating the number of shipments received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included, for which any charge whatsoever has been made, and for each of such shipments received for carriage and transportation the said railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation it is to act as such, shall pay a tax of 1 cent: Provided, That but one payment of said tax shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment."

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment in substance contains the language used in reference to the telephone companies, and in the original draft of the bill there was no reason, I submit, why the same language should not have been used in reference to telegraph companies, express companies, and railroad companies that was used in reference to telephone companies. This amendment in substance requires express companies within the first fifteen days of the month to file a statement of all the bills issued by that company and to pay the 1 cent on each bill.

Now, so far the express companies and telegraph companies have escaped their patriotic duty to pay a part of this war tax, and I submit that it is a humiliation to this House that we can not pass a law which will compel these great corporations to bear their fair share of the burdens of taxation. I want to urge, too, that the president of one of these great companies was a member of the other branch of this legislative body where this particular language was put into the original bill, and this company was notified from the beginning not to pay any of these taxes, but the railroad companies and other express companies rose to their patriotic duty and paid the tax and submitted to the exaction.

Now, I appeal to this House to compel these express companies and telegraph companies to do what the railroad companies voluntarily did do, obey the law, and they can not escape from this act. It is an act introduced into this House by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DAVIDSON], and a careful consideration will show that when this amendment is adopted these express companies will be compelled to pay 1 penny on every bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why not require all corporations to make a similar return to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and collect the tax if we need the revenue, and if we do not, why impose it at all?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Because the others can be caught in the usual way, but this fish is so slippery that we have to have a net of this kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. The gentleman is dealing with the express question as if there were but the large express companies. I would like to call his attention to the fact that in some sections of the country there are many small express companies, and a tax of 1 cent on each package is ruinous to those companies.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. In my city there are three express companies, and two of them pay their tax voluntarily; but the United States Express Company only holds out. The small express companies are willing to pay the tax.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Willing to pay a tax of this amount?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, if they are not willing to, they ought to be made to pay.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if we impose this tax on the express companies, they will simply add it to their rate of freight. They will do so because they can not pay the big tax that would be exacted from them and still continue to do business. This is so especially of one of the great companies doing business in this country. It is too severe a tax on them for their business to stand it. They would simply put it back in additional charges on the people who send packages by express.

Now, the railroad companies ship in large quantities and not in small packages. There are hundreds and thousands of express packages in comparison to the same weight in packages shipped by freight, and which go in the cars. A receipt is given for a carload, or it may be a half a dozen carloads, and 1 cent is paid upon that. As I understand, the average of express packages is 25 cents, and a tax of 1 cent amounts to 4 per cent on the gross receipts; and what business is there that can stand a tax of 4 per cent on its gross receipts?

The same is true in regard to telegraph companies.

Now, the committee considered all this. They considered the fact that this tax was not grevious or burdensome to the railroad companies, while if we tried to put it onto the express companies they would be forced to add it to their rates in order to get it out of the consumers. Then there were the small express companies in the United States, companies that started in to pay the tax instead of charging it to the customers, when they found that they would be ruined by the amount of the tax.

I was sorry that the gentleman from Michigan should have made a personal allusion to anybody's business in the Senate in connection with this matter. It was an unparliamentary allusion—alluding to a Senator and his action, and saying that he is interested in a particular direction upon a particular bill—and I hope the gentleman will not be guilty of it again.

I hope the amendment will not prevail, for we are not raising taxation, but are reducing it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. The amendment which I intended to offer when I rose a few minutes ago is covered by the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH].

The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. PAYNE] says that these taxes are paid by the consumer. I concur with him. If that is true, I can see no justification for retaining the tax on bills of lading for freight and eliminating it upon bills of lading for express packages. The masses of the people—poor people, business people, the great majority of the people—do their shipping by freight. On the other hand, valuable packages, which are shipped mostly by the rich—packages containing jewelry, diamonds, statuary, and other articles of luxury, or packages containing considerable sums of money—go by express. Yet we have here a proposition, supported by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, that the tax imposed upon railroad companies doing a freight business shall be retained, while the tax on the express companies shall be remitted.

When this question was up before, it was urged that the reason for relieving the express companies was because they refused to pay the tax like the railroad companies, the steamboat companies, and other common carriers. The express companies made the people pay the tax, the others paid it themselves. Mr. Chairman, the law imposing this taxation on steamboats and railroads and other common carriers is identical in language with the law imposing taxation upon the express companies. All of these except express companies have recognized the law and put the obligation upon themselves and paid this tax. They did not try to collect it from the people.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The telegraph companies did.

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; but they are in a different section of this bill. The express companies fought this matter in the courts, and I believe the courts determined the companies could collect the tax out of the people, the language of the law not specifying whether the tax should be paid by the company or by the shipper.

I concur with the view of the gentleman who has offered this amendment, that as everybody else has paid this tax except several express companies, those companies ought also to be made to pay it. Either you ought to abolish the law and not leave it in operation upon freight transportation, or you ought to leave it in operation upon both the freight and the express business. I say that these two branches of business ought to stand together, with the same chances before the law, and bearing the same taxation. There is no reason why a single method of transportation should be separated or isolated from all others and relieved from taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the class of goods going by express are not as much entitled to relief as the class of goods going by freight, whether going by steamboat, railroad, or by any other class of common carrier. I submit to this House that when taxation is relieved, it ought to be relieved justly; and when retained, it ought to be retained justly. I can see no excuse for remitting the tax upon one method of transportation, and continuing it upon all other methods.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] has said that the express companies have not paid this tax.

Mr. SWANSON. One express company, I understand, did not. The United States Express Company, I believe, has had a suit in court on this question.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I am aware of the fact that six of the great express companies of the country have not paid the tax imposed by the war-revenue act. But in the eastern part of the country—I speak more particularly of the eastern parts of Massachusetts—there are 470 small express companies, every one of which has been compelled to pay this tax because they could not in practice impose it upon the people who dealt with them. The payment of this tax has been a great burden upon those companies. Its continuance would absolutely ruin them; it would drive them out of existence.

This would mean to the communities interested the loss of the competition which we now have between those smaller companies and the American Express, the Adams Express, and all the great express companies, because, as the gentleman can very well see, the tax of 1 cent upon transportation which pays the express company only 15 to 25 cents on a package is a very much greater burden than the same tax on transportation which may perhaps extend across the continent and pay to the express company a large sum. Therefore this tax has been upon those small companies oppressive to an extent which has proved absolutely ruinous. The companies have only continued in existence because they have expected relief. I sought to obtain such relief for them in the last session of Congress by the introduction of a bill which proposed to exempt from the operation of this tax the smaller express companies—the individual carriers—such express companies as those operating between Boston and Worcester and Lynn and Haverhill and Providence. If you adopt this amendment, you absolutely destroy 470 small companies, and you leave our communities to the unrestrained domination of the great express companies of the country.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. How many of those small companies have gone out of business by reason of this taxation?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Not one, so far as I know.

Mr. BURKE of Texas. Then they are still engaged in this business?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Because they have been expecting relief from this taxation. A burden which can be borne for a time becomes intolerable if it is permanent. I can assure the gentleman from Texas that they can not continue business under the schedule now proposed.

Mr. SWANSON. Can not the gentleman obtain what he desires—the saving of the small companies, which are being ruined in consequence of this tax—by an amendment exempting from the tax express companies not engaged in interstate commerce? Such a proposition would take care of your home companies.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. That would undoubtedly relieve the trouble in my part of the country. But I say in all fairness to the gentleman from Virginia that while I would be glad to offer such an amendment, I do not know enough about the operation of the tax upon the great express companies to vote for this provision, even if it were so amended.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow an interruption for a question?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand you to say that as to the smaller express companies they are the only competitors with the larger companies?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you think it fair that the different companies coming in competition with each other should have different privileges, one being taxed and the other untaxed?

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Certainly not.

But, Mr. Chairman, I was going on to say that if the tax is to be imposed at all (and I am not in favor of it on the showing that I have seen, and as I understand the question) on the express companies it should be imposed upon the receipts and not upon the individual transactions of transportation, because the smaller companies in most cases get not over 25 cents for each package that they carry——

Mr. McCALL. And sometimes even as low as 6 cents.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; as my colleague suggests, even as low as 6 cents. I am very glad he made the suggestion, because he understands this matter thoroughly, and I hope that he will take the floor in the discussion of the amendment.

The ad valorem weight, Mr. Chairman, of such a tax as is proposed here would be absolutely crushing to these small companies. Every one of the men engaged in this business with whom I have conversed has shown me that they could not continue their business. They could not endure a tax such as that proposed here and hope to operate the business which they have already built up. The whole tax has been annoying, vexatious, and burdensome to the people when they have dealt with large companies, because the tax has been shifted upon them by the action of the companies, sustained by the opinion of the Supreme Court. In whatever form you levy it the companies will still shift the burden to the people. To the small companies, who have carried the burden themselves, it has been a calamity which, if continued, means destruction.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I entirely agree with the gentleman from Michigan in the amendment which he has proposed. I think it absolutely unfair to entirely exempt the express companies from all taxation while retaining the tax on the operations of the railroad companies.

I realize the fact, of course, that the rate of taxation is the same in both instances, but it operates against the express companies unfairly, as it imposes the same tax of 1 cent on the bill of lading of a package carried by an express company as is imposed on the bill of lading of goods carried in bulk by a railroad company; the price received by the express company for carriage being, for instance, 10 cents, whilst the price received by the railroad company for freight in bulk may be hundreds of dollars. The packages carried by the express companies are generally small; and so the tax bears more heavily and harshly on the gross receipts of the express companies than upon those of the railroad companies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand it is a fact that the railroad companies have never contested the tax or sought to shift it to the shippers, whilst the express companies have.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Is it not a fact that the express companies get better rates than the railroad companies?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That may be.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. They get 25 cents for carrying a package for which the railroad companies get only 1 cent.

Mr. TAWNEY. But the gentleman should remember that the express companies pay the railroad companies for carrying their packages.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. That is true, but the amount is very small in comparison to the difference I have shown.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that this tax bears more heavily on the express company than the railroad company, and this arises from the fact that in the case of the railroad company the bill of lading generally covers great bulk.

It seems to me that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] that the tax should be proportioned to the receipts instead of to the number of packages, or the suggestion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] that the tax should only apply to express companies engaged in interstate trade, would do away with this great hardship.

The difficulty is that in a great many of these amendments vexatious methods in the mode of taxation have been seized upon by the majority as a reason for eliminating the tax entirely upon certain forms of wealth. What I contend for is that they should have exercised their ingenuity in suggesting some other form of taxation of those forms of wealth which would not be so vexatious and oppressive as the methods complained of, and I think a tax on express freight can be devised which will not be burdensome and which can not be easily shifted to the shippers.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH], as I understand it, would not relieve the patrons of the express companies from the payment of the tax. It does not propose to restrict the express companies in the charges which they may make for the service which they perform, and it would be entirely feasible for them to make such an increased charge as would compensate them for the tax which they pay.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. If the gentleman will permit me, I inadvertently omitted a part of my amendment, which I desire to have added after the proviso. It is—

Provided further, That such statements shall show that such companies have not collected such tax from the shipper.

That meets the gentleman's point.

Mr. MCCALL. The gentleman would hardly undertake to have Congress pass a law fixing the rate which express companies should charge for rendering the service, and that is what the gentleman would practically require us to do if we made this legislation effective. But I desire especially to speak a word concerning the small local express companies that do business in the vicinity of large cities. I live in a town about 8 miles out of Boston. A large part of the things consumed in that town are brought there by local expressmen, many of whom run livery stables, and they bring the goods often in wagons and deliver them at the rate sometimes of 6 or 7 cents per package by the hundred packages. These expressmen pay the tax themselves. A tax of 1 cent upon each one of those packages amounts to from 10 to 15 per cent of the gross receipts, and in some cases as high as 40 per cent of the net receipts. That is, the Government forces itself into partnership with the expressman, requires him to do all the heavy lifting and the work, and then takes practically one-half of his profits. Now that, to my certain knowledge, is a most oppressive tax, and it seems to me that we should not exact it. I think, generally, that the express tax, where the people are required to pay a cent upon each package, is a very vexatious tax, very much like the tax upon telegrams.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again read.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the proviso which I referred to a moment ago, and which has not been read from the desk.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to emphasize the statement made by my colleagues from Massachusetts regarding the hardships that have resulted to the express companies in and around Boston from the imposition of the tax on express packages in the war-revenue measure, and I wish to state to my colleagues on this side of the House that the small express companies doing business in and around Boston are of great benefit to the ordinary laboring man. They carry express packages for 5, 10, and 15 cents, and if this tax should be carried in this bill in the manner proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] it would drive those small express companies out of business.

We are reducing the revenue, not increasing it. There is no reason why this tax upon express packages, which, when carried by the large express companies, is paid by the shipper, and when carried by the smaller companies is paid by the company itself, should be continued. It is farcical to witness the manner in which this tax upon express packages is carried out. We do not need this money in the Treasury, and I hope this unjust and unnecessary burden upon the people will be voted down by the House.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to move an amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the gentleman from Michigan has withdrawn his amendment, and I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I did not withdraw the amendment. I simply said I would not offer the last proviso, which I stated I would offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I move to amend the amendment by inserting this proviso:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to express companies whose annual receipts do not exceed $100,000.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to express companies whose annual receipts do not exceed $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I will accept that amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 82, noes 106.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 94; noes 104.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH and Mr. SWANSON. Tellers!

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 123; noes 106.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

The Clerk proceeded to read section 8.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12394, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4165. An act granting a pension to Dora Renfro—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4073. An act granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Edwards—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4556. An act granting an increase of pension to William Fox—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4022. An act granting a pension to William B. Caldwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the present Congress a plan and estimate for the improvement of Burlington Bay, Two Harbors, in the State of Minnesota, based upon the examination and survey heretofore made of said bay—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

RESIGNATION OF COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 5, 1900.

Hon. D. B. HENDERSON,
Speaker House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as member of following committees: Elections No. 1, Enrolled Bills, and Ventilation and Acoustics.

Yours, very respectfully,

E. L. HAMILTON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, these resignations will be accepted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following committee assignments:

To the Committee on Enrolled Bills, Mr. HOFFECKER, of Delaware;

To the Committee on Elections No. 1, Mr. PEARSON, of North Carolina;

To Ventilation and Acoustics, Mr. WOODS, of California.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS FROM THE FILES.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MOON obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of P. R. Albert and I. Noa, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMAS of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House a change of reference of Document No. 174, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of appropriation for increase for salaries of United States consul at Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Without objection, this change will be made. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to give notice that it is the intention to go on with this bill the first thing in the morning (as several gentlemen have asked me that question), the other order being subject to that. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with draft of a bill, documents relating to cession of lands to Wyoming State in return for cession of lands for enlargement of Fort Mackenzie Military Reservation—to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of New Jersey, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of southern California, praying for the removal of the control of the forestry service from the General Land Office, Department of the Interior, to the Division of Forestry, Department of Agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the city council of Thief River Falls, Minn., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Red Lake River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 20 citizens of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Owatonna, Minn., praying for the repeal of the revenue stamp tax on legacies, so as to relieve the Pillsbury Academy, at that place, from the payment of said tax on a legacy recently left that institution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue tax on insurance policies, conveyances, mortgages, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of St. Paul, Minn., praying that an appropriation be made for certain improvements at Fort Snelling, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Red Lake Falls, Nelson, St. James, Young America, Morton, Tenney, Brownsville, and West Concord, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called parcels-post bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of J. L. Atkinson and 82 other citizens of Bayfield, Wis., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Wisconsin State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, praying for the enactment of the so-called Grout bill, regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Church of Christ, and the Congregational Church, and of sundry citizens, all of Platteville, in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Army canteens and to the inhabitants of the new island possessions of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3680) granting a pension to Mary Elizabeth Moore, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9835) to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, to report it with amendments. I reserve the right to offer certain amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

DAVID S. SNYDER.

Mr. ALLEN. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9043) granting an increase of pension to David S. Snyder, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a House bill, and in view of the fact that the applicant is some 83 or 84 years old I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of David S. Snyder, late captain of Company K, Forty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced a bill (S. 5197) granting a pension to John D. Stoner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5198) granting a pension to Nathaniel M. Gregg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURLEY introduced a bill (S. 5199) to regulate the practice in the United States courts as to appeals and writs of error; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5200) for the relief of the estate of Henry Von Balsan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PRITCHARD introduced a bill (S. 5201) granting a pension to Samuel F. Radford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 5202) for the reduction of interest penalties on arrears in taxes and special assessments in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5203) to provide a list of fees appertaining to the probate court of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5204) granting an increase of pension to John Scott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5205) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Ottey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 5206) for the relief of George F. Brott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5207) for the relief of William A. Gordon, administrator of the estate of William D. C. Murdock, deceased;

A bill (S. 5208) for the relief of Gotlieb Feldmeyer (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 5209) for the relief of Milton F. Colburn, administrator of the estate of Gilbert Colburn, deceased (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. MCENERY introduced a bill (S. 5210) for the relief of Mrs. Dosite Broussard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5211) to fix the compensation of district superintendents in the Life-Saving Service; which was read twice by its title, and, with an accompanying extract from the report of the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, which was ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SULLIVAN introduced a bill (S. 5212) for the relief of the heirs of Rachael Sloan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims from $3,000 to $4,000, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JENNIE L. POTTER.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Jennie L. Potter, widow of George F. Potter, deceased, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the document known as the Documentary History of the Constitution of the United States 7,000 copies be printed, of which number 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the use of the Department of State.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR DAVIS.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, the 12th day of January next, at the close of the routine morning business, I shall submit resolutions commemorative of the life and services of my late distinguished colleague, Senator Davis. I wish also to say that I shall ask the Senate at that time to suspend all other business for the purpose of paying tribute to his memory.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 281) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of said month, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the joint resolution we usually pass at the beginning of a holiday recess. I ask that it may be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of December, 1900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MICHAEL DEMPSEY.

Mr. MCENERY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 10834) granting an increase of pension to Michael Dempsey.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Michael Dempsey, late of Company B, Seventh United States Infantry, Seminole Indian War, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT POLICE COURT PRACTICE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PRITCHARD. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a moment.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 122) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the criminal laws of the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1898.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. PRITCHARD. There is a report. The bill simply provides that when parties are arrested they may put up collateral instead of personal security or give bond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "court," to strike out the words "or by depositing money as collateral security with the appropriate officer at the said police court or the station keeper of the police precinct within which such person may be apprehended" and to insert:

Or by depositing money as collateral security in such amount as the court, the assistant attorney for the United States, the special assistant attorney for the District of Columbia, or the lieutenant or acting lieutenant of police of the precinct in which the person is detained may determine with the clerk of the police court, or the lieutenant, or acting lieutenant of police, or the station keeper of the police precinct within which such person may be apprehended.

So as to read:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend the criminal laws of the District of Columbia," approved July 8, 1898, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the same shall read:

"That every person charged with an offense triable in the police court of the District of Columbia may give security for his appearance for trial or for further hearing either by giving bond to the satisfaction of the court or by depositing money as collateral security in such amount as the court," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not certain that I heard the bill accurately. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if it provides for immediate forfeiture to the United States or to the District if a defendant fails to appear? In other words, does it put a surety by the deposit of money in a position where he can not retake his money if, after a default by the defendant to appear, he produces him?

Mr. PRITCHARD. It does not.

Mr. SPOONER. That is guarded?

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; that is guarded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF MINING LAWS TO SALINE LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3313) extending the mining laws to saline lands. It is a bill only three or four lines long.

Mr. LODGE. I will not object to the bill if it does not lead to debate, but I shall after that press the motion for an executive session.

Mr. STEWART. If it leads to debate, of course it will go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read to the Senate in full for its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That possession and title to salt deposits and saline lands in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, and in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona shall be acquired under the provisions of the mining laws governing the acquisition of placer claims.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is a measure which, it seems to me, requires considerable consideration, and I object to its consideration this morning. I do not know that I shall continue my objection in the future after I have examined it.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will examine it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It seems to cover a very broad question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 17, 1900, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 15, 1900.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

James Edmund Boyd, of North Carolina, to be United States district judge for the western district of North Carolina, vice Hamilton G. Ewart, who failed of confirmation. James Edmund Boyd was temporarily appointed to the above-named position July 11, 1900, during the recess of the Senate.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

Albert Wheelon, of Pierre, S. Dak., to be register of the land office at Pierre, S. Dak., vice Joseph Donahue, resigned.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Henry E. Cutting, of Pierre, S. Dak., to be receiver of public moneys at Pierre, S. Dak., vice David S. Harper, resigned.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Infantry arm.

Second Lieut. James Hanson, Fourteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant, December 7, 1900, vice Smith, Fourth Infantry, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 15, 1900.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSIONER.

Judson C. Clements, of Georgia, to be an interstate commerce commissioner for the term of six years from the 1st of January, 1901.

INDIAN AGENT.

Nimrod S. Walpole, of Pueblo, Colo., to be agent for the Indians of the Jicarilla Agency in New Mexico.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 15, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A DELEGATE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Delegate from Hawaii is present and desires to be sworn in. The Clerk will report the credentials to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

CERTIFICATE OF ELECTION.

TERRITORY OF HAWAII, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER.

I, Sanford B. Dole, governor of the Territory of Hawaii, do hereby certify that Robert W. Wilcox was, on the 6th day of November, 1900, duly elected a Delegate for the unexpired term of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the Territory of Hawaii, at the capitol in Honolulu, this 30th day of November, A. D. 1900.

[SEAL.] SANFORD B. DOLE.

By the governor:

HENRY E. COOPER,
Secretary of the Territory.

Thereupon Mr. Wilcox appeared at the bar of the House, and the oath was administered to him by the Speaker.

WAR-REVENUE REDUCTION.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 12394.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 12394.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HEPBURN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 12394, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, at this point I would like to offer an amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that the section be read through.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before this section is read, I wish to offer the amendment because the amendment I have will come in as a new section, and it should come in before the tax on legacies.

Mr. PAYNE. We have already passed that and commenced to read the following section.

Mr. NEWLANDS. We have passed the section, but I wish to put a section in between.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is competent for the gentleman to do that. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Do I understand the Chair that the amendment is in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it is a proposition to insert a new section.

Mr. PAYNE. But we are in the midst of a section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada was on his feet when the Clerk began to read, but the Chair did not know what his purpose was.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the section should be first completed. I suggest that we complete reading the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the reading began in the middle of a section.

Mr. PAYNE. The Clerk had read a part of the section last night and we stopped in the middle of a section.

The CHAIRMAN. On examination the Chair finds that a portion of the section was read last night, and, under the rules of the committee, we shall have to finish the reading of the section.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will offer it after the section is read.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to say a moment ago that we had entered upon Schedule B when we adjourned last night. I thought at the time we adjourned that we were discussing the taxation on express packages. I want to ask that an amendment be inserted in Schedule B beginning with line 6, and I supposed that was where we commenced this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that to be a parliamentary inquiry. On consultation with the Clerk, the Chair finds that the reading of section 9 had progressed to line 17 on page 17. So it is necessary, under the rules, that the reading of that section be completed before amendments are received.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If we had gone to that extent in the bill, how does it happen that we were debating the tax on express packages?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must answer that himself; it is not a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded and completed the reading of section 9 of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the word "ten," in line 22 on page 17, and insert "five," and strike out the word "ten" in line 9, page 18, and insert "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, line 22, strike out "ten" and insert "five."
On page 18, in line 9, strike out the word "ten" and insert "five."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, two years ago, when this bill was originally enacted into law, an exemption on the inheritance tax was made of $10,000. In other words, if the estate did not amount to more than $10,000, it was exempt from an inheritance tax. If the estate amounted to more than $10,000, $10,000 of the estate was exempt. I think the clear intention of Congress was to make one exemption of $10,000 in each estate. But since the law was originally enacted the case of Knowlton vs. Moore has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and the decision will be found in volume 178 of the reports of that court. In that case the court has held that the exemption as well as the rate applies to the legacy and not to the estate. If it applied to the estate, there would be but one exemption of $10,000; but if it applies to the legacy, then if a man leaves an estate of a million dollars to ten persons there are ten exemptions of $10,000 each, amounting in all to $100,000.

Now, in case of an average estate, where there are four or five legacies, there occurs—not, as I believe, according to the original intention of Congress, but under the construction of the act by the Supreme Court—an exemption of $40,000 or $50,000. I believe that is too great an exemption. I believe in a reasonable exemption. I believe in exempting the very poor from an inheritance tax. But if we are going to levy an inheritance tax, why should there be this great discrimination? The tax is progressive; the very rich have to pay a great deal more in the way of inheritance tax than the very poor, because the rate increases.

If we reduce this exemption in the case of the inheritance tax to $5,000 on each legacy, then, under this amendment, in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court, there will be in the case of an average family of four or five persons an exemption of at least $20,000 or $25,000. This, I say, is a sufficient exemption in the case of any estate. When a man leaves more than $20,000 or $25,000 to his family his legacies should bear some proportion of this tax. It is for this reason I approve this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I never believed that Congress ought to have gone out of its way to impose this tax. Nearly every State in the Union has a tax upon succession. I do not know that all the States have, but in most of the States it is a pretty good tax, especially in some of the Eastern States. I thought that the taxation of this kind imposed by the States was enough; that we ought to have left this matter to the States. Therefore I would have been very glad to have seen this tax, when proposed as a Senate amendment, go out in the committee of conference. I did not think the Government needed this tax.

Now, here is a proposition not to do away with the tax, but to make it more severe. I thought in conference that under a proper interpretation of the language of the law the tax would apply to legacies going to single individuals, and would exempt all legacies of less than $10,000. The courts have finally held, and I think very correctly, that that is a correct interpretation of the act. The law does not exempt a legacy of $10,000 or any larger sum; it simply exempts all legacies under $10,000. A man may leave an estate of a million dollars; in his will he may have undertaken to help some individual to an amount less than $10,000, and if he keeps within this limit, no matter how numerous may be the individuals whom the testator thus undertakes to help, the legacies are free from taxation by the United States. I think there ought to be freedom from taxation to at least this extent, that we ought not to reduce the limit of exemption to $5,000. As I have said, legacies of $10,000 and more pay the tax.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The court, in the case to which I referred, has expressly decided that a legacy of $10,000 is exempt; that the tax is paid upon amounts exceeding $10,000.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not so understand. As I understand, the tax does not begin to operate until you reach legacies between $10,000 and $25,000.

I am not in favor of reducing this limit to $5,000. I do not believe that under present circumstances the Treasury of the United States is driven to the necessity of going about and assessing taxation upon these small legacies. As we all understand, this tax is assessed according to the degree of consanguinity of the legatee in relation to the testator; the tax is increased as we remove from the nearest of kin of the testator until we reach the man who is no kin to him, in which case the tax is very severe. The committee believe that in this respect the law should remain as it is, unless you strike out the whole tax.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. I will not detain the Committee of the Whole at any great length. In my opening remarks on this amendment, I have said about all I intended to say. I merely desire now to take issue with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] as to the effect of the decision to which I have referred. It is a long decision, and I can not at this moment put my finger upon that portion which decides that the exemption applies to the legacy, not to the estate. But there can be no question that such is the effect of the decision. That point has been distinctly decided in the case of Knowlton vs. Moore. I think it was undoubtedly the intention of Congress that the exemption of $10,000 should apply to the estate; but the court has held that it applies to the legacy. Therefore if an estate amounts to $100,000 and there are ten legacies of $10,000 each, every particle of the estate is exempt from taxation. I do not agree with the gentleman from New York. I believe that some taxation of this kind——

Mr. PAYNE. What difference does it make whether the estate amounts to $10,000,000 or only $10,000? The exemption is for the benefit of the legatee, not the man who is dead.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it certainly makes some difference to the Government, and there is a distinct difference in point of principle.

Mr. PAYNE. The Government got along for a hundred years without this kind of taxation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is true, Mr. Chairman; but the Government of the United States did many things in the past—committed many wrongs—that might be corrected in the future.

The gentleman from New York and myself differ radically on this proposition. I do not believe in going out gunning for the accumulated wealth of the country. I think it is entitled to the protection of the Government, and no man on the floor of this House, under all of the circumstances, would vote to render that protection more readily and quickly than myself. But I say that almost from the very beginning of this Government down to the present time the accumulated wealth of the country has been compelled to bear but a very small proportion of its share in governmental expenditures in the way of taxation.

Now, this is a question where the accumulated wealth must pay some proportion of the taxes and obligations of the Government, and when you go to levy a tax of this character your first effort should be to make it as uniform and harmonious upon all classes of citizens as possible. It would undoubtedly be very unjust to go into the poor man's pocket and take a part of the trifling legacy he may receive, because the person from whom he received it and he himself have been compelled to pay indirectly their fair share of the taxes. But when you make the exemption $5,000 on each man who receives a legacy, it reaches that class of persons most generally who would be entitled to exemption, and it is only just to make this distinction or exemption plain and equal all over the land.

I think that if Congress had understood, when the act was passed, that the exemption would amount to from forty thousand to fifty thousand dollars, as has been the case, they would not have gone so far as that. I seek to cut it down to $5,000, and the average of the whole would amount to $25,000 exemption, instead of $50,000, as now, and covers all persons entitled to equity in the matter, and I think the amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 45, noes 83.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 14, page 17, and in line 11, page 20, after the word "art," the words:

"And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898."

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is more to declare the meaning of the original act, and especially section 29 of that act, than for any other purpose. The controversy which has arisen on the part of the collectors of internal revenue throughout the country originates in the unfortunate use of the word "passing" in section 29 of that act. This section provides, in substance, that any person having charge of legacies or distributive shares, as executor or administrator, where the whole amount of such personal property shall exceed the sum of $10,000 in actual value, passing after the passage of this act, shall be taxed, and so on.

Now, the word "passing" as used in that connection has led to great confusion in regard to the collection of this tax. Manifestly it was not the purpose of Congress to pass a retroactive act. It was not the purpose of Congress to levy a tax upon an estate where the testator or intestate had died before the passage of the original act. But in some cases, as you can well understand, a portion of the distributive shares, or legacies, would not in point of fact pass to the legatees until after the original act had been passed, and hence the confusion that has arisen in regard to the meaning of the act.

This word "passing' is used in the law books frequently. It is said that personal property passes to the executor; that the real estate passes to the heirs, and so on, in many instances; and possibly the framers of the original bill had that in mind. But it was never the intention of Congress to make the act retroactive, and the courts have held that it was not to be assumed as the intention of the legislature to make an act retroactive unless that provision was expressly stated in the law itself. Manifestly the law should not apply to the estate of a deceased person who died prior to the passage of the original act. But that, as I have said, is a disputed question, some collectors claiming that it does and others holding that it does not. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not see fit to attempt to undertake to bring a suit under the original law as it stands, and asks the passage of this supplementary legislation.

I think the Committee on Ways and Means are content with the amendment and will not oppose it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PAYNE. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to this amendment. I have a letter in my hand from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he informs me that the office has been holding that these estates were liable to the tax. It creates a great deal of confusion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to take the floor in opposition to the proposition. My objection to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] is the same that I expressed a moment ago. It is merely a still further means of increasing the exemption under this law. Now, the tax that is levied by the Government is not a tax on the dead man. It is not a tax on his estate because it is found in his hands at the time of his death. It is a tax levied on the privilege of the passage of that estate from him to his heirs or legatees. Now, is there any reason why we should exempt the legatees of an estate from paying this tax that the Government has said is just and right, simply because the deceased died before the 13th of June, 1898, and levy it on the legatees of a man who dies on the 14th of June, 1898?

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman will remember that June 13, 1898, was the date of the passage of the original act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I state. Under the terms of the gentleman's amendment, if he died before June 13, they would be exempt. If he died afterwards, they would not be exempt. But that is not the law. The tax is not levied on the dead man. The death of the man has nothing to do with it. We levy the tax on the privilege to the heirs or legatees of taking the estate. That is when the tax comes in. It is not on the question of death. A man may die and his estate may be in the hands of his legatees or executors for ten years before it is wound up, and we levy no tax on that, but when the time comes for them to take their share of the estate, then the Government steps in and says, "We will charge you a tax for the privilege of taking this estate." Now, I can not see under that why we should cut down these exemptions, why we should allow these persons to go free simply because the man died before the 13th of June and not because he died on the 15th of June.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. POWERS) there were—ayes 80, noes 48.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Schedule B by striking out lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert the following—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I may as well raise the point of order now, that we have passed that. The gentleman desires to go back to a preceding section.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. No objection was offered to the proposition of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] a few moments ago, to go back and offer an amendment. I think the same courtesy should be extended to this side of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. He offered it to a pending section. This is offered to another section.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is well taken. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read, and then I will waive the right of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his amendment may be read. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk read section 10.

The following committee amendment was read, and agreed to:

In line 20, page 20, strike out the word "distributing" and insert the word "distributive."

Mr. PAYNE. On page 24, line 12, there is a typographical error. Two letters have been omitted from the word "provisions," and in line 17 of the same page two letters have been omitted from the word "act." I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to make those corrections.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, these corrections will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read section 12.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment of Mr. NEWLANDS was read, as follows:

Add the following section:

"INDUSTRIAL CORPORATIONS.

"SEC. —. That every corporation engaged in manufacture whose gross annual receipts exceed $500,000 shall be subject to pay annually, within fifteen days after the end of each fiscal year, a special excise tax equivalent to one-twentieth of 1 per cent on the gross amount of all receipts of such corporations in their respective businesses in excess of said $500,000. True and accurate returns of the amount of such gross receipts shall be made and rendered yearly, at the end of each fiscal year. Such returns shall be verified by the president or chief officer of such corporations, and shall include statements as to the nature of the business conducted, the number of factories owned, and the number operated by such corporations, the capital, the surplus, operating expenses, wages, taxes (both national and State), and such other information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe.

"Such returns shall be classified and published by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in his annual report. Any officer failing or refusing to make returns as aforesaid, or who shall make a false or fraudulent return, shall be liable to the penalty prescribed for similar offenses regarding refiners of petroleum or sugar."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I introduced substantially this amendment as an amendment to that portion of the war-revenue act relating to the tax on banks, and involving a tax upon banks of $3,000,000.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the gentleman say precisely this amendment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; at that time this side of the House voted, I may say, almost unanimously for it, and that side of the House was opposed to it. Several members on the Republican side of the House have since indicated to me that they would be inclined to vote for a measure of this kind if it were applied to only the industrial corporations instead of all persons, firms, and corporations engaged in manufacture, as my first amendment proposed, and if the rate of the tax was so low as not to raise an excessive total.

The features which attracted their approval were, first, the Federal taxation of a form of wealth now untaxed by the National Government, and also the machinery afforded for securing statements for publication from these great industrial combinations which would yield the information so essential to the just taxation, as well as the just regulation and control of abuses so generally complained of, in which publicity is regarded by all economic writers as an essential factor. So I have redrawn this amendment, applying it only to industrial corporations, and reducing the tax from one-tenth to one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the gross annual receipts, and exempting from taxation all gross receipts up to $500,000.

Thus a corporation having gross annual receipts amounting to $1,000,000 would pay a tax of one-twentieth of 1 per cent upon one-half that sum, being a total tax of $250 annually, and a corporation having gross receipts amounting annually to $2,000,000 would pay taxes on $1,500,000, aggregating $750. A corporation whose gross receipts would reach $10,000,000 annually would pay a total annual tax of $4,750, certainly a very inconsiderable amount, and still less considerable when you realize the fact that almost all the products of these industrial corporations are protected by the tariff, which levies duties averaging about 50 per cent on similar products of manufacture.

In other words, a foreign product of a similar character would have to pay a duty of one-half of its international price in order to obtain entry into this country. Thus the domestic producer is able to raise the price of his product above the international price by our system of protective tariff legislation. If, therefore, he is enabled to add 50 per cent to the international price of his article through the system of Federal taxation, why should he not pay the small tax of one-twentieth of 1 per cent upon the domestic price? As a matter of mere taxation, these great industrial corporations ought to assume something of the burdens of Federal taxation, just as the manufacturers of tobacco and spirits and other things included in the internal-revenue tariff do, and a tax so moderate can not be complained of.

It should therefore be recollected that these great industrial corporations manufacture products which are also imported, and are doing so inside of the tariff wall which protects them from foreign competition. They are now endeavoring by large aggregations of capital, by the ownership in one corporation of numerous factories hitherto competitive, to destroy domestic competition, a competition which it was the intention of the tariff acts to promote, for the very theory of the tariff is that, though foreign competition is restrained, domestic competition is promoted; that inside of the tariff walls numerous competitive enterprises will start into the production of protected products, and thus not only stimulate domestic production, but lower gradually the domestic prices of such products.

Now, when we come to the consideration of the tariff acts, whether they be tariffs made for the sake of protection or tariffs with incidental protection, all the statistical information which we receive is obtained at casual and desultory hearings before the Ways and Means Committee. The interested parties flock there and present their ex parte statements, and we have not at hand the statistical information which enables us to act intelligently as to the capital employed in these various industrial occupations seeking and insisting upon protection, as to the wages paid and the profits made, and yet all these calculations should enter into the consideration of a tariff act, whether it be a protective tariff or a tariff with incidental protection.

Then, again, when we come to legislate regarding trusts we have not the information which enables us to act. At the last session of Congress an act was passed by the House which seems to sleep the sleep of death in the Senate, which the dominant party insisted at that time, just prior to the campaign, was a bona fide effort to utilize those powers conferred upon Congress by the Constitution relating to interstate commerce and post-offices and post-roads in the suppression and harassing of trusts. We suffered then from this lack of information. We had no statistics except such casual statistics and calculations as were presented to us in the current literature of the newspapers. Some people regard those trusts as a part of the economic evolution of the times, tending to prevent overproduction, tending to steady prices, tending to create an equilibrium between capital on the one hand and labor on the other. Others regard them as great combinations of capital, organized for the suppression of competition, for the creation of monopoly, for the raising of prices of products, and the diminution of the price of labor entering into production, and they insist that the tariff wall should be let down as to the products of these trusts; that a wave of foreign products should be allowed to enter the country and to destroy the domestic trusts and necessarily to destroy contemporaneously with them the small competitive enterprises that are endeavoring to hold their own with the trusts. The opponents of the trusts also contend that the control of Congress over the interstate commerce and the mails should be exercised in the most oppressive and harassing way.

Now, I ask whether it is not essential, with reference to all these classes of legislation, taxation first, protection second, and regulation of the trusts third, to obtain such information as will enable Congress to act intelligently? And how can we act, and how is this informasion to be obtained? Why, it is to be obtained under the provisions of this amendment, which, as a part of the system of taxation, resorts to the time-honored usage of compelling statements from the parties taxed, statements which are simply the counterparts of their own books, statements which anyone can obtain by obtaining a few shares in such corporations and by asserting his rights as a stockholder.

Is the privacy of these corporations to be regarded as sacred when the powers of the Government are to be exercised with reference to taxation, protection, and regulation, particularly when those corporations are for the most part the beneficiaries of Federal protective legislation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield to a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would not this be a tax upon export business of every manufacturing establishment engaged in export business in the United States?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No more than every other tax here. No more than when you levy an internal-revenue tax upon tobacco or cigars or beer or spirits.

Mr. DALZELL. But tobacco is a luxury.

Mr. TAWNEY. Would it not be wise, if your amendment is to be considered and adopted, to put in a proviso exempting export of manufacturing corporations from the imposition of this tax?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the gentleman will frame an amendment of that kind I will accept it. What I desire is that we should initiate this form of taxation, with the statistical statements accompanying it, in some mild way, and if it is deemed advisable it can be developed further in future legislation.

Mr. DALZELL. Why pick out the industrial corporations of this country to levy a tax upon them?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Why did we pick out the banks, from which we get over $3,000,000 annually under the Dingley war-revenue act by a tax of $2 on the thousand on bank capital over $25,000? Why did we pick out the refiners of sugar and petroleum, from whom, under the same act—the very act we are now amending—we get over $1,000,000 annually by a tax of one-quarter of 1 per cent on the gross amount of receipts exceeding $250,000? Why did we pick out legacies, from which we get over $2,800,000 under the same act? I assumed that we did so because we realized that taxation on consumption had gone far enough, and that in the stress of war it was just to call wealth to the rescue; and an income tax—the fairest tax on earth—being denied us by the Supreme Court, it was necessary to select certain forms of wealth best able to bear the burden. This amendment seeks to enlarge the area of this form of taxation and to reduce pro tanto the burden laid on consumption, on the occupations and activities of life. To enlarge is to equalize, the total amount of revenue required being fixed.

Mr. DALZELL. Why say $500,000 any more than $100,000?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman has asked his question. I will simply answer by asking, Why did we say $25,000 in the case of bank capital or $250,000 in the case of refiners of sugar and petroleum? I do not consider that the limit in this matter is a matter of importance. The purpose of exemption of $500,000 from the tax is to avoid oppressing the small industries which are engaged in competition with these giant industrial combinations. I wish to tax fairly the wealth of the country, not to handicap struggling industries, and we know that there are ten billions of wealth in these industrial combinations which now practically go untaxed by the National Government. Nor do I wish to impose——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would like an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. I understood the gentleman stated on yesterday that the main purpose of his amendment was not so much to levy a tax upon corporations as to institute an inquisition into their affairs. Is that correct?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The main purpose of this amendment is to cover both the question of taxation and regulation—internal-revenue taxation now, and statistical information which will enable us hereafter to legislate wisely on the question of internal revenue, tariff, and regulation of trusts.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman concluded that we need more revenue since he signed the report of the minority?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No. I wish to say that there are two objections to the bill which the gentleman has reported here. One objection is that it raises too much revenue and the other that it does not properly distribute the burden of that revenue. If this tax does raise the revenue $2,000,000, it will be easy enough for the gentleman to lower the stamp taxes, which are retained in this bill, and the taxes on occupations and activities, from which eight or ten million dollars are received, or on the articles of consumption taxed in this bill, so that the total will not exceed the $65,000,000 which he wishes to raise as war revenue.

Now, let me show you how the burden of the revenue is distributed under the pending bill. Here is the statement:

Distribution of revenue under Payne bill.

Taxes on consumption:
Beer	$23,598,509.40
Tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes	18,000,000.00
Wines	600,000.00
		$42,198,509.00
Stamp taxes		14,775,000.00
Special taxes on occupations, amusements, and activities		1,000,000.00
Taxes on wealth as follows:
Legacies	$2,884,491.55
Excise taxes on refiners of petroleum and sugar	1,079,405.14
Bank capital and surplus	3,129,404.00
		7,093,300.69
Total		65,066,809.69

Now, let me show you how the taxes are distributed: Sixty-five millions are to be raised under the gentleman's bill for war taxation, of which the sum of forty-two millions is imposed absolutely on consumption—upon beer, tobacco, and cigars—and over fifteen millions in the shape of stamp and other taxes upon the activities of life, the occupations, and only about seven millions upon wealth. Three millions and over on banks, one million on refiners of petroleum and sugar, and $2,800,000 on legacies; only seven millions imposed on wealth out of a total of sixty-five millions of war revenue, and that, too, when the whole of your ordinary revenue—the customs revenue of nearly three hundred millions, the normal internal revenue of two hundred millions—is placed substantially on the consumption of the country, a mere per capita tax, not proportioned to the wealth of the individuals or their capacity to bear the burdens of government. Is it unreasonable that we should make some movement in the way of equalizing these conditions by imposing a further tax on wealth which will raise about $2,000,000?

You gentlemen of the majority, with a Presidential election approaching, put a bill through the last session of this House for the exercise of interstate-commerce powers of the Constitution and the powers relating to post-offices and post-roads in the suppression of trusts. You forbade the railroads to carry the products of those trusts. You made it a criminal offense to do so. You were not sensitive then regarding these great organizations. You put the bill through under whip and spur. It is true it sleeps in the Senate, but that you say is not your fault. But there is another Federal power that can be invoked, and that is the power of taxation—a power more effective than the power over interstate commerce or the mails.

It is the power to regulate; it is the power to destroy. You used that power in order to regulate and restrain the production of oleomargarine. You used that power in order to regulate the use of mixed flour. You used that power in order to destroy the currency of the State banks. These are illustrations of the extent to which you have gone, using the power of taxation in some cases for regulation, and in others employing it for destruction. Would it not be wise to apply this power in a moderate degree to these great combinations of capital? I am not rabid upon this question of the control of trusts. I believe that much of the legislation that has been enacted by State legislatures upon that subject is not only unscientific, but prejudiced and oppressive.

All that I insist upon is that we should secure the information upon which we can act, and it should be secured under the sanction of oath and should be conclusive in some scientific way. I insist that it is just and right in a revenue bill to impose upon this form of wealth some degree of taxation, and the tax I seek to impose is a reasonable one. And in connection with that we should secure statements from these industrial corporations which would be a guide to the Internal Revenue Department, and which would be a guide to Congress in future action, just as we now compel the banks of the country to make detailed statements of their affairs to the Comptroller of the Currency; just as we compel the railroads of the country to make statements of their affairs to the Interstate Commerce Commission, all of which statements, both with reference to banking and railroading, have been so classified as to give us statistical information of the highest importance—statistical information which has been a matter of the greatest importance in legislation and of the greatest beneficence to the banks and to the railroads themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will make no great, radical, demagogical inroads into capital and the industrial corporations of this country without some consideration by a constituted committee of the House that can duly consider and duly report upon the innovation. Here is a proposition coming from a single gentleman who does not say anything about one kind of corporation. He does not say anything about taxing the gross receipts of the monopolistic traction companies, but it is to be, in his view, altogether levied on the industrial corporations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state that if the gentleman will frame a corporation tax that will reach every corporation and an income tax that will reach all except the smaller incomes, I will be glad to vote for them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, will the gentleman tell the House—he has had an opportunity in the minority report—what sort of an income tax he wants—a constitutional one, levied under the terms of the Constitution? If so, I am with him. But an unconstitutional one, which is to be held up as a bugbear before the people—if that is what he meant in his minority report—I am opposed to fooling with that thing any longer. If he means a general tax on all sorts of corporate wealth, let us have a systematic procedure about it. The gentleman is unable to tell you how much this amendment would raise or would not raise. Let him come with a bill properly framed, and let it come to the committee of which the gentleman is an honored and distinguished member, and let us have a report that will show to the House what we are doing, and not proceed under this cry for an assault upon corporations—not under this reproduction, apparently, of a speech of the gentleman out in his enormous State; but let us have a report from the committee that has got a system in it which we can understand, and hear what they say about it, and that will be time enough. This is a bill to reduce revenue, and not a bill to sally out into new systems of taxation. It is a bill to follow the lines that will simply reduce taxation provided for in that law. I hope that the committee will be sustained in their opposition to the proposed amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment to tax industrial combinations, and it seems to me it can not be successfully denied that there is much force and logic in all that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has said in its favor. I agree with him that if we must raise more revenue it should be collected from wealth and not from toil. It is a matter of regret to me, and I believe it will be to the people generally, that the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee did not frame a bill to repeal the Spanish-American war-revenue taxes.

The war act of 1898, which imposed that taxation, was an emergency measure. It was passed hurriedly and without much consideration to raise immediate money for the purpose of successfully prosecuting the Spanish-American war. It was a war measure, and it was so described at that time by the leaders of the Republican party in this House, who gave assurances to the country that just so soon as the war was over these war taxes would be repealed.

The war has been over for more than two years and the Republican party is just now partially reducing the war taxes. I am opposed to a continuance of these war taxes in time of peace. They are obnoxious and vexatious, and should be repealed. In my judgment they could be repealed without causing a deficit. But if gentlemen on the other side believe otherwise and claim more revenue is necessary, not for an economical administration of public affairs, but for the purpose of carrying out Republican political schemes—some of which you now have under advisement—then, I say, that instead of raising the revenue from the poor, from the producers and the consumers of the country, you should raise this additional revenue by a tax on the trusts and the accumulated and idle wealth of the land. That would be fairer, more equitable, and more consistent.

I am opposed to robbing the many for the benefit of the few. I am opposed to unjust and unnecessary taxation. The war-tax law is the worst kind of special legislation, and the bill now under consideration is a species of this special legislation carried to its logical sequence. It can not be justified now; it could only be tolerated in time of war; and I am of the opinion that the people of the country will be sadly disappointed by the action of the Republicans. They expected you to keep your promise and repeal these burdensome taxes.

Mr. Chairman, all legislation bestowing special benefits on the few is unjust and against the masses and for the classes. It has gone on until less than 8 per cent of the people own more than two-thirds of all the wealth of our country. It has been truly said that monarchies are destroyed by poverty and republics by wealth. If the greatest Republic the world has ever seen is destroyed, it will fall by this vicious system of robbing the many for the benefit of the few.

The total population of the United States is about 75,000,000. The total aggregate wealth of the United States, according to the best statistics that can be procured, is estimated at about $75,000,000,000; and it appears, and no doubt much to the surprise of many, that out of a total population of 75,000,000 less than 25,000 persons in the United States own more than one-half of the entire aggregate wealth of the land. And this has all been brought about during the last twenty-five years by combinations and conspiracies called "trusts," fostered by special legislation and nurtured by political favoritism.

The centralization of wealth in the hands of the few by the robbery of the many during the past quarter of a century has been simply enormous, and the facts and figures are appalling. Three-quarters of the entire wealth of our land appears to be concentrated in the hands of a very small minority of the people, and the number of persons constituting that minority grows smaller and smaller every year I am in favor of repealing the war taxes and making the accumulated wealth of the land pay its just share of the burdens of government. This can readily and easily be done by a graduated corporation tax that will reach the dividends and watered stocks of the great industrial combinations and monopolies and by a graduated inheritance tax that will reach the idle and accumulated wealth of the land.

I am in favor of making the idle wealth, the monopolies, and all these great trusts, giant corporations, and selfish syndicates do what the Republican party by law compels the toilers, the producers, and the consumers to do, and that is to pay the taxes—pay their just share of the expenses of the Government.

By a graduated corporation tax and a graduated inheritance tax we would lift the tax burdens from the farmers, the workingmen, and the consumers and place them where they justly belong, besides establishing publicity and to some extent preventing the watering of stocks and the centralization of wealth.

In my judgment this system of a graduated inheritance tax and graduated corporation tax is the fairest, the most honest, and the most equitable system of taxation that can be devised; and I believe if it were put into operation that it would pay more than one-half of the annual expenses of the Government. Believing as I do, I am glad to support this amendment and I sincerely hope it will be adopted.

To-day more than three-quarters of the idle wealth of this country escapes taxation and practically bears no part of the burdens of government. This is not right. I am glad to say that I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada will cure, to some extent at least, this inequality and injustice in our system of taxation. I trust that gentlemen on the other side of the House will vote in favor of the amendment. You can not say it is not fair and just.

If the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] answers that it will increase the revenue, then we reply that he and his associates on that side of the House can readily reduce the revenue by repealing some of the taxes on the necessaries of life, and we will help them to do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYNE. I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be limited to five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I trust that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will be allowed to occupy these five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio appeals to his party to vote against my amendment and to leave this matter to the consideration of the Ways and Means Committee for future action. He states that the pending amendment has been submitted without consideration and deliberation. I deny that, so far as I am concerned and so far as the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee are concerned.

It is true it has not received the consideration and deliberation of the majority members of that committee, because that committee has pursued the pernicious system which has long prevailed in Congress and for which both parties are responsible—the consideration of tax bills as partisan measures, practically excluding the minority members from consideration of the various items of the proposed bill. This is a practice that has long existed. It is a pernicious practice, because the framing of a revenue bill affects the very source of all governmental powers. Upon it all the instrumentalities of government depend.

Therefore we have not had the opportunity—I make no charge against the dominant party which might not be made equally against the minority party when it was in power—we have had no opportunity for deliberation with our Republican colleagues of the committee upon this subject. The only opportunity we have of presenting our views is on the floor of the House here, in a constitutional way, by an amendment intended to reach the question under consideration.

What question is under consideration? The question of revenue—a question which involves the consideration of every subject that may justly be taxed. It involves the consideration of the equality of burdens—of the proper apportioning of burdens. It involves a consideration of the question whether a portion at least of this extraordinary tax levied for the purpose of carrying on a war justified by wealth should not be imposed upon wealth, particularly when under existing conditions the accumulated wealth of the country has for years practically escaped taxation.

I present no indictment against wealth as such. There are two classes of wealth in this country. One class—the majority as I believe—consists of law-abiding persons who are willing to bear their fair proportion of the obligations of government; who are willing to sustain their fair proportion of governmental burdens; not eager to obtain exemption; not eager to obtain special privileges; not eager to utilize the functions of government for their own advancement.

Then there is another class of wealth—the lawless and the predatory wealth of the country—which seeks special exemptions, which seeks special privileges, which seeks to evade and escape the burdens of taxation, which seeks to pervert to its own advancement the functions of government. It is that form of wealth which brings conservative wealth under discredit and creates the discontent that finds its vent in communism and socialism.

I do not believe that the great mass of the industrial corporations of the country belong to that class. I believe that they will cheerfully bear a portion of the national burdens, and that a cheerful acquiescence in the demand for publicity will tend to scientific adjustment of pending problems.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. NEWLANDS, there were—ayes 71, noes 99.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed Mr. NEWLANDS and Mr. PAYNE as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this section by adding after the word "twenty" the words "and fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "twenty," line 9, section 12, the words "and fifty."

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the Republican party in this House has not given the people of this country proper relief from unjust taxation in the amended war-revenue bill which has been reported to this House by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee.

When this bill was reported in the House originally by Mr. Dingley, he said it was a war measure forced upon us by the war with Spain. He further said that it was a measure of extraordinary character, not to be thought of for a moment except for the great exigency in which the country was placed at the time. No one could tell when this bill was passed how long the war would last or how much money it would cost. There was, therefore, some justification for the extraordinary increase in the Government receipts called for by this bill. I can not see any reason at the present time, however, why all the features of the bill, except those which levy a proper portion of the cost of maintaining the Government upon the wealth of the country, should not be wiped out.

We have at the present time an annual excess of revenue of $80,000,000 above the present great expenditures, a reserve fund of $150,000,000, and a balance of $140,000,000 in the Treasury.

With this showing no member of this House can justly say that the financial condition of the Treasury calls for any such small reduction of taxation as is proposed by the Republican majority in this House.

In figuring on the operations of this bill it must not be forgotten that the surplus in the Treasury would have been increased twenty or thirty million dollars more were it not for the immense amounts paid out of the Treasury in the refunding of bonds during the past six months. We should not only legislate to give the people relief from these war-revenue taxes on account of the unjust and unfair nature of most of them, but we should repeal these taxes also in order to relieve the great business interests of the country which are suffering from lack of current funds because of the large surplus piling up daily in the Treasury.

It was only the other day that the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to relieve the tightness of the money market, anticipated the payment of $5,000,000 on Government bonds due on the 1st day of January. Ninety million dollars of the people's money are now deposited in the national banks of the country, paying no interest to the Government, while at the same time the money is bringing exorbitant rates of interest to the banks.

The figures given by the majority of this committee and the Secretary of the Treasury, even if this bill passes, show a surplus of $206,000,000 in the Treasury on June 30, 1902.

Is there any member of this House who will dare say that this is wise management of the fiscal affairs of this Government?

It is, in my judgment, not only an unwise and illogical continuation of harsh and extortionate taxation of the people, but an inane and senseless manner of conducting the affairs of the Treasury Department, upon whose sound methods of controlling the money circulation of the country the business of the country so greatly depends. In looking over the bill reported by the majority, I am surprised to find that no attention at all has been paid to the repeal of the tax upon tea. The tax of 10 cents per pound on tea in the Dingley war-revenue measure affected the home of every family in this country.

More than one hundred and twenty-five years ago the people of Boston protested against the taxation on tea, and as the result of that protest, Mr. Chairman and members of this House, the war with Great Britain followed, and the thirteen colonies became a free, self-governing people. Taxing tea is not a safe policy for any party to pursue. Taxed tea thrown into Boston Harbor made this the greatest, freest, and best Government in the world.

It has amazed me exceedingly that during the discussion of this question before the Committee on Ways and Means upon this bill, calling for a reduction of the vast war taxes, no attempt has been made by the majority of the members of that committee to bring in a measure to reduce this unjust and exorbitant tax on this commodity, which is used by every family in the land.

This is another case, Mr. Chairman, of taxation without representation; and, therefore, in behalf of the tea drinkers of the country, in behalf of the ladies who assembled here last week, the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who had so many gallant champions on the canteen question, and the large number of ladies who daily indulge in the 5 o'clock teas, I appeal to the members of this House to reduce this exorbitant tax upon every breakfast table in the land.

I have the statistics here, sir, to show that the average cost of tea brought into this country is but 13½ cents per pound; and yet under the war-revenue tax on this commodity the tax is 10 cents a pound, or an equivalent of 70 per cent, levied upon a commodity that every man, woman, and child in the United States consumes daily. Eighty million pounds of tea were imported last year into the United States at a cost of $10,835,000. The revenue received on the same amounted to the sum of $8,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the figures produced before the Committee on Ways and Means by the Secretary of the Treasury show that there are at the present time $140,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury, and the Treasury can very well afford to stand the loss of $8,000,000 which this repeal will bring about.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are you aware of the fact that the people of your own State engaged in the tea trade have importuned the Ways and Means Committee of Congress for the last six years in support of the war-revenue tax on tea, which was put on by the Senate on motion of the Senator from South Carolina, Mr. TILLMAN?

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that such a petition from the tea dealers was filed in the committee from certain portions of the United States, and I think that some of the tea importers from my own State may have joined in sending these petitions. I am also aware of the fact that there are papers on file in the Committee on Ways and Means from many of the biggest importers in the United States in favor of the repeal of this tax. I am aware of the fact that a petition representing the wholesale and retail grocers of the United States is on file in that committee room now asking that the tax be repealed, and I know that millions of the people of this country, the laboring people and the middle class of people in the United States who now pay 35 cents a pound for tea and who would be able to get it for 25 cents were it not for the imposition of this tax, unanimously ask Congress to remove the tax from every breakfast table in the land.

If this tax is continued the better grades of tea will not be imported. The petitions which have been presented to Congress from the importers, wholesalers, and retailers recite the fact that the importation of the better grades of tea is decreasing every day. It is unfair to the man who deals in tea and not in coffee to tax this product 70 per cent while coffee remains free.

The tax of 10 cents per pound was imposed as a war measure, and it is unfair and unjust to continue this tax any longer. In the bill which is now before the House, reported by the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee, the taxes are reduced on beer, cigars, proprietary medicines, telephone and telegraph messages, bank checks, bills of exchange, passage tickets, theaters, and circuses, and numerous things, and continued on tea.

Just think, Mr. Chairman, how good the laboring man and the farmer will feel to-morrow morning when they read in the paper that the tax upon bank checks and circuses has been removed, while the tax upon tea remains. Another reason why this tax should be reduced is the fact that it hurts our trade with Japan.

The Japanese minister has asked the Committee on Ways and Means to repeal this tax. He stated in a communication to that committee that the imposition of this tax prejudiced the minds of the people of Japan against the United States, and while the tax remained as a war measure the people of Japan would not find any fault if it were continued. When the fact was established that this Government did not need the revenue, it would interfere greatly in the trade between Japan and the United States.

I appeal, therefore, to the members of this House to listen to the prayer of the wholesale grocer, the retail grocer, and the tea merchant, all of whose opinions unite on the fact that the cost of tea has been increased, while its quality has deteriorated. I appeal to this House to listen to the prayer of every woman in the land who asks a free breakfast table. I appeal to the members of this House to listen to the appeal of the wife, the sister, or the mother of the laboring man of this country, who economize in every way to make both ends meet, and whose burden has been greatly increased by the war-revenue legislation taxing this great and necessary article of health and comfort 10 cents per pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I must object to that now.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I appeal to the gentleman. I have occupied but very little time on this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I regret, but I must object.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I ask, then, unanimous consent to continue my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SULZER. You have that already.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would cut down the revenue between eight and nine million dollars. This tax upon tea had been asked for by the people in the tea trade ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, or since 1890. They came before the committee nearly every year asking for a tax on tea, for this reason: Every other country has an import duty upon tea, and generally about 10 cents a pound. There is a great quantity of tea dust, which is the sweepings of the floors in the tea countries; and also a poor tea that has been allowed to be overgrown, the leaves getting too large, and when they try to cure it it develops tannin, which is a poison. Great quantities of this inferior tea have always found a dumping ground in the United States. Twice during this period we have passed tea-inspection laws, and we have a very radical law of that kind on the statute books, which has been there three or four years. But the importers tell me that that does not serve to keep out all of these spurious and poor teas. They say that tea is put upon the market that could not sell except for the presents that are given in every town with a pound of tea. Of course, every gentleman is familiar with that branch of the trade. Putting a duty of 10 cents a pound on tea keeps out this tea dust and this poor tea.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PAYNE. I can not consent to be interrupted.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. The gentleman's argument is so weak that he ought to consent to interruption.

Mr. PAYNE. The committee did not see their duty to put that tax on tea under the guise of an inspection law. While the subject was under consideration this war-revenue bill was over in the Senate, and the gentleman from South Carolina moved this duty of 10 cents a pound on tea, and the Senate put it on. When it came to our conference committee we agreed to it. Now, what was the result? There was a large quantity of tea on hand, held by various dealers, and of course that demoralized the trade for a while. Then after that had been disposed of and everything had got down to a normal basis, and the tea trade was doing pretty well, we had this disturbance in China, and a great many of the dealers in tea got frightened for fear the supply of tea would be cut off, and they immediately made large orders and have shipped very large importations of tea into this country, which are now held in the various warehouses of the country in bond, the duty not paid.

Now, every man who has any tea in bond is in favor of having this tax taken off, because they say that if this tax is taken off, the foreign price to this country will go up at least 5 cents a pound, or one-half of the duty. It has been reduced more than 5 cents a pound since the duty was put on, and all these people are in favor of having this tax taken off so that they can make the extra 5 cents a pound upon the tea which they have in bond, but the general sentiment of the tea trade is that this tax should be left there. They say it is improving the quality of the tea, and instead of the poor people of this country being obliged to drink the stuff that is not shipped to any other country on God's earth it is now kept out, and our people are getting tea at a fair rate, and they are willing to pay for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. They pay 10 cents a pound more for it. The Government compels them to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. Now I hope that we will have a vote. I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved that all debate on this section and amendments be closed in five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Is this motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a sweeping reduction in the war-revenue tax. I am in favor of abolishing the tax on checks, telegrams, etc., and in making a considerable reduction in the tax on beer. I am also in favor of abolishing the tax on tea, if that be possible, or at least of cutting it down considerably.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FITZGERALD] began his speech by referring to one hundred and twenty-five years ago when the Indians of Massachusetts declared war on a tea tax and tried to convert the briny waters of Boston Harbor into a sea of tea. Judging from the evident pride with which the gentleman from Boston told of that historical incident, I think that the members of this House are justified, from the spirit of pride which swelled his chest, and the smile of glory which decked his countenance, in concluding that in every easterly breeze which sweeps over the city of beans and culture Bostonians find a whiff of the aroma of that famous Boston tea party to which our English cousins of colonial days were unceremoniously invited to stay away.

It is quite appropriate, Mr. Chairman, quite appropriate, indeed, that an Indian from Massachusetts should follow in the footsteps of those colonial Massachusetts Indians and declare here to-day a war on the tax on tea. It but shows him true to the traditions of his native heath and proves the truth of the maxim that history repeats itself.

The estimable chairman of the Ways and Means Committee seems imbued with a little of the Tory determination to keep the tax on tea. In fact, he is inclined to keep the tax on everything save from what the members of this House compel him to take it off. He was opposed to making any material reduction in the tax on beer and he is opposed to taking any tax at all off tea. As one looks at the able and eloquent leader of the majority he is struck with the striking resemblance he bears to the pictures of Moses, and as one ponders over the position of this statesman on the proposition of reducing the tax on beer and on tea the conviction comes that this gentleman has determined to act like Moses and write a a new commandment, which will read, "Thou shalt not drink anything save water unless thou art willing to pay a tax." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that no member of this House personally consumes enough beer to care a straw whether or not there is a tax on that fluid. I know that all of them patronize exclusively the water tank out in the cloakroom and the buttermilk pan in the lunch parlor. But we, sovereign representatives of the people, are not here to legislate for ourselves, but for the masses of this great country. One of the speakers yesterday told us that the people were clamoring for a big reduction in the tax on beer. I do not know personally that this be true, but I take it that the gentleman who made the assertion knew what he was talking about, and under that supposition I would like to recall to the minds of those members of the House who are against making a reasonable reduction on beer the maxim, "Vox populi, vox Dei." [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, if this be true of beer, it is a thousand times more true of tea, and as there are more tea drinkers in this House than beer drinkers—as is the case all the country over—this question of taking the tax off tea is one of pressing and immediate need. Of course, as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would write in his new commandment, one can drink water every time thirst comes on, provided there is an unwillingness to pay a tax for every moistening of the palate. Water is a good drink, Mr. Chairman. I like it. For my part, I prefer it to either beer or tea, and I like it just as it comes from the spring.

But, Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that some medical authorities hold that water is apt to produce typhoid fever unless boiled, there are many millions of people in this country who prefer their water boiled, and who like it boiled best in the shape of beer and tea. For the sake of these millions now paying an extra 10 cents a pound on tea, I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and hope that it will prevail, so that the tax will be taken off tea.

This demand for a reduction of the tax on tea, Mr. Chairman, comes from every cottage in the land, from every breakfast table, every dinner table, every supper table, from every tea party, where the neighborhood is roasted, friends criticised, and the world remodeled over a steaming cup of tea. It also comes from the circles of the four hundred, whose 5 o'clock teas are losing their pinkish tint on account of the extra 10 cents a pound put on tea by the war-revenue act.

Right here and now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to a few scientific facts. Professor Johnstone says that "tea exhilarates without sensibly intoxicating." The beverage doing that is a good beverage and is entitled to such legislation as will give the people the greatest amount of it for the least money. Professor Johnstone also says that "tea excites the brain, increases activity, and produces wakefulness." Now, the beverage doing that is good for a Congressman to drink in large quantities and should be as cheap as possible. For the sake of his constituents a Congressman needs a clear brain and lots of activity, and for his own sake he needs some beverage to keep him awake during some of the ponderous Websterian speeches in this House, and for this reason, again, am I in favor of cutting down the tax on tea. [Laughter and loud applause.]

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, it needs no argumentation to prove that the ladies of our land—young maids, old maids, and housewives—are in favor of reducing this tax on tea. The young maids because it makes cheaper the beverage of their society sprees and social tête-à-têtes; the old maids—and God bless them, for Robert Louis Stevenson was right when he called them the dearest dears on earth—because it makes less expensive their matutinal sipping and their nightcap quaffing of the drink that makes them dream of those saddest words of tongue or pen, "It might have been;" and the housewives, as one of them wrote me the day before yesterday, because the tea leaves with which she keeps down the dust when she sweeps her parlor carpet are costing too much and the tax on leaves used to keep down the dust ought to be lowered, instead of a tax being kept on to raise "the dust" for a useless surplus. [Laughter and applause.]

Do not think, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to make a funny speech, but if any comparison can serve to show the inconsistency of some of the reductions proposed in this bill I do not intend to hesitate in making use of them. Just think of it! The proposition is made to abolish the $100 tax placed on the proprietors of a circus and to keep the tax of 10 cents a pound on tea. In other words, the committee proposes to take the tax off the elephant that "walks around the ring" and the monkey that "chatters in the cage" and to keep the tax on the cup of tea consumed at meals. No one has heard of the price of admission to circuses being raised by the war tax, and even if it were the people could stand it, for the circus, like Christmas, comes but once a year, while tea time comes three times a day. If we need revenue, would it not be well to keep the tax on circuses, and to place it on things like the circus, and allow tea to go free. [Laughter.]

Yes, Mr. Chairman, between tea and the circus, I am in favor of tea, and I want to remind those who differ with me that part of the revenue we lose on free tea will come back to us through the tax which we have lately placed on oleomargarine. This House did a good thing for the farming interests of the country when it voted to place a tax on oleo. It would duplicate this good act by doing something to relieve the tax on tea.

It is useless for the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] to contend that the tea trade of the country is in favor of this tax being kept on tea. Why, sir, nearly every tea merchant and wholesale grocer in my district has petitioned me to urge an abolition of the tax on tea. Does that look as if the tea trade of the country is in favor of the tax?

Only this morning, sir, I received a letter from a large tea importer in which he states that a continuation of this tax will ruin his business, and urges a fight for the reduction of the tax. Does that look as if the trade favored the tax on tea? Do the people want it, think you, gentlemen of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee? Is any one of you bold enough to contend that the people at large are in favor of this tax? If so you are brave enough to argue that the people are anxious to pay 10 cents a pound more for tea than they would have to pay for it were this tax abolished. This tax was imposed as a war measure.

The majority tell us that the war is over. If it is, the war tax should go, especially upon the articles consumed the most by the masses in everyday life. As a nation we are crying for trade with China and Japan, but yet we persist in placing a large tax upon the article of which they raise most, of which we raise little or none, and which our people use every day of their lives. It is proposed to do away with the taxes on proprietary medicines, telephone and telegraph messages, bank checks, bills of exchange, etc.; it is proposed to reduce the tax on beer.

Of all these am I in favor. In fact, I would go further than this bill proposes to go in the reduction of the tax on beer. Every fair-minded person must admit that beer is paying a pretty heavy proportion of taxation. Outside of the war tax added for the Spanish war beer pays into the United States Treasury $40,000,000 a year. On account of the additional Spanish-war tax beer has lately been paying a tax of $80,000,000—a sum which is one-third of the whole war tax and one-fourth of the internal-revenue taxes. Beer undoubtedly should pay a large tax, but it seems hardly fair that any one industry should be obliged to bear such a large share of taxation. Now, as to tea, Mr. Chairman, I believe in abolishing the tax completely. But some of the gentlemen of this House argue that we need the revenue produced by the tax on tea. I contend that we have no such need.

At the present time this country has an annual excess of revenue of $80,000,000 above the present immense expenditures, a reserve fund of $150,000,000, and a balance of $140,000,000 in the Treasury. With this grand showing there is no necessity for keeping the war taxes as high as the majority contend. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, it should be remembered, when considering the provisions of this bill, that the surplus in the Treasury would have been increased twenty or thirty million dollars more were it not for the large amount paid out of the Treasury during the past six months. We should abolish all possible of these war taxes not only to relieve the people, but also to prevent a piling up in the Treasury of current funds which should be in circulation for the good of the business interests of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes a law in its present shape, its friends admit that on June 30, 1902, there will be a surplus in the United States Treasury of $206,000,000. This seems to be conservatism run wild. A surplus, and a fair one, we should have at all times, but at no time should it be allowed to grow so large that its creating is a burden upon the people, and a useless withdrawal into the United States Treasury of money that ought to be in circulation through the business channels of the country. It has been said that the people less governed are the best governed, and this assertion is most forceful when applied to the payment of taxes. The less of them the better, and only so much of them as is necessary for a proper maintenance of the Government, its protection, its welfare, and its safety should be collected. For none of these is needed such an abundance of taxes as piles up a useles surplus.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we return to Schedule B and take up the item of sparkling and other wines.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to returning to Schedule B.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply want to take up that one item.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk read section 13.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Before the committee rises, I would like to correct a mistaken reference made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to some figures that were used in this debate. A great historian says that Alexander Hamilton and Mr. Gladstone were the only two men who were ever able to make a financial discussion interesting and throw about dry figures something of human interest.

Hereafter in this distinguished company must be included the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose admirable speech in closing the debate on this bill was listened to with interest and profit by all his hearers on the committee. At any rate he made it very interesting for me in alluding to certain figures that had such a familiar ring to them that I was compelled to conclude that he honored me in his reference. But he fell into an error, as we are all liable to do at times, when he intimated that I had been guilty of making the preposterous blunder of contending that on the 30th of June, 1902, we should have an available, accumulated, cash surplus of $286,000,000.

From a reference to my remarks on Wednesday last it will be evident, I think, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania must have missed the pleasure of listening to my remarks. I said:

> Now, supposing that this present law should remain in force until June 30, 1902, we would have the following statement of surplus on that date, provided by strict economy we make our expenses for the next year conform to the expenditures for the year just closed: Surplus earned in 1900, $80,000,000; estimated surplus earned in 1901, $80,000,000; estimated surplus earned in 1902, $126,000,000; making a total earned surplus during the three years ending June 30, 1902, of $286,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. From what page does the gentleman cite?

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. Page 297.

Throughout my entire remarks my reference was to an earned and not to an accumulated surplus. I imagine that by the use of a wise ingenuity we shall be able to so appreciably diminish this surplus during the process of accumulation that on the 30th day of June, 1902, it will not be a national embarrassment.

Now, some figures that the gentleman from Pennsylvania used show how conservative mine were. The extent to which we can prudently reduce taxation depends upon three things: First, our cash on hand; second, our prospective revenue; and, third, our prospective expenditures. Our cash on hand is $140,000,000. Our prospective earned surplus for the remainder of this fiscal year is $40,000,000. The prospective surplus for 1902, provided we make our expenditures conform to the expenditures of 1900, is $126,000,000, making a total of $306,000,000. Taking from this sum the amount by which this bill will reduce the revenue up to the 30th day of June, 1902, we shall have earned a surplus of $246,000,000 at that date.

Our cash in hand is a fixed quantity, and under the invigorating influence of Republican principles our prospective revenues will doubtless go far beyond our most sanguine expectations. The great question for us to answer is, What shall our expenditures be for the year 1902? The figures given by the Secretary of the Treasury are, of course, based entirely on the estimates furnished to him by the Departments. On the supposition that in 1902 we expend what the Departments ask for, the recommendations and the conclusions of the Secretary of the Treasury are wise and prudent and should be followed, and I indorse most heartily everything that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said with reference to any criticisms that have been made by members of the minority upon the Secretary of the Treasury. No man in this House, no man in this country, has a more profound respect for his wisdom and prudence than I have, for I believe that the first and present Secretaries of the Treasury of the United States are the two ablest men that ever presided over the finances of this country.

These estimates furnished by the Departments show an excess of $83,000,000 over the estimated expenses of this year, and an excess of one hundred millions over the actual expenditures for the year 1900. And may I call the attention of this committee to the excellent report issued by the Appropriations Committee a few days ago, which shows that if we appropriate up to the entire extent of these estimates, and follow the Secretary of the Treasury's recommendation in reference to the sinking fund, we shall have on the 30th of June, 1902, even if the war-revenue bill continues in force without amendment, not a surplus of twenty-six millions, but a deficit of over twenty-six millions.

So, Mr. Chairman, in closing, let me say that the figures which I used were used to show that it was our duty to so regulate our expenditures that we could repeal as rapidly as possible the provisions of this war tax, and I had hoped the Fifty-sixth Congress might have provided for its ultimate repeal. These figures show that by practicing a rigid economy, by adhering to the same basis of expenditure that we had last year, this whole bill could have been wiped out by the 1st of December, 1902. But, as I say, it depends not entirely upon our cash balance, not entirely upon our prospective revenue, but upon what we will expend during the coming year.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the United States will look to Congress to so expend the public money during the next year that we shall not go beyond the annual expenditures of these last two years before we expunge from the statute book the last provision of this war-revenue bill. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no question as to the wisdom of the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount of tax reduction. I have no disposition further to discuss that question. I said yesterday all I had to say on that subject. I want to say, however, so far as my friend on my left is concerned, that nothing in the world was further from my intention than to misrepresent him. I think, however, that he to-day does me an injustice because he reads from the RECORD on page 297, whereas my remarks were based upon what the gentleman said on page 251 of the RECORD. The remarks that I made yesterday as to the gentleman's speech are a reproduction of what he said on page 251 of the RECORD. Now, let me read. At the top of page 251, where occurs the gentleman's remarks, is an interruption of the speech of Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. In other words, estimating our expenditures for 1902 on the basis of 1901, the surplus under this law would be $109,000,000, and six months of 1901 are still on the basis of the estimation. Taking the actual expenses of the year just closed, the estimated expenses for 1902 are over $100,000,000 in excess of the actual expenses of the year 1900, which, with the difference of the $26,000,000 estimated surplus, makes for 1902, under this law, provided we kept our expenses within that of last year, 1900, a surplus of $126,000,000. Would it not?

Mr. PAYNE. I am not a lightning calculator, but I presume the gentleman's figures are correct.

Now, this is the point:

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. So that the $126,000,000 for the year 1902 added to the $80,000,000 for 1901 and to the $80,000,000 for 1900 would leave a surplus in the Treasury, if this law was in force, of $286,000,000 on the 30th of June, 1902?

Now, that last paragraph is an exact reproduction of what is embodied in my speech, and the gentleman complains—I say to him with great respect—unduly about me because while the paragraph he cites on page 297 is a justification of him the paragraph on page 251 is a justification of me.

Mr. BOUTELL of Illinois. The gentleman is correct, but my figures on page 251 were in the form of a question, which was answered in the affirmative by the gentleman from New York. So I suppose I ought to withdraw all but the first paragraph of my remarks, which, in justice to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, must be allowed to stand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to move to strike out the last word, in order to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. This section reads that "such stamps as have been already issued shall be redeemed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when presented." Now, the question I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is, How do you construe the word "presented?" I understand the practice has been for a large number of importers to send the stamps abroad to be affixed to patent medicines, and under the ruling of the Bureau they are affixed to the bottles. Now, ought you not to provide that all these stamps should be redeemed, no matter whether actually presented to the Bureau or the Department in the form of stamps or shown to any subcollector in the port of entry in the form attached to the bottles?

Mr. PAYNE. It does not seem to me so; that would open the door for fraud. Of course there are some people who will not get the stamps redeemed, and would not, no matter how the section is drawn, if it were properly safeguarded. This section was drawn after consultation with the late Commissioner Wilson, and I think it is in the exact language he suggested. I will say to the gentleman that there is a law which we passed last spring providing for the redemption of all unused stamps when presented in sums of not less than $2. That is the act referred to in this section. The late Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Wilson, thought that the provision of that act was perhaps sufficient for all purposes, but for greater safety the committee put in this section referring to that act and providing for redemption under its provisions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I asked this question because a case has been brought to my attention——

Mr. PAYNE. My attention has been called to the matter.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope that gentlemen will speak loud enough to be heard on this side of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I was saying that this section was drawn under the supervision of the late Mr. Wilson, who at the time of his death was Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It refers to a law passed by Congress last year on this subject. He thought that that law would be a sufficient provision for the redemption of these stamps, but for greater safety this section has been put in.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I suggest, however, that this question depends upon the construction which may be placed upon the word "presented." Suppose the Department should hold that in order to have stamps redeemed they must be actually presented as stamps. In some cases thousands upon thousands of dollars' worth of stamps are sent abroad for the purpose of being placed upon articles on the other side to enable those articles to be imported into this country. It is necessary often to send stamps abroad five, six, or seven months in advance.

Mr. PAYNE. The stamps to which the gentleman refers are stamps which have been used upon articles imported. They are sent abroad to save expense. My attention has been called to this matter by only one person. I do not know but that the letter came from one of the gentleman's constituents and was referred to me by the gentleman himself. I have not seen any way to provide for the contingency which the gentleman mentions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Might it not be provided that as long as the goods to which stamps have been affixed remain in the custom-house the stamps should be redeemed?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how we could do that without opening a door to fraud. If a provision such as the gentleman suggests is to be adopted, it ought to be done after very careful consideration and upon consultation with the Internal Revenue Office. If it should appear necessary to adopt a provision of this kind, it can be put on in the Senate. I would not want to consent to any arrangement now which might possibly open a door to fraud.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. All right. I merely wanted to call attention to this point.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, the last section read being the following:

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect thirty days after its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment reported by the Committee on Ways and Means to this section will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "thirty days" and insert the words "on and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House with a recommendation that as amended the bill pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY], as the Chair understands, desires to offer an amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 10834. An act granting an increase of pension to Michael Dempsey;

H. R. 9043. An act granting an increase of pension to David S. Snyder, and

H. Res. 281. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of said month.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 138. Joint resolution providing for the paving of certain streets in the city of Washington.

WAR REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LEVY. I offer as a substitute what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That in lieu of the tax of $2 now imposed by law there shall be paid a tax of $1.50 on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquors brewed and manufactured and sold or stored in warehouse, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors shall be called, for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons, and at a like rate for any quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting fermented liquors stored in warehouse to which a stamp has been affixed, as now provided by law.

"SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act the provisions relating to special taxes, as provided in section 2 of the act hereby amended, are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 3. That in lieu of the tax now imposed by law there shall be levied and collected a tax of 6 cents per pound on all tobacco and snuff, however prepared, manufactured or sold, or removed for consumption or sale; and upon cigars and cigarettes which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied and collected the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer thereof, namely: A tax of $3 per 1,000 on cigars of all description made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per 1,000, and of 75 cents per 1,000 of cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, weighing not more than 3 pounds per 1,000; and a tax of $3 per 1,000 on cigarettes made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per 1,000, and a tax of $1.25 per 1,000 on cigarettes made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per 1,000. Otherwise the provisions of section 3 of the act hereby amended are to remain in full force and effect.

"SEC. 4. That the provisions of section 4 of the act hereby amended are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 5. That the stamp taxes described and provided for and imposed by the act hereby amended in Schedule A of said act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 6. That the taxes upon medicinal proprietary articles and preparations, and upon perfumery and cosmetics, and other similar articles imposed by Schedule B, and provided for in section 25 of the act hereby amended, are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 7. That the tax of 10 cents per pound upon tea, when imported from foreign countries, imposed by section 50 of the act hereby amended, is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 8. That all provisions of the act of June 13, 1898, inconsistent with the provisions of the present act, are hereby repealed, otherwise the provisions of said act are to remain in full force and effect.

"SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect on the day of its passage."

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, the substitute which I offer will reduce the revenue from war taxes about $68,000,000. We have in the Treasury at present $138,000,000 in round numbers, and this amendment will leave nearly $40,000,000 additional to be collected under the war-revenue act, making a total of $178,000,000, which will be much more than sufficient for the increased expenditures of the Government at the present time. In my judgment we ought to expend the whole of this surplus. Its retention is dangerous to the business of the country, which demands the release of this surplus in accordance with the promise on the floor of this House. I repeat, that this surplus ought to be returned to the people. They are now suffering because of the absorption of this vast sum of money by the Federal Treasury. This surplus, locked in the Treasury, alone reduces the money in circulation about $4 per capita. It is not fair to say that we have $27 per capita in circulation when $4 of it is in the Treasury. Every commercial community in this country feels the effect of this withdrawal to-day of money from circulation. I appeal to this House to return to the people this money which is drawn from their business at a time when the United States has no immediate need for it.

The reduction proposed by this substitute bill will amount to $13,832,715.25 on beer, $8,816,833.60 on tobacco, $3,189,764.14 on cigars, $1,320,394.72 on cigarettes. Under Schedule A the reduction will be $36,416,082.11; under Schedule B, $4,548,283.19. The reduction on dealers and manufacturers of tobacco and cigars will be $319,103.02. In exact figures, the total reduction would be $68,443,176.03, and this I submit is only a fair reduction of the surplus revenue of the Government derived from war taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts, as follows:

Amend by striking out so much of Schedule B as relates to taxation of sparkling and other wines.

Mr. PAYNE. I raise a point of order upon that amendment. As I heard the amendment of the gentleman from New York, to which this is offered as an amendment, it did not propose to amend Schedule B in any way, but to strike it out.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I submit that the substitute can be amended at any point.

Mr. LEVY. I offered my proposition as a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. PAYNE. But that would not authorize the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly it would, if the substitute is capable of being amended at all. If there should be any trouble on this point, I will offer my proposition as an amendment to the bill. If no point of order was raised against this substitute, certainly no point of order can be raised now against any amendment which may be presented, and I would suggest to the Chair that inasmuch as no objection was offered to the presentation of the substitute, none could be made to the amendment I have proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not satisfied as to whether the amendment is germane, and wishes to examine the provision to which it applies before giving a decision.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. It relates to a war-revenue matter—a matter of taxation—and any substitute covering the provisions of the same bill sought to be amended by the Committee on Ways and Means, it would seem, is capable of being amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 6 of the substitute reads as follows:

SEC. 6. That the taxes upon medicinal proprietary articles and preparations, and upon perfumes and cosmetics, and other similar articles, imposed by Schedule B, and provided for in section 25 of the act hereby amended, are hereby repealed.

Here is a proposition offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to repeal an additional clause of Schedule B of the bill, and the Chair thinks it is germane.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending substitute and all amendments thereto be closed in two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. I question the right of the gentleman to make the motion at this time. The Chair recognized me, and I decline to yield to the gentleman from New York for the purpose of making a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor for the purpose of discussion.

It is moved that all debate——

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Permit the Chair first to state the question before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved that all debate upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York and the amendment thereto proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts be closed in two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry upon that point. Will the Chair enlighten the House as to how the gentleman from New York can make the motion at this time, when the amendment that I offered is pending and I was recognized to offer it? I certainly have not given up my right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts was not recognized for the purpose of debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. But I offered the amendment, was recognized by the Chair, and can not see how it can be taken away from me.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield the two minutes to the gentleman if the time is fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, which has been stated.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor in my own right, for I do not wish to take the time of the gentleman from New York. I am entitled to the floor in my own time, and I intend to avail myself of my rights in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD of Massachusetts. If the House is to be consistent in the matter of taxation, the tax should be removed on sparkling and other wines, as has been the case with proprietary medicines and other articles of that kind. Wine is an innocent drink. It is used as a tonic and stimulant by hundreds of thousands of people in this country. It is bottled by hundreds of persons throughout the United States. Many grocers and wine merchants throughout the country buy wine in bulk and bottle it, just as men who are engaged in proprietary medicines, dealing as apothecaries or druggists, put up their own specifics and sell them to the trade throughout the country. There seems no justice in retaining a tax of 1 cent a bottle on pints and 2 cents a bottle on all larger packages when the tax is removed from all articles of like nature.

It seems to me unfair to discriminate against a legitimate industry. This business is engaged in by men who are pursuing a legitimate industry, and I can not see why they should be compelled to submit to this unjust and unnecessary burden.

Let us be fair about this matter.

The manufacture and sale of wine is a legitimate business, and the men who deal in this product are as much entitled to justice and fair play from the Government as the men engaged in any other business.

I hope the House will vote to repeal this tax. I hope the Republican party in this House, who are in the great majority upon this floor, will give the men in this business the same relief from war taxation that has been accorded many other industries in this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that the telegram I hold in my hand, from California, regarding the tax on wines, be read.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NEWLANDS. All right; I have no objections to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the telegram to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The telegram is as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 14, 1900.

Hon. S. D. WOODS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Please do all you can with Ways and Means Committee to get a stamp tax taken from bottle wines. It now amounts to 10 cents per gallon, or nearly the first cost of the wine itself, and is a serious impediment to the industry without corresponding benefit to revenue.

FRANK A. WEST.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment to the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes had it.

Mr. SULZER (from his seat) demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. No gentleman has arisen to ask for a division. The noes have it, and the substitute is rejected.

And then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HEPBURN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. I demand a separate vote upon the amendment in reference to the tax upon express and freight packages.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont, adopted this morning.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any other amendment? If not, action upon the two amendments referred to will be postponed, and a vote taken on the others in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the first of the amendments on which a separate vote was demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 17, page 15, all after the word "freight" to and including line 13 on page 16, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Express and freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, to make within the first fifteen days of each month a sworn statement to the collector of internal revenue in each of their respective districts, stating the number of shipments received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included, for which any charge whatsoever has been made, and for each of such shipments received for carriage and transportation the said railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation it is to act as such, shall pay a tax of 1 cent: Provided, That but one payment of said tax shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment."

The question being taken on the amendment, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD demanded a division.

Before the result of the division was announced,

Mr. FOX demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

The SPEAKER. The amendment has already been reported.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 140, answered "present" 4, not voting 88; as follows:

Mr. ACHESON with Mr. SPARKMAN.
Mr. CAPRON with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.
Mr. DOVENER with Mr. GAYLE.
Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. WILSON of Idaho.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 14, page 17, and in line 11, page 20, after the word "art," the following: "And provided further, That the provisions of this act and of the act hereby amended shall not be held to apply to any estate where the testator or intestate died before June 13, 1898."

Mr. POWERS. A parliamentary inquiry. This amendment was accepted by the Committee on Ways and Means, and no notice was given that a separate vote would be called for. My inquiry is if that is not necessary before a separate vote could be had?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. I can not hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont makes the parliamentary inquiry if the fact that this amendment was accepted by or agreed to by the Committee on Ways and Means or the chairman in charge of the bill, and that no notice of a separate vote was given in the Committee of the Whole, would not make it out of order to be considered now. The Chair does not know anything about what transpired in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, except as reported by the Chairman. It is a pending amendment, and in respect to that a separate vote may be demanded.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to move to recommit the bill. Will the Chair entertain that motion now?

The SPEAKER. After the third reading of the bill the Chair will hear the gentleman.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I move to recommit the bill with the instructions contained in the paper which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 12394 be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to forthwith report a bill reducing the revenues under the war-revenue act at least the sum of $70,000,000, the taxes remaining to be so apportioned as to more equally and justly distribute the taxes and to remove them from the articles most nearly the necessaries of life and which enter most generally into consumption. The committee will also include in the bill a provision so framed as to accomplish the just ends of an income tax and yet escape the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the cases growing out of the Wilson tariff law.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, on that I move the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think a point of order would lie against that, because it requires the committee to report a bill with an income tax that would escape the decision of the Supreme Court—that is, to require an impossibility.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of instructions offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 157, answered "present" 3, not voting 65; as follows:

So the resolution to recommit was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

For this day:

Mr. WEEKS with Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, on a former roll call I voted "aye," but I find that I am paired with Mr. LORIMER of Illinois. If he were present, I would vote "aye" upon this roll call. I wish to be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. SWANSON'S name, and he voted "present," as above recorded.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded on this vote. I was listening to my name, but did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called by the Clerk?

Mr. BREAZEALE. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman did not hear it?

Mr. BREAZEALE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called Mr. BREAZEALE'S name, and he voted "yea," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen failed to get an opportunity to speak on the bill that has just passed, and I ask unanimous consent that five days be given for leave to print on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that general leave to print on the bill be given for five days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PENSION LEGISLATION.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request of the House. Yesterday was the second Friday which should have been devoted to private pension bills under the order, but it was displaced by the revenue bill. Now, I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after such matters as may come up under suspension of the rules have been disposed of, the special order which had reference to the transaction of business on Friday last be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that Monday next, after matters to be passed under suspension of the rules are disposed of, may be set aside for the consideration of private pension bills.

Mr. LANHAM. I did not understand what the request was, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. That after matters under the suspension of the rules on Monday next shall have been disposed of, pension legislation shall be in order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 12737, making appropriations for invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House bill 12737, the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CAPRON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 12737.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending that, I desire to ask the gentleman if there is any new legislation in this bill.

Mr. BARNEY. Not a word; it is a copy of the pension bill of last year in every respect.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What amount does it carry?

Mr. BARNEY. One hundred and forty-five million two hundred and forty-five thousand two hundred and thirty dollars—the same amount as the bill last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, the statement I have just made in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is probably all the explanation that will be necessary in reference to this bill. It is in exact accordance with the Book of Estimates and is an exact copy of the pension appropriation bill which we passed last year.

It carries, as I have already said, the sum of $145,245,230. By the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions before the subcommittee on pension appropriations it appears that for the fiscal year 1900 there was a surplus of something like $5,000,000 and for the present year—the fiscal year 1901—his estimate was that there might be a small surplus, but that the amount appropriated would be about what we need.

In anticipation of an increase in the Spanish war pension claims we have allowed the same amount for the fiscal year 1902 that we did for 1900 and 1901, and we are assured that this amount will cover all possible contingencies.

Now, unless some questions are to be asked——

Mr. RAY of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this bill contains any provisions by way of new legislation?

Mr. BARNEY. Not one.

Mr. RAY of New York. Nothing changing existing law?

Mr. BARNEY. Nothing changing existing law in the least. The bill as I have stated is an exact copy of the pension appropriation bill which was passed one year ago.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to ask one question. What was the estimate of the gentleman's committee in connection with the Spanish-American war?

Mr. BARNEY. It appears that for the Spanish-American war there were allowed, during the year 1899, 299 pensions; during the year 1900, 1,755—that is, invalid pensions and pensions of widows and minors, all taken together.

Mr. BINGHAM. And what was the estimate under this bill for such pensions?

Mr. BARNEY. The Commissioner said that it was impossible for him to tell what would be the amount required, but that there would be a considerable increase, because the applications for the last year amounted altogether to about 28,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. In money, how much?

Mr. BARNEY. I can not at the present time give the exact figures; but the annual value of the Spanish war pensions is a little less than the annual value of the pensions for the war of the rebellion, so that it can be very easily estimated what the sum will be.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, with the addition of all the claims growing out of the Spanish war, the committee provides the same increase of appropriation as in the current law. Now, I would like to know whether the pensions for the war of the rebellion are increasing; and I would be glad to have the figures for those pensions.

Mr. BARNEY. That is shown in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions; and in his hearing before the committee he said the pensions growing out of the civil war are decreasing, but he anticipates that the increase growing out of the Spanish war for the fiscal year 1902 will about keep pace with the decrease on account of pensions of the civil war. So that the demands on the Treasury for pensions will remain about the same for the fiscal year 1902 as they were for 1901 and 1900.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Did I understand the gentleman as saying that in 1900, 28,000 soldiers of the Spanish war applied for pensions and that 8,000 of such claims are now unadjusted?

Mr. BARNEY. I would not say that. They are not all unadjusted; but for the years 1899 and 1900 taken together there were, in round numbers, 28,000 claims.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That means the total number of applications?

Mr. BARNEY. For both of those years together—15,560 for the fiscal year 1899 and 13,421 for the fiscal year 1900.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And that covers down to what time?

Mr. BARNEY. To the end of the fiscal year 1900—June 30 last.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman kindly state again how many claims have been allowed growing out of the Spanish war?

Mr. BARNEY. For the fiscal year 1899, 299; and for the fiscal year 1900, 1,755.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the gentleman any information which would explain why so many claims have not been acted upon?

Mr. BARNEY. The gentleman must bear in mind the fact that the applications for pensions growing out of the Spanish war are all very recent, as compared with applications for pensions growing out of the civil war.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What I very much fear is that the committee may not have provided sufficient money for the proper adjustment of those Spanish war claims. Members are constantly beset by soldiers who have applications pending.

Mr. BARNEY. We had to take the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions. Of course, he knows, or ought to know, about how many pensions are likely to be allowed growing out of the civil war and the Spanish war. Of course, he can not state the number exactly, but he has made the best estimate he could, in view of what the Pension Office has been doing in the past year and in view of the increase which appears in pensions growing out of the Spanish war and the decrease of pensions for the civil war. And he tells us that in his judgment $145,000,000, in round numbers, will cover the needs of the Department—$144,000,000 for pensions and the balance for expenses.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Was the gentleman's attention called specially to the fact that there has been great delay in allowing pension claims for the Spanish war? Were any means adopted to correct this apparent evil?

Mr. BARNEY. That is a matter which would not come appropriately within the jurisdiction of our committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there any additional appropriation to pay those claims?

Mr. BARNEY. This bill simply covers appropriations for pensions and appropriations for medical pension examiners and pension agents. The administrative expenses of the Pension Office here in Washington come under the jurisdiction of the subcommittee on legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, of which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] is chairman. This bill, of course, covers Spanish war pension claims as well as all pension claims, but properly makes no provision for the conduct of the Pension Bureau here in Washington.

If no further questions are to be asked, then I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed and that the bill be read by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. BARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report the bill favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAFFRON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12737—the pension appropriation bill—had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment and with a favorable recommendation.

On motion of Mr. BARNEY, the previous question was ordered upon the bill to its passage; and under its operation the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNEY, a motion to reconsider the vote just taken was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. R. 138. Joint resolution providing for the paving of certain streets in the city of Washington—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

NINTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA INFANTRY.

Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of the House No. 8487, and ask the House to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8487) for the relief of Col. Charles B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

The Senate amendment was read, and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. STANLEY W. DAVENPORT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPIGHT, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

COMMITTEE RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from a member of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 15, 1900.

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I respectfully ask to be excused from serving as a member of the committee appointed under House resolution No. 307, passed December 11, 1900, because of urgent business engagement which demand my presence in Illinois.

Very respectfully, B. F. MARSH.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER named Mr. DICK to take the place of Mr. MARSH on the committee above referred to.

And then, on motion of Mr. DALZELL (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, submitting an amendment of the appropriation relating to life-saving exhibit at the Pan-American Exhibition at Buffalo—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for construction and repair of vessels—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of deficiency appropriation for the Geological Survey—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of T. C. Culpeper, administrator of estate of Josiah Culpeper, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of the St. Lawrence River at the head of Long Sault Island—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Pasquotank River, North Carolina—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 17, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF TEXAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Texas at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8487) for the relief of Col. Charles B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 5076) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder; and

A bill (H. R. 12737) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 8487) for the relief of Col. Charles B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 10834) granting a pension to Michael Dempsey; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 281) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of said month.

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5048) to confirm in trust to the city of Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, the town of Albuquerque grant, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11213) for relief of occupants of lands included in the Algodones grant, in Arizona, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SETTLERS ON CEDED INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5141) extending the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to homestead settlers on the ceded Indian reservation in Minnesota, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the bill explained by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. It is simply a bill allowing homestead settlers on the Indian reservation in Minnesota to commute their homesteads as in other cases; that is all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. How is it with the other reservations?

Mr. NELSON. In the case of nearly all the other reservations they have that right under existing law—under the general homestead law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Does the bill extend the privilege to the homesteaders in Minnesota under the old law—that is, after six months' residence?

Mr. NELSON. It is fourteen months' residence by the existing law, and then they have to pay for the land. The bill simply applies to commutation privileges under the general homestead law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know how it came that that reservation was not included in the general law heretofore.

Mr. NELSON. In the law that originally opened the reservation no provision was made for commutation. The settlers were required to live there five years and to pay a dollar and a quarter an acre. At the last session we relieved them by a free-homestead law. Now, this is to allow the settlers to commute, and if they commute the money goes to the United States and to the Indians, and is that much paid to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I move to insert the words "and Montana" after the word "Minnesota," in line 7.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to present an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator from Montana explain the necessity for his amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert the words "and Nebraska" after "Montana."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana by inserting after it the words "and Nebraska." The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think that if we are going to insert particular States, the bill ought to be made to apply to all States. I understood the Senator from Minnesota this morning in committee to say that all other reservations had been cared for, and he desired to look after the reservation in Minnesota. Now, it appears that there are reservations in other States to which the provision of existing law does not apply. I think the bill ought to cover all States where there are Indian reservations.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say, Mr. President, that under the laws opening several of the reservations the general right of commuting homesteads was not given. We passed at the last session of Congress what is known as the free homestead bill, by which all settlers were allowed to get the lands free, without paying for them, and the Government was to reimburse the Indians. Under the general homestead law all homesteaders, after residing fourteen months on the land, can commute; that is, instead of living there five years, they can pay cash for the land and get their patents.

The bill is intended to allow the settlers on this reservation to commute like other homestead settlers, and it is to the great financial advantage of the Government, because when they commute they pay the cash, and that reimburses the Government to that extent and helps to relieve it of the burden we assumed by the free homestead act passed last spring.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say further, if the Senator will allow me, that most of the reservations to which the free-homestead law applied were in Oklahoma. Some were in Montana and some in South Dakota.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. And some in Idaho.

Mr. NELSON. And some in Idaho. In most of those cases under the original law or under a supplementary law the settlers have been given the right to commute. In a few cases, that of Minnesota, and, I think, Montana, and perhaps Nebraska, the right of commuting their entries had not been given, and the object is simply to put those homestead settlers on a par with other settlers. This will redound to the financial advantage of the Government, because in every case where there is commutation the Government gets that much money to reimburse itself under the free-homestead law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from South Dakota will pardon the Chair for one moment, the Chair calls the attention of Senators to the fact that in line 7 the bill is limited to the lands of the Chippewa Indian Reservation in Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I wish Senators would allow the bill to go through, and then bring in other bills for their respective States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the bill had better be read to the Senate again. The Senate was in confusion when it was read. The Secretary will, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, again read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, allowing homestead settlers to commute their said entries, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the homestead settlers on the ceded lands of the Chippewa Indian Reservation in Minnesota under the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889, and acts supplemental thereto: Provided, That the money paid in for said commutations shall be distributed in accordance with the provisions of said act of Congress approved January 14, 1889.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota is entirely right about this matter. At the time this reservation was opened up the Great Sioux Reservation was also opened up in South Dakota, and in both cases the law provided that title could only be acquired by five years' residence. As far as the Great Sioux Reservation is concerned, several years ago Congress passed a bill which I introduced providing just what the Senator wishes to have accomplished in this bill with regard to the Chippewa Reservation. For several years the settlers in South Dakota on the Great Sioux Reservation have been allowed to commute their entries after fourteen months' residence.

The only question which arose in my mind in regard to the bill was whether it did not confer the privilege on the Minnesota settlers of commuting after six months' residence, which was contrary to the provisions of the present law as to public lands generally; but, as I understand it, the bill simply extends the commutation privilege as amended by the act of 1891 and allows, after fourteen months' residence, the right to pay for the land.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not think the reservations in Montana or Nebraska or North Dakota have any such restrictions. In my opinion all those people can commute their entries. I know that is true with regard to North Dakota and South Dakota. Therefore I do not care to amend the bill so as to embrace my State within its provisions.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the fact is that the commutation right does not exist with reference to the ceded portions of reservations in the State of Montana which have been ceded within the last ten or twelve years. The entire northern part of the State known as the Blackfeet Reservation was ceded with a special restriction as to commutation.

I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill, but I suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that instead of the words "Chippewa Indian Reservation in Minnesota," the words "on all lands ceded by Indians to the Government" be inserted, so that the bill will be general in its application rather than special.

There is much confusion, Mr. President, in the administration of the land laws incident to a great variety of laws in the same State or in a number of States of the Union. This commutation privilege may extend in one county of the State of Montana, and it may not extend in another county in the State. The land officers find it difficult to administer the law at all times when the laws are uniform. When they are conflicting and local in application the confusion is increased, and, of course, the difficulty of administration is greatly increased.

I suggest that instead of mentioning Minnesota we strike out the words "Chippewa Reservation in Minnesota" and insert "all Indian lands ceded to the United States."

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I move also to amend the bill by inserting the word "all" after the word "on," in line 6, and striking out, in line 7, the words "the Chippewa," changing the word "reservation" to "reservations," and striking out the words "in Minnesota."

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is to insert the words "and Montana," to which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] offered an amendment, adding the words "and Nebraska." That is the pending amendment. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his first amendment?

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir. I offer these additional amendments.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota has thoroughly considered this bill, and he had it considered by the Committee on Public Lands. There is no objection to it whatever as it came from that committee, and it seems to me that it would be better to pass the bill as it was reported from the Committee on Public Lands. If Senators have in their States lands in a like situation, they can have the bills considered by that committee, and there will be no difficulty about it. But to undertake to amend this bill on the floor of the Senate, without knowing to what extent it would go or what effect it would have, it seems to me is not the proper course to pursue.

I hope the amendments will not be adopted and that the bill will be passed as reported from the Committee on Public Lands. If there are other States that have lands in like situation, the committee will report those bills and the Senate will pass them.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I certainly can not agree with the Senator from Arkansas, much as I would like to do so. The bill affects lands in various States—in Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, and other States. It is not a very complicated bill. It is not the work of more than a moment or two to perfect it and make it to include every State and Territory in the Union. I do not understand why it should not be open to amendment the same as other bills and be made applicable to every State where a similar condition exists. The striking out of a word or two in the bill will make it applicable to the entire United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I ask a question?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator's amendment make it applicable to future ceded Indian reservations as well as to those that have already been ceded? What will the effect of it be? Will it be prospective?

Mr. ALLEN. I can not answer that, because I have not looked at the bill far enough to know; but the amendment that I offer does not change the substance of the bill in that respect; it simply changes the territory to which it extends. It enlarges it, but does not change the general drift and meaning of the text of the bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he withdraw his amendments and accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana, which makes the bill general, so that there can be no exception of any reservation.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to say to the Senator from North Dakota that if he will look at the bill he will see that the amendment last offered by me is necessary to make it general. The bill speaks of the Chippewa Reservation in the State of Minnesota, and I move to strike that out.

Mr. CARTER. Let the last amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment. The Chair supposes that, as it is entirely inconsistent with the amendment inserting the words "and Nebraska," the Senator withdraws that amendment and offers this one instead.

Mr. ALLEN. No, sir; I do not, because the words "Chippewa Reservation in the State of Minnesota" limit the operation of the bill, and the word "Minnesota" must go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment which will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In line 6, after the word "on," insert the word "all;" in line 7 strike out the word "Chippewa;" in the same line change the word "reservation" so that it will read "reservations," and strike out the words "in Minnesota" that follow.

Mr. ALLEN. Now let the bill be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. So that as amended it will read:

That the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, allowing homestead settlers to commute their said entries, be, and the same are hereby, extended to the homestead settlers on all the ceded lands of the Indian reservations under the provisions of the act of Congress approved, and so forth.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement with reference to these amendments. I do not think the amendments ought to be incorporated in the bill, for the reason that in the opening of many of the reservations different laws were passed. In some cases the Government paid the Indians a lump sum and then provided for reimbursing the Government by means of charging the homesteaders a certain price for the land. In the case of the reservations in Minnesota the Government advanced no money in the first instance; the lands were to be disposed of as homesteads, and as fast as the money was received it went to the Indians.

Now, the bill would hardly apply to the other reservations, because another provision of the bill provides that the money shall go to the Indians as under the original act, and that would not be germane and appropriate in the case of the other reservations.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

Mr. NELSON. Therefore those matters ought not to be confounded in this bill. It is very easy to prepare bills applying to those cases, and I presume there will be no objection to them. I hope Senators will have the goodness to withdraw their amendments in this case.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to ask if unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent has been given.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that this matter is so complicated that it ought to be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands for further consideration. I have been very diligently watching an opportunity to ask consideration for a bill that very vitally affects the people of the District of Columbia, but I have not had an opportunity to do so. A measure which is controverted as this is, and where there is so much misunderstanding, I believe ought to be sent to the committee, and let the committee settle the differences there. I do not care to make the motion, but it seems to me that that would be the proper way to dispose of the matter.

Mr. HALE. The Senate does not understand even the bill itself. If it is to be made a general bill, the committee ought to consider that subject and report it in that form. If it is to be changed by adding one State and another, the committee ought to consider that and give each State the same chance that the one State taken care of by the bill has.

Therefore in that view, and agreeing with the Senator from New Hampshire, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands. It can be reported at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5213) granting an increase of pension to Cornelius Springer; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Cornelius Springer, of Company H, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, verified by his affidavit, together with the affidavits of Isaac Hearn, William J. He also introduced a bill (S. 5231) relating to the accounts of United States marshals and clerks of the district courts of the Territory of Utah; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5232) prescribing the qualifications, pay, and manner of selecting juries in the district courts of the Territory of New Mexico held for the trial of causes arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOLLIVER introduced a bill (S. 5233) granting an increase of pension to Philetus M. Axtell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5234) to provide for erecting for the Department of Agriculture a laboratory building on reservation No. 2, in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5235) granting a pension to Mary R. Pike; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 5236) granting an increase of pension to Dennis Hannifin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 5237) granting a pension to Lovina J. Reeves; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5238) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the care, maintenance, and treatment of the insane of the Navy and Marine Corps on the Pacific coast at an asylum in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Navy, which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5239) authorizing the President to appoint in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, Navy Department, an inspector of accounts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. THURSTON introduced a bill (S. 5240) providing for the payment of rent of certain buildings at Fort Crook Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5241) granting a pension to Ann E. Tillson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 5242) granting an increase of pension to Henry D. Fulton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5243) for the extension of Fourteenth street, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 5244) to reincorporate and preserve all the corporate franchises and property rights of the de facto corporation known as the German Orphan Asylum Association of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 5245) for the relief of the estate of Henry Ingram, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 139) to provide a commission to consider certain improvements in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 140) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Dorothea Lynde Dix; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. Accompanying the joint resolution is a memorial, a statement from Dr. A. B. Richardson, superintendent of the St. Elizabeth Hospital, and other papers. I move that the accompanying papers be printed as a document, and, with the joint resolution, referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2433) granting per diem pension service to honorably discharged officers and enlisted men of the Union Army in the civil war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment providing for the retention in the Government service of clerks who have served temporarily in the Department of State for two years, intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1676) for the payment of certain claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4300) to increase the efficiency of the military establishment of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

THE OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the bill (H. R. 3717) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State and Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine, be printed for the use of the Senate.

MONTANA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, are reports of committees still in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order has been passed by. Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not wish to make a report, but I wish to ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses whether or not he is prepared to report the resolution giving the Committee on Privileges and Elections power to send for persons and papers in the investigation of the credentials of William A. Clark and Martin Maginnis, who are claimants for the vacant seat in the Senate from Montana. My colleague informed me on Saturday that a meeting of the committee would be called this morning, and I am anxious to know whether the committee is prepared to report that resolution, so that it may be acted on by the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state, Mr. President, in response to the interrogatory of my colleague, that as acting chairman of the committee, in the absence from the city of both the chairman and the clerk of the committee, I personally called a meeting of the committee, which was held this morning. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], the second member of the committee, had made a request that no action should be taken in his absence, and he was not present at the meeting this morning; in addition to which I received a letter from the chairman of the committee, raising some objections to the resolution. He is unavoidably detained in the city of New York, caring for a sick daughter. In view of all the circumstances, the three members of the committee who met concluded to postpone the matter until some future time, when another meeting of the committee will be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask my colleague whether the committee adjourned to meet at any particular time?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer that there was no time decided upon.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was a quorum of the committee present?

Mr. GALLINGER. There was.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senate has directed its Committee on Privileges and Elections to make this inquiry. The committee is unable to make the inquiry unless it has power to send for persons and papers. Mr. Maginnis and, for aught I know, Mr. William A. Clark stand at the door of the Senate asking admission under these appointments. A resolution has come from the House of Representatives for a holiday recess, beginning on Friday. It seems to me that the Senate in justice to its own order should give the committee the powers which it asks for, or refuse to give those powers.

I will ask my colleague whether the absent Senator, the chairman of the committee, gives any reason why he is opposed to giving these powers to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? If so, I wish he would state them to the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before doing that, I feel bound to say that I think no just criticism can apply to the committee for a lack of promptitude in considering this matter. The resolution came to the committee on Saturday last. A meeting of the committee was held this morning. As to whether the committee will meet again to-morrow or the next day, I can not say. I shall consult with the other members of the committee in reference to that matter, and I will be guided largely by their opinions.

My colleague inquires as to whether the chairman of the committee gives any reason for his opposition to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not know of any right a Senator has to ask a member of a committee to make a report to the Senate or what opinion any member of the committee may give for his action in committee. I have never heard of that being done before; and I do not believe it is a proper treatment of the absent Senator, the chairman of the committee, to call in question whatever he may have said or what he thinks about this matter. When he chooses to be heard in the Senate he can be here and speak for himself, and I think the time to call his opinions in question will be when he is here.

So far as my absence from the committee is concerned, it was impossible for me to attend the meeting of that committee to-day and it will be impossible to attend a meeting to-morrow. I stated to the members of the committee that it was impossible for me to be there. I had other things that required my attention, and it was necessary for me to be absent from the committee. I am usually prompt in my attendance on meetings of committees. I do not understand why the Senator from New Hampshire shall undertake to call us in question or undertake to punish us in the Senate for not having acted as promptly as he desired on a resolution which he seems to be particularly anxious to have passed. I do not think it is the proper thing to have a statement made about what the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] may have said to the acting chairman of the committee in a private letter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with my colleague on the committee as to the impropriety of reading a private letter from the chairman of the committee in connection with this matter, and yet I will venture to say the chairman of the committee holds that this is a question of law which he thinks can be determined without expending more money in its investigation. As to how the committee will hold on that point I am unable to say.

All I desire to say, Mr. President, is that so far as I am individually concerned, I proceeded diligently and expeditiously in seeking to have the resolution considered; but I think that, in the absence of the Senator from Arkansas, the committee did quite right this morning in postponing it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to punish the Senator from Arkansas—I had no such intention—unless it is punishment for him to listen to a civil and courteous inquiry of him as acting chairman of the committee.

There is no use, Mr. President, to put on any disguises in connection with this question. This treatment of a resolution asking the authority of the Senate to send for persons and papers was never given to any resolution before. The Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have never before undertaken to hold back a resolution in this way.

The Senator from Arkansas did quite right in asking that, before the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate should consider the resolution, it should come from a committee, and not from an individual Senator. I have always contended for that, and have been ruled out of order two or three times for making that contention. Now that that requisite has been complied with, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, acting under directions of the Senate, want to go on with this investigation; and the only question for the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is whether the Government can afford to pay the bills or not, and whether there is money enough in the Treasury to make the inquiry.

Mr. President, that resolution ought to be acted upon, and acted upon promptly, as all other resolutions of that nature have hitherto been acted upon. It is very evident where the responsibility for the delay that is taking place rests, and if no report shall be made shortly I shall move to discharge the committee from the consideration of the resolution and ask that the action of the Senate may be taken thereon. I shall do my duty in this case in accordance with the deliberate instructions of the Senate. I can not perform the duty which the Senator from Arkansas ought to perform in reporting back this resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, one word. I do not remember the day that this resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; but I think it was on Saturday last.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the fact.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This is the very next legislative day after the resolution was sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and yet the Senator from New Hampshire seems to be terribly exercised about the extraordinary delay in reporting the resolution back. Why this extraordinary haste on the part of the Senator from New Hampshire? There is certainly some reason for it. For one, I propose to take time enough for the committee to consider whether or not the resolution ought to pass; and I shall be accountable to the Senate for my conduct.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not "terribly exercised" about what the committee shall do; but I have been a little anxious to know why it was not convenient for the Senator from Arkansas to attend the meeting of the committee this morning.

EXTENSION OF MINING LAWS TO SALINE LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] has withdrawn his objection to the bill that I called up before the Senate on Saturday last, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

Mr. LODGE. Has the morning business been completed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield for morning business, Mr. President, but when that is concluded I desire to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator will yield for the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

ALASKAN INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CARTER. I submit a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To investigate the conduct of the judge of the division of the district court of Alaska located at St. Michaels, and to ascertain and report to the Senate the names of all persons who are in any way connected with any litigation in said court, concerning which any improper influence or illegal conduct has been or may be charged.

Whereas it has been charged through the press and otherwise that Judge Arthur H. Noyes, of the district court of Alaska, having jurisdiction over the Cape Nome district, has been guilty of illegal or improper conduct in connection with litigation pending in his court; and

Whereas it is further charged by innuendo and insinuation that such alleged illegal action or improper conduct resulted from a conspiracy in which many persons were concerned: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to thoroughly investigate and after such investigation to report to the Senate the facts found in response to the following interrogatories, to wit:

1. Are the general mining laws of the United States applicable to the district of Alaska?

2. Has Judge Noyes, having jurisdiction over Cape Nome, been guilty, directly or indirectly, of any illegal or improper conduct in or connected with any litigation which has been or is pending in his said court?

3. Whether or not any Senator or Representative in Congress, or any officer of the Federal Government, at any time possessed any interest, directly or indirectly, in any property which has been the subject of litigation in said court, and whether or not any such person has at any time had any interest, directly or indirectly, in the result of any such litigation, either as an owner, stockholder, director, or possessor of contingent interest; and, if so, the name and position of such person and the nature of the interest held or claimed.

4. What, if any, effort has been made by any party to any litigation pending in said courts to improperly or illegally influence the action or judgment of the court or any officer thereof?

5. What, if any, sum or sums of money have been spent by any person or persons, corporation or company, to print or circulate statements reflecting upon the honor and integrity of the court or the judge or any officer thereof, and by whom such expenditures were made and for what purpose?

6. The facts and circumstances connected with and the inducements offered to Judge Johnston, the predecessor of said Judge Noyes, to procure him to resign his position on the bench and to become connected with litigation pending in the court at the time of his resignation or thereafter commenced in said court.

To fully inquire into and to report to the Senate any other charge, fact, or circumstance in any manner directly or indirectly reflecting upon the integrity of said Judge Noyes or his said court, or any receiver or other officer thereof, in connection with any litigation which has been, is now, or may be pending in said court when the investigation is made.

That said committee be, and is hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses on oath in relation to the subject-matter of this resolution, and to incur such expense in traveling as may be by the committee deemed necessary in the prosecution of such investigation, all expenses of the inquiry to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and said committee is authorized, if deemed expedient, to conduct the investigation through a subcommittee to be appointed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if I may be allowed by unanimous consent to say a word or two before the Senate acts on the resolution, I wish to say that I have heard the reading of the resolution imperfectly, but there are several questions which suggest themselves to my mind about it which I do not like to detain the Senate at this moment by stating.

I, of course, sympathize with the desire of the Senator from Montana to have the facts brought out, if there has been any personal charge made against a Senator—which, of course, an investigation will at once refute—but, instead of having the resolution adopted, I should like to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, so that they can consider whether it is in the proper shape and also whether it does not properly come within the jurisdiction of a special committee or the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If the Senator does not object, I should like to have that course taken.

Mr. CARTER. The request I made was that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOAR. And not that it be adopted?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; that is all I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I send to the Secretary's desk a newspaper, from which I ask may be read the article I have marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read from the Washington Post of Monday, December 17, 1900, as follows:

Some Senators and Members who are interested in keeping down appropriations were rather surprised yesterday, after making computations, to discover that there are claim bills aggregating $25,000,000 favorably reported and on the Senate Calendar. There is said to be a combination of Senators back of these bills who are planning to hold up all business and force an extra session unless favorable action is assured.

These bills are principally for property alleged to have been taken or destroyed by the armies of the United States during the civil war. There is some merit in a few of them, but the great majority have been knocking about Congress for many years, and are pushed simply on account of large contingent fees, which will go to lobbyists if they become laws. The Senate is the favorite body in which to start these bills, partly for the reason that it is comparatively small, and it is easier to work up combinations of enough men interested in different measures to carry through a whole swarm, and partly because of a peculiar rule in the Senate Committee on Claims, by which any bill that has ever been reported favorably to the Senate from that committee can be reported in a subsequent Senate by a single member without consultation with his colleagues.

BEGUN BY SENATOR MONEY.

The first open effort to press one of these bills ahead of pending business of the Senate was made on Friday of last week, when Senator MONEY, of Mississippi, moved to take up what is known as the cotton-claims bill. It is estimated that this carries a total of $9,000,000 in appropriations from the Treasury. He was at once antagonized by Senator LODGE with a motion that the Senate go into executive session to consider the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. Senator MONEY protested, but did not force the fight at that time, contenting himself with serving notice that he would call up the bill at the first opportunity and that he would continue to press for an opportunity.

The evident intention of the Senators behind these claims to hold up the business of the session if they are not allowed to come to a vote was the subject of a conference yesterday between some Senate and House leaders. It was concluded that it would not be wise to allow the bills to slide through the Senate and trust to the House to hold them up, for it might be possible to make a similar combination in the House, and the mere passage of them through the Senate at this session would give them additional prestige in future Congresses. It was decided by the gentlemen who discussed the matter that the bill should be opposed to the uttermost in the Senate, even if their supporters carry out their threat to force an extra session of Congress, as the expense of an extra session and the inconvenience it would impose on Senators and Representatives would be preferable to allowing wholesale raid to be made upon the Treasury.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not think I have ever before asked to be heard upon a question of privilege based upon anything stated in newspapers, however much I respect those avenues of communication to the public of facts and opinions. I do not call this up to point out the inaccuracies of the writer of the article or to deride the sources of his information.

There is no combination of Senators of the kind alleged, so far as I am aware, and I have so good an opinion of my colleagues from the South that I do not believe they would have any scheme to plunder the Treasury without having the kindness to let me into it.

The matter seems, though, of so much importance, according to this reporter, that the leaders of the Senate and of the House of Representatives on the other side, representing a majority in both Houses, have conferred together, and have come to the determination that all these claims are to be deferred until another Congress even at the risk of an extra session.

I have never heard that there was any combination of any sort on this side of the House to secure the passage of any measure or any one of these claims. I have never heard anybody suggest that there should be an extra session of Congress, or that these bills should be unduly forced before the Senate. I do not believe that the amount named in the article is correct; but that can be easily verified, and I therefore will not dispute it.

It should have been apparent to the reporter that this Government and no other government pays for property destroyed in war, because property destroyed in war is like property destroyed by the act of God.

The claim which I presented here, and as to which the article represents me as being the advance agent of the combination, does not consist of claims upon the Calendar at all; and it is not half the amount named in the article. According to the Secretary of the Treasury, there is only $4,992,000 of that cotton fund in the Treasury; and I will remind the Senate in this connection, and also the talented reporter, that that is not a claim upon the Government for unliquidated damages, or anything of that kind, but it is to open the courts of the United States to adjudicate title to a trust fund, to be distributed to the owners of that fund as they can prove their ownership, and for nothing else. If the reporter had read the bill itself, he would have found section 6, added by myself and approved unanimously by the committee, which absolutely excludes everything but that class of people who owned the property, and it must be proven by the archives of the Treasury to be their share of the distributive fund. So much for that.

There is no combination to push that bill. The other day I brought it up, with no intention whatever to antagonize the pending treaty, but simply to occupy a part of the morning hour, very well understanding, as the reporter should have understood also, that the bill went with the morning hour, and no further.

I will also state that I have never disagreed to the fixing of a day for voting on that or any other measure.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator a member of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator able to say whether the statement contained in that newspaper article is correct, that there is a rule of the Committee on Claims that any member of that committee is at liberty to report, without consideration or reconsideration by the committee, any bill which had been theretofore passed or had received a favorable report?

Mr. MONEY. I have no knowledge of such a rule. There may be such a one. I do not know.

Mr. SPOONER. May I ask some member of the Committee on Claims if there is any such rule of the committee, as stated in this paper, that any member of that committee is at liberty to report, without action by the committee, a bill which has heretofore received a favorable report from that committee?

Mr. MASON. I think there is no such rule. This bill——

Mr. SPOONER. I simply want to know if there is such a rule.

Mr. MASON. I say I think there is no such rule. If I recollect aright, I reported the bill referred to from the Committee on Claims. I am not sure that I reported it during this Congress, but I reported it in one Congress. It was reported both times after a hearing. I think the Senator from Florida who preceded the present senior Senator from Florida made the report with me in the last Congress. I joined with him in the report. I think in this Congress the report was made by the present Senator; but it was after a full hearing before the committee, and an authorization to make the report. I know of no such rule of the committee as that which has been referred to, although there may be such a rule.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Mississippi pardon me a moment longer?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I observe on page 4 of the Calendar the statement is made that the bill was reported by Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, and subsequently another amendment was reported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. That is not a correct statement, as the original report shows it was made by the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] and myself, from the Committee on Claims, after a full hearing before the committee, and after a statement by the late Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Davis, as to the merits of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] yields to me a moment longer.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. My question had no reference whatever to the bill which is referred to, but I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] if there is any rule of the Committee on Claims of the Senate such as is indicated in this newspaper statement.

Mr. STEWART. I think there is or there was a rule to this effect, that where a bill had been favorably reported and had passed the Senate at a preceding Congress, it might be reported at the next Congress, but I doubt if it has been acted on, because such a bill is usually called up in the committee and a statement made regarding it, and if no one has any objection to it, it is reported. That has been the usual habit. I believe it is understood that it is not necessary to make any investigation when a thorough investigation has been had at a preceding session. Attention is called to this fact, and if there is no objection the committee will allow the bill to be reported. That has been the practice.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Claims is absent. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] I believe is the chairman of that committee, although there have been some changes.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is chairman of the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am told the Senator from Wyoming was the chairman at the last session. There have been some changes made in the committee. I got my information from the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I was trying to secure the passage of a claims bill, which I had passed through this body three times, to pay back a postmaster for money that the Government holds and which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported was due to this man. I approached the Senator from Colorado, when he was chairman of the committee, in regard to that bill, and inquired as to whether I should press it again. He said it had been ordered to go on an omnibus bill which was pending before this body, with a favorable report covering those claims which have been investigated by the committee and have been passed time and again.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to say, in addition to what I have stated, that I have been on and off of the Committee on Claims for a great many years, and there has been no change in the rule. The practice has been the same for the last thirty years at least—that is, where a bill has been favorably reported and has passed the Senate at a preceding Congress it is simply called up in committee, and if there is no objection, it is again reported.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I think it necessary, perhaps, in the interest of my constituents to disabuse the minds of the Senate——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is now on the floor, to state the facts about this alleged rule, if the Senator from Mississippi will allow that to be done.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I did not hear the statement which was made. If the Senator will repeat the statement, I will try to answer. I do not know what statement was made about some alleged rule of the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it from the Washington Post.

Mr. MONEY. Just one moment. To save the reading of the statement made in the article which has been read to the Senate from the Washington Post I will state that it was to the effect that the rule of the Committee on Claims was that a bill which had once been favorably reported to the Senate by the committee might be again reported by a member of the committee without further examination and placed upon the Calendar, or something to that effect. Then the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asked me whether or not I knew that was true, and I said I was not acquainted with the rule of the Committee on Claims and did not know whether it was true or not. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] explained that when a bill had been once reported and passed by the Senate it could be reported again by the Senator in charge of it.

Mr. TELLER. There never was any other rule. There never has been any rule where a bill had been examined and favorably reported that it should be reexamined. We have a great many claims before the committee from time to time which have been reported sometimes adversely and sometimes favorably. eW adopted a rule that where a claim had been examined by the committee and passed by the Senate a member of the committee might report it back to the Senate from the committee.

I want to say that the claim under discussion has been considered for years and years. We have passed I do not know how many bills recognizing the justice of the claims of the people whose cotton was taken. The committee thought it was not wise that this money held as a trust fund should be paid out in parcels, because it was evident that there was not enough of the money to cover all the claims. Therefore we reported this claim—to which the Senator refers as the claim he called up the other morning—in order that this fund might be distributed pro rata according to the claims that were proved up; the proposition, of course, being to send the claims to the Court of Claims, where all these matters would be adjudicated.

Mr. MASON. And that only such money would be taken as had actually been turned into the Treasury from the sale of this cotton.

Mr. TELLER. And, as the Senator from Illinois says, only so much money is to be distributed as the Government received for this cotton, which was not seized as contraband of war, but was seized on an entirely different principle. It has been recognized by every committee and practically at nearly every session of Congress that we were in honor bound to pay the money back. The only question is to whom we shall pay it.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This general discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. STEWART. Just a word in explanation.

Mr. MONEY. I have no wish to preclude any explanation that it may be the desire of Senators on the committee to make.

Mr. STEWART. The Government undertook to distribute the money and pay it back to the claimants through the Treasury Department. That went on for some considerable time. Congress was not satisfied with that mode of distribution, and it directed the money to be covered into the Treasury, with the understanding that some other mode of distribution should be made, so that those who had equities should all have an equal show, and that it should be sent to the Court of Claims. That was the understanding. In all cases we refuse to report individual bills, but have adhered to the theory originally adopted when the money was covered into the Treasury, that it should be held as a trust fund and distributed through the courts pro rata to those who were left.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I brought this matter to the attention of the Senate first in order to say that there is no combination that I know of—and I think I would know of it if there was one—either to press forward unduly any claim on behalf of claimants from the South or to postpone any measure before the Senate, either in its executive or open session. But as the same article says that the leaders in both Houses on the majority side have thought it of sufficient importance to confer to devise some way to put down these claims, I thought that perhaps, amid this mass of inaccuracy, some truth had inadvertently crept into the statement of the reporter, and I wish to disabuse the minds of Senators of the idea that there is any desire on this side of the Chamber, so far as I am acquainted, either to postpone action on any bill pending or any future bill or to unduly press any claim whatever. Whatever comes up must have the consideration of the Senate upon its own merits.

As I say, there is no combination; and I wish still further to disclaim any relation or connection in any way between the bill which I called up the other day and any other class of claims. It stands absolutely sui generis, a trust fund. The bill was introduced by the late lamented Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Davis, who had no Southern constituency, and was reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who has no Southern constituency. Those gentlemen, feeling that they were rather burdened with affairs that did not concern their constituents, requested me to call up the bill whenever opportunity presented and press for its passage. I did so at their request, and also because my constituents were perhaps more largely interested in the bill than any others. I hope Senators on the other side will not get an erroneous impression because a newspaper reporter, in the hurry of getting his work to press by 3 o'clock in the morning, has seen fit to call upon his vivid imagination to supply his lack of facts about this matter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That Senate bill No. 3450, to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States, be made a special order for Thursday, January 3, 1901, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12394) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1898, and to reduce taxation thereunder, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 12737) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. LODGE (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 18, 1900, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 17, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

PREFERENCE TO SOLDIERS IN CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYMENTS.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the rules be suspended and House bill No. 5779, with the amendments thereto, be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is this motion made by authority of the Committee on Civil Service Reform?

Mr. BROMWELL. It is, Mr. Speaker, by authority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every Executive Department of the United States Government and in each and every branch thereof, whether reached by competitive or noncompetitive examinations under the civil-service laws (in which case the rules and regulations affecting the same shall so provide), honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines who served as such between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1865, and first after the aforementioned veterans of the civil war those honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the recent with Spain or in the Philippine Islands, they being otherwise qualified, shall be certified and preferred for appointment to and retention in employment in the public service and for promotion therein. Age, loss of limbs, or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate shall not disqualify them, provided they possess the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved; and persons thus preferred shall not be removed from their positions except for good cause, upon charges, and after a hearing.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

Mr. BROMWELL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will allow a second to be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that the word "war" is omitted after the word "recent," in line 1, page 2, of the bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. I was about to insert that, Mr. Speaker. It was inadvertently omitted in making up the bill.

The SPEAKER. That, then, will be considered as one of the pending amendments to which the motion applies.

Mr. BROMWELL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOWLER. There is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. RICHARDSON, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BROMWELL, as tellers.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not object, Mr. Speaker; it was the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the custom to appoint the gentleman demanding tellers. However, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. FOWLER, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BROMWELL, to act as tellers.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 34.

The SPEAKER. A majority seconding the motion, the question now comes upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended, including the word "war," referred to.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard in opposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized to control the twenty minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, is it competent under this order to amend the bill by striking out that provision that requires written charges to be preferred and trial to be had before an employee can be discharged by the head of a Department?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order. The vote must be taken on the proposition as made by the mover. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for twenty minutes in opposition.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I desire to be recorded against the passage of this bill, because I do not fully understand it. I am unable to get a copy of the bill. I have the bill as introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL], but it seems that I can not get a copy of it as reported from the committee. Now, before I use any more time in opposition to the bill, I should be glad if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] would tell us what is in it, and particularly tell us how this bill as introduced affects the law as at present on the statute books.

As I understand it, soldiers and sailors honorably discharged in the late war between the States now have a preference to appointment under the civil-service law. All honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the war between the States now have a preference to appointment to positions under the civil service. The gentleman's bill, as introduced, related alone, as I understand it, to the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of that war; but the committee, as they have reported it, make some recommendations with respect to the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Philippine war, so called. Now, I do not understand exactly what that provision is.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, the object of the bill as originally introduced——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should be glad if the gentleman would tell us how his bill, as he offers it, affects the old law and how the amendment applies.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will do so with pleasure. Mr. Speaker, the object of the bill as originally introduced by me—which I will say was the bill prepared by the Grand Army of the United States and is favored by them—was to extend the law as it now exists, which gives a preference to those soldiers and sailors of the civil war who were separated from the service on account of wounds or disease and who now, under the operations of the civil-service law, have a preference, so as to cover all soldiers and sailors of the civil war without respect to those disabilities. In other words, to extend it to any honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the civil war.

The thought in the mind of the committee being that this provision ought not to be limited to soldiers and sailors of the civil war, the committee amended the bill by making it apply also to the honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war and the war in the Philippines.

The argument in favor of the extension of this preferential provision is this: Whereas the present law provides for those who are discharged on account of wounds or disease, the proposed amendment, it is thought, will give a more capable class of men who are equally deserving an opportunity for this preference. In other words, instead of limiting the appointments to those who are lame and maimed, or who are suffering from the effects of disease contracted in the service, this amendment extends it so as to get into the service on preferential appointment those who are probably better able physically and mentally, and particularly physically, to perform the duties of the various positions.

Now, so far as the amendment is concerned extending the preference to the soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war, gentlemen will understand the reason for that. When this war broke out a great many of our best young men all over the country enlisted in the Army.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. Does this bill excuse old soldiers and sailors from the civil service rule—exempt them from any examination?

Mr. BROMWELL. It does not, and the bill specifically provides that it shall apply to those who now either take the examination on a noncompetitive basis or to those who take the examination on a competitive basis. The gentleman will understand, of course, that there are some positions for which noncompetitive examinations are given. There are other positions for which competitive examinations are required. This bill does not make any difference in the existing law in that respect. Those who apply for positions in the competitive service will be required, as heretofore, to take the examination. As the law now stands, a soldier of the civil war who was separated from the service by reason of wounds or other disabilities is given an examination.

If he attains a percentage of 65 in that examination, he is given preference over others examined, so that there is no difference in that respect from the present law and that proposed in this amendment. The only thing is that it extends the class of those who may have this preference from those who were disabled by wounds or disease and separated from the service on that account, and takes in all sailors and soldiers, whether disabled or not, and it also extends the preference to the sailors and soldiers of the Spanish war and the war in the Philippines upon exactly the same basis. In other words, if they apply for a position that is to be filled by noncompetitive examination, this gives them the preference after such examination; if they apply for a position to be given under competitive examination, they are to take that examination and are given the preference if they attain the required percentage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not like the idea of making a discrimination. Why did not the committee include the Mexican soldiers, as they are certainly as worthy of recognition as those who are engaged in the war in the Philippines, or the war in Cuba, or any other war. Would not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to amend the bill so that it should include all the soldiers of all the wars of the United States? Why should not they be put on an equal footing?

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, I will say that it is not likely that there are any survivors of the Mexican war, or any great number of them, who would be able to take clerical service now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think not, myself; but I dislike to see a discrimination made. They ought to be put on the same footing. In this era of good feeling and era of peace and brotherly love the soldiers of all the wars ought to be put on the same footing, not only of the wars that have passed, but if we have any more; and I think it would be well to make the provision, if it applies to any, apply to all.

Mr. BROMWELL. The same reason that there was for the preference bill over twenty years ago applies to-day. It was to give a preference to a certain class of soldiers and sailors in the United States service. The present law did not go back to take in survivors of the Mexican war, and there is no more reason now and really less reason, as those survivors are older and less capable of filling public office.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. Why do you fix August 26, 1865, as the date upon which your benefactions shall apply?

Mr. BROMWELL. Because that was supposed to be the close of the civil war.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the courts have ruled that the close of the war was in August, 1866. I myself was not mustered out until the 2d of July, 1866, and they have adopted a rule that recognizes August, 1866, as the final conclusion of the war of the rebellion. I merely make that inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. BROMWELL. In answer to the gentleman, I will say that this bill was prepared under the direction and with the approval of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States, and we have it precisely in the same form as they offered it.

Mr. BINGHAM. You will find upon inquiry that the official declaration of the department or courts somewhere fixes the date of the end of the war as August, 1866.

Mr. BROMWELL. Most of those who were discharged after that date had service between the two dates in this bill, and by fixing it at the first date those who received their discharge shortly afterwards probably had seen service prior to the last date of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Let me suggest this to my colleague: There are a number of decisions fixing the date for the termination of the war, and consequently the committee in fixing it put it closer to the end of actual hostilities, so that those who served prior to that time must have taken some part in the civil war, while others, enlisted later on, while technically they might have been in the service prior to the end of the war, were not intended to be covered by this resolution. As to the soldiers of the Mexican war, the youngest of them now would be not less than 72 years of age.

Mr. BROMWELL. There is no question about that.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. In your amended bill do you not say that a man must not be discharged except after a trial upon written charges?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is in the bill as reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not in the original bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BROMWELL. No; it is not upon written charges; it is upon charges.

Mr. WHEELER. Whether written or oral?

Mr. BROMWELL. Either.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the object of requiring trial before the discharge of the clerk, which is put in on this bill, when it is not required for the ordinary clerk in the departments?

Mr. BROMWELL. The object is to prevent the head of any department from summarily discharging the old sailor or old soldier without cause.

Mr. WHEELER. Who is to be the judge of that cause? Who is to conduct the trial?

Mr. BROMWELL. That will be a matter of regulation after the bill is enacted into law.

Mr. WHEELER. You can not say that a trial shall be had without lodging authority in some one to conduct the trial. You are putting men in there, it seems to me, under favor, and putting them above their superiors. If they are incompetent in the judgment of their superior, he can not dismiss them; he can not discharge them.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me, let me suggest that this is practically the rule which all persons in the civil service are now under. Although the language is not quite the same about the other employees, in practice they require charges and give them an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; but that is a rule that is never observed.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. Yes; it is observed very carefully.

Mr. WHEELER. Now, just a moment, if the gentleman from Ohio will pardon me. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Do you not authorize the appointment of an old soldier either of the civil or the Spanish war to some place under the Government when he does not attain the same degree of efficiency as the civilian is required to attain?

Mr. BROMWELL. That is the present law. The present law requires the old soldier or sailor of the civil war who was separated from the service by reason of wounds or other disability—it requires that he shall attain a percentage of 65 to be placed on the eligible list and certified for appointment, while a person who is not a soldier or sailor is required to obtain 75 per cent.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the object of this bill?

Mr. BROMWELL. This is to extend the class to those who are honorably discharged from the service, but who were not separated by reason of wounds or other disabilities.

Mr. WHEELER. But you do not require any 65 per cent.

Mr. BROMWELL. Most certainly; the law is not changed in that respect. It says:

> That in every Executive Department of the United States Government and in each and every branch thereof, whether reached by competitive or noncompetitive examinations under the civil-service laws (in which case the rules and regulations affecting the same shall so provide), honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines who served, etc.

It leaves the law in precisely the same respect that it is now.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I think the suggestion a good one, to give the preference to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of these wars; but I object seriously to giving them the preference over civilians who obtain a higher grade. You should not take the dolt and prefer him to the bright young man simply because the dolt has been a member of the Army or Navy.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CLAYTON of New York. Mr. Speaker, referring to the one question that has been raised here about whether an examination is required, I would like to say that this law is practically the same as the one in operation in New York State, and has been for some time. It does not lower the standard of our civil service in any way whatever. It simply provides that when two men pass the required examination (and the percentage can be placed as high as is necessary for the efficiency of the service), and when one of them is an honorably discharged soldier of one of the wars, he shall have the preference over the other man who is not a soldier or sailor, although the paper of the latter may be a little higher. It does not appoint any man to office who is incompetent; and as far as the discharges are concerned it requires the head of the department to prefer charges and be able to give the reason why he discharges the old soldier. It is a provision that has been found to be a wise one, and has protected the old soldiers in New York State. I believe these provisions in behalf of the old soldiers which have been extended by a State government ought to be extended by the General Government in whose behalf the service was performed which entitled them to preference.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a question?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman submit to an amendment on page 2, where it says "business capacity necessary to discharge?" Now, on page 1, the language is this: "Age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate shall not disqualify them, provided they possess the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties," etc. I want to add: "and physical ability to perform the duties." You do not want men in there as clerks who have no physical ability to perform the duties.

Mr. BROMWELL. I should say the man who had the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties would have the physical ability.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I think a man might have the business capacity and yet be physically incompetent to discharge his duty.

Mr. BROMWELL. The language of the bill is "which does not in fact incapacitate." Why, then, the necessity for the provision which the gentleman suggests?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It seems to me you have an inconsistency in your bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Not at all. If there should be such age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment as does in fact incapacitate, the person could not go upon the eligible list. If "age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment does not in fact incapacitate," the person may go on the eligible list. What, then, is the necessity for the amendment suggested by the gentleman?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why, then, make this statement, that "age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate does not disqualify?" That is the proposition of the bill.

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the need for that provision?

Mr. BROMWELL. Suppose the gentleman should apply for a position as a messenger and had no limbs upon which to go around, or had only one limb; or suppose he should apply for a position as clerk and had lost both arms. There are other positions to which he might be eligible, but not that particular one, because the physical disability would disqualify him by reason of the character of the service required.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. This bill simply means, to my mind, to take in the whole of the soldier element without any disqualifying clause whatever. It means simply a civil service pension to the old soldiers. That is the end and the object.

Mr. BROMWELL. There is no service pension provided in the bill. On the other hand, the very object of this bill is to give to the old soldiers who are liable to be pensioners upon the Government an opportunity to render service and earn their living instead of being objects of charity.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that all of this very class of soldiers are already pensioned.

Mr. BROMWELL. Not all. This bill extends a preference to those who are not already pensioned and who are not incapacitated by reason of wounds or other disability.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why not include the soldiers of the Mexican and Indian wars?

Mr. BROMWELL. Because the question of the Mexican war and the Indian wars is one that probably was not taken into account when the original bill was passed. At any rate, the survivors of those wars are now undoubtedly too old to render efficient service.

Mr. BINGHAM. The general law pensions all soldiers of the Mexican war.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But only at the rate of $8 a month.

Mr. BROMWELL. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. I wish to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge to what extent this preference operates. As I understand the matter, under the present law a discharged soldier or sailor who passes at 65 in a competitive examination goes upon the eligible list. Are we to understand that when he is thus placed on the eligible list he has a preference over all civilians on the eligible list regardless of the percentage at which they passed the examination?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will say to the gentleman that that is the present law as to those who are now given this preference.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand, then, that if this bill passes all those who have served in any of the wars mentioned, when placed on the eligible list, pass immediately to the top of that list, and therefore, so long as there is on any eligible list of the civil service any man who has ever served in any of these wars, no civilian on that list can receive an appointment to the civil service. Is that true?

Mr. BROMWELL. I will say to the gentleman that that is the case. That is what this bill provides for.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that is questionable policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has expired. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] desires recognition. I yield him five minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that this bill comes up now; because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] was not authorized by the committee to bring it up, but another member of the committee, with whom I had an arrangement that it should not be brought up without notifying me. Consequently I do not think the bill is properly before the House.

Mr. BROMWELL. Let me ask the gentleman a question. He has made a pretty broad charge; and I wish to ask him who is the gentleman who was authorized to bring up this bill?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. LANDIS, of Indiana.

Mr. BROMWELL. I will say that on Saturday——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The gentleman's statement must not come out of my time.

Mr. BROMWELL. I want to correct a misstatement of the gentleman, which is entirely unauthorized.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This bill provides exactly what the gentleman from Ohio has just said—that so long as there is on the civil-service roll a veteran of any war no civilian upon that list can receive an appointment under this Government. So far as concerns the veterans of the civil war, it does not seem to me that that matter is very important in its effect upon the service, although, of course, just now when we are criticising our civil service because it has in it so many aged men, this provision opens the way for that very class of men to fill up the positions. But I do not think there are a great many who can avail themselves of the provision. To me the dangerous feature of this bill is that every veteran of the late war—every member of the Regular Army or the Regular Navy who is in service to-day or who served in the war with Spain—is entitled at any time, if he can pass the examination, to go right to the top of the list.

Now, there were about 225,000 volunteers who were engaged in the late war. There are a hundred thousand men now in the service. There are going to be 35,000 more as soon as the volunteers come back this spring and regulars are enlisted to take their places. Thus there are about 300,000 men who will be entitled to this preference just as soon as they get on the roll. And that means, Mr. Speaker, that no civilian for a great many years to come is going to get on that roll.

Now, if that is not class legislation, I would like to ask what it is. Of course we naturally, all of us, have a tendency to vote in favor of a bill which some one class favors, because we know that that class is unanimously in favor of it, while the great bulk of the people affected unfavorably do not care, perhaps, much one way or the other. But in this case it strikes from the service of the Government, perhaps for many years to come, the whole bulk of the people and puts the military class in the service.

In the seventeen years since the civil-service law was passed less than 70,000 persons have been appointed under it, and less than 20 per cent of the persons examined have succeeded in getting places. How many persons, outside of the 300,000 young soldiers, will succeed in getting places in the next seventeen years if this bill should become a law?

I agree that gratitude is due to all the soldiers of the Republic, but I do not think that this is the way to express it.

During the civil war thousands of men undoubtedly enlisted on both sides—North and South—from a pure sense of duty, because they thought their country was in danger and their services were needed, and many of them, with a noble self-sacrifice, gave up their ambitions and their happiness for the purpose of entering the service. But I do not think the same holds true, as a rule, with reference to the regular. He does not enlist from the same consideration and is not entitled to be placed in the same category. He likes the service; he is not enlisting from a love of country or a sense of duty, but from free choice and preference. It is his business, his profession.

I do not think that the regular soldier, as a rule, goes into the Army because of the reasons that influence the majority of the volunteers, who leave their homes and their farms and give up all that they have in life to bear their share of the burdens of the country. But the regular takes his choice. And the same applies, although in a less degree, to some of the soldiers of every war, particularly a short and one-sided war. Where a man has risked his life for his country, sacrificing his home and his preferences to do so, nothing, in my judgment, is too great as a reward for him. But where a man goes in as a business, because he likes the service and proposes to make it his constant occupation, I do not think he is entitled to the preference in the civil service which might properly be given to the other class.

Then, again, there is the pension to which the soldier is entitled. That is a better method of compensation than making the civil service of the Government open only to one class rather than to all the people. The regular soldier is entitled to support by the Government as long as he lives. Why, at the same time, then, would you put him at the top of the civil list? It seems to me that this legislation is careless and unfair, that it is drawn undoubtedly with good intent, but it is not prepared in such form as should meet the approval of the House, and that it would be for the benefit of a large class who already have certain privileges and benefits to the detriment of the masses of the people of the country. Our civil service should not belong to any one party or to any one class, but should be open to all the people, and selection and promotion should be made by merit and not by favor.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have one minute, with the consent of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have promised to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly favorable to any kind of legislation that is for the benefit of the persons named in this bill, but I am not in favor of the legislation proposed here. I do not believe that anybody has the right to speak for those men who might be benefited by this law, and say that he represents them.

I do not believe that those men who served between 1861 and 1865, or the masses of them, ask for this legislation. It is most inequitable and unjust, and it enters the Government upon a new order of things.

If I read the bill aright it gives to one of these beneficiaries, as a right, the right to promotion, for instance. That becomes a vested right. If it is of value, does it not introduce at the same time the disorder of a mandamus proceeding against an officer of the Government, to compel him to make promotions under the terms of the law?

Again, under the terms of the bill the right to retain the position becomes a vested right, a thing of value, because there is a provision here that there shall be no ouster at all without written charges and a hearing. Now, if the right is worth $20, under the Constitution of the United States does not the bill provide for a trial by jury before you can dispossess the appointee? Imagine conditions of that kind in the various Departments under the civil service of the United States. What kind of discipline could be maintained by the Secretary, the chief, or the head of a bureau or division, when a man claims to hold a tenure of office so firmly that there could be no ouster until after a hearing, examination, or trial of that kind? I do not understand what the object can be. Under the law as it is to-day preference is required in matters of appointment, other things being equal, to the old soldier. I believe that is all that the worthy old soldier asks, and therefore I am opposed to this legislation.

I yield the balance of my five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I greatly desire the passage of some legislation upon this subject, but I join the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in the criticisms which he has made, and I hope that the committee, or the gentleman in charge of the bill, as the case may be—for I understand this is individual suspension day, and therefore the question whether the committee authorized the presentation of the bill here this morning or not does not enter practically—I hope the gentleman will withdraw this bill and amend it or suffer it to be amended in the House at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio why a preference is given between the soldiers and sailors of the United States in favor of those of the war of 1861 over those of the Spanish and Philippine controversy?

Mr. BROMWELL. The reason is this: The bill as originally introduced had no reference at all to the soldiers of the Spanish war. It was intended to extend the class of the civil-war soldiers to whom this preference should be given, and, in spite of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] says, I will say that this bill is, to a great extent—in fact, altogether—an official bill, prepared and presented under the auspices of the Grand Army of the United States. It was advocated by a committee of the Grand Army, and the posts all over the United States have largely indorsed and approved this bill and requested its passage. Now, as I say, it was originally limited to soldiers and sailors of the civil war. Then a suggestion was made in the committee that the bill be extended to include the soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war, and the committee agreed to that amendment.

Mr. SIMS. But why make a preference between them, if they stand on the same ground?

Mr. BROMWELL. For the reason that they now have a preference, and the only preference over all others, whether military or civil.

Mr. SIMS. Then it was not that the committee regarded service in the Spanish or Philippine war as less worthy of favorable consideration than service in the other war?

Mr. BROMWELL. Not at all. It was to take care of these old veterans first, and then the younger men of the Spanish war and the Philippine war.

Mr. SIMS. But this will be permanent law, and after awhile the others will be reached.

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly they will.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this is a just and a meritorious bill, and I am heartily in favor of it and hope it will pass. Every Grand Army post in my district has written to me and requested me to favor it and vote for it. I shall do so. I have also received a number of letters from soldiers and sailors urging the passage of this measure. I concur in all that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL] has said, and I differ radically and dissent from the statements made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. This bill seeks, in a small way, to recognize and reward the valor and the patriotism of the soldiers and sailors of our country. I believe these brave men are entitled to that recognition. I believe they should have a preference. It is right. I have always favored giving some preference to the soldiers and the sailors who fought for their country.

In my judgment this bill does not go far enough. I would extend its provisions. In the State of New York we have a law somewhat similar to this, but which goes much further. Under that law the soldiers and the sailors of the Union are entitled to much more, and I know of no one who objects to the justice of that law.

I trust that this House will pass this bill. It ought to pass unanimously. I want to say here and now that I am, always have been, and always will be in favor of doing all in my power for the brave and heroic soldiers and sailors of the Union. Gratitude to them for what they have done compels me to give my assent and my vote to this bill, and I appeal to all here to vote in favor of it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much time is left of my twenty minutes?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because I am opposed to the creation of a military caste for the government of a free country. If the soldiers fight for anything, they fight to maintain our institutions, the fundamental principle of which is equality. I believe in showing them every recognition that can fairly be asked. I believe in a liberal system of pensions; but I believe also that every citizen should have an equal right to participate in the government of the country, whether as a part of the civil service or in voting. The civil-service rules are designed to ascertain the fitness of candidates for positions in the departments. If those rules are not wise, are not adapted to the end in view, they should be repealed or changed. If they are to be continued, they should have a uniform general application. It seems to me this bill casts a slur upon the intelligence of the soldier who is able to compete with the civilian for a chance to take a share in the government of the country.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING].

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Speaker, some of the gentlemen who oppose this bill are known to the House and throughout the country as being opposed to the civil service itself, and desire to abolish it. As for myself, I am in favor, and always have been, of an efficient civil service for the Government; and I think it fortunate, therefore, that men who are opposed to the civil service, whose names I need not call, and some who are in favor of the civil service, such as the gentlemen from Massachusetts, both of whom have spoken, and some of us on this side of the Hall, can unite in opposition to the passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the only effect of this measure upon the public service will be to render it more inefficient than it is. It can have no other effect.

Now, as the gentleman from Massachusetts said, the men who risked their lives and their fortunes in a fierce and bloody war, men who met upon battlefields where thousands were slain, as was the case in our civil war, may deserve that some exceptional rule be applied to them. But while those may be comparatively few who could come in from the civil war and take position at the head of the eligible list, if you open the gate wide and put in the whole roster of the Regular Army and the Volunteer Army in the Spanish war and the Philippine war, and all other wars we have had or may have in the future, as the general purpose of this bill seems to indicate, what is to become of the civil service? The efficient men from civil life will be driven out of the civil service, and we will have a military caste built up on account of war service.

Our nation is the most liberal on the face of the earth in the matter of pensioning soldiers. We provide liberal pensions for all who have lost their health or limbs in the service of their country, and also for those who are simply dependent. If this bill is passed it will destroy the efficiency of the civil service.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the committee it was considered that now the old soldiers who are not suffering from physical disabilities had reached so small a number that possibly it might be wise to include them in this list, and that is the view urged by the old soldiers themselves. It was while we were discussing this very proposition with a view of its adoption that it was suggested that the soldiers of the recent war should also be included; and under a sentimental impulse, by a mere majority, they, too, were made legislative beneficiaries, although it has been conceded by everybody that for the last twenty-five or thirty years no such thing should be done with regard to the soldiers of the civil war, and never had been done, because unwise. Now the effect of this bill would be this: Every man that has been in the Regular Army, or any man who has been in any way connected with the Volunteer Army and honorably discharged, shall go to the head of the list if he shall obtain 65 in an examination. In other words, for the next fifty years the American youth of the land are to be excluded from the civil service simply because 250,000 or 300,000 men have enlisted in the recent war. The result of that would be to make the civil service a great charitable institution instead of the efficient public business institution that it ought to be. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time for debate is exhausted. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. BROMWELL. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and the Speaker announced the affirmative vote as 49.

Mr. SULZER. The yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five gentlemen have arisen. The Chair requests the other side to rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-three gentlemen have arisen, and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. BROMWELL. A parliamentary inquiry. Were there not 25 votes?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-five yeas, and 123 against it. Those opposed to the passage of the bill will rise and remain standing until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and five opposed. On this question the ayes are 51; the noes are 105; two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill is lost.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. CANNON, from the Committee on Appropriations, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 12838) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; it is a very short bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Any new legislation?

Mr. CANNON. No; if there is, it can go out on a point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think I will reserve all points of order.

Mr. GIBSON. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois how long a time this will consume?

Mr. CANNON. I should think it might pass in ten minutes; perhaps five.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, how will this affect the special order for to-day?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois is correct, it will take ten minutes out of the time. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before that vote is taken, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the Clerk may read again that provision which provides for an additional assistant attorney in the attorney's office for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report that part of the bill.

The Clerk again read the provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that provision is so drafted as that the office shall cease at the end of the year?

Mr. CANNON. The appropriation is only for the balance of the fiscal year. It does not create any office beyond the terms of the appropriation.

Mr. LITTLE. I desire to inquire the necessity for the provision postponing the opening of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservation for eight months?

Mr. CANNON. I will say, as I recollect it, that the law ratifying that treaty provided it should be opened and allotments should be made in six months, but there was no appropriation made for that purpose. There is an appropriation for allotments generally at Indian reservations, and $10,000 was utilized by the Secretary of the Interior for that purpose, but it fell short $75,000. It was impossible to do this until the allotments shall first be made and surveys made and provided for, and therefore it necessitated the extension of the time eight months.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand it will require eight months to complete the work and make it ready?

Mr. CURTIS. The Secretary of the Interior says that he does not think it will take that time, but he wants to make sure that there will be time enough. He will complete it as soon as possible.

Mr. CANNON. This is an item placed in the bill after somewhat of an investigation by the Committee on Appropriations, but very largely upon what purported to be a thorough investigation by the Committee on Indian Affairs and the transmittal of a recommendation from that committee for this appropriation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This extension begins from the 6th of December and runs eight months. That would make it the 6th of August that the country must be open for settlement.

Mr. FLYNN. This is the identical provision that the Committee on Indian Affairs recommended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN KENTUCKY.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 971) to divide Kentucky into two judicial districts.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 531 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by striking therefrom the word "Kentucky."

SEC. 2. That the State of Kentucky is divided into two judicial districts, which shall be called the eastern and the western judicial districts of the State of Kentucky. The eastern district includes the counties of Carroll, Gallatin, Boone, Kenton, Campbell, Pendleton, Grant, Owen, Franklin, Bourbon, Scott, Woodford, Fayette, Jessamine, Garrard, Madison, Lincoln, Rockcastle, Pulaski, Wayne, Whitley, Bell, Knox, Harlan, Laurel, Clay, Leslie, Letcher, Perry, Owsley, Jackson, Estill, Lee, Breathitt, Knott, Pike, Floyd, Magoffin, Martin, Johnson, Lawrence, Boyd, Greenup, Carter, Elliott, Morgan, Wolfe, Powell, Menifee, Clark, Montgomery, Bath, Rowan, Lewis, Fleming, Mason, Bracken, Robertson, Nicholas, Harrison, with the waters thereof. The western district includes the residue of said State of Kentucky, with the waters thereof.

SEC. 3. That the district judge of the judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted, and in office at the time this act takes effect, shall be the district judge for the western judicial district of Kentucky as constituted by this act. That the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court in said judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted, and in office at the time this act takes effect, shall be the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the western judicial district of Kentucky, respectively, as hereby constituted, until their successors, respectively, shall be appointed and qualified. The district attorney, assistant district attorneys, marshal, deputy marshals, deputy clerks, and referees in bankruptcy resident in said western judicial district of Kentucky as constituted by this act shall, within their respective jurisdictions in said western judicial district, continue in office and continue to be such officers in such western district until the expiration of their respective terms of office as heretofore fixed by law, or until their successors shall be duly appointed and qualified.

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge for the eastern judicial district of Kentucky, who shall possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said eastern judicial district as hereby constituted or transferred thereto, succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said eastern judicial district as are now possessed by and performed by the district judge for the district of Kentucky.

SEC. 5. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a marshal and district attorney for the said eastern judicial district of Kentucky as hereby constituted, who shall, within their respective jurisdictions, possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the marshals and district attorneys of the United States, respectively.

SEC. 6. That all other officers residing within the eastern judicial district of the State of Kentucky, as hereby constituted, shall cease to be such officers when their successors are appointed and qualified.

SEC. 7. That the office of marshal and district attorney in each of said districts, deputy marshals and assistant district attorneys, and all other officers authorized by law and made necessary by the creation of said two districts and the provisions of this act, and all vacancies created hereby in either of said districts as constituted by this act, shall be filled in the manner provided by existing law. The salaries, pay, fees, and allowances of the judges, district attorneys, marshals, clerks, and other officers in said districts, until changed under the provisions of existing law, shall be the same, respectively, as now fixed by law for such officers in the judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted.

SEC. 8. That all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted whereof the courts of the eastern judicial district of Kentucky as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and the same shall be proceeded with in the eastern judicial district of Kentucky as hereby constituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said eastern judicial district, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto; and all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted whereof the courts of the western judicial district of Kentucky as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and the same shall be proceeded with in the western judicial district of Kentucky as hereby constituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said western judicial district, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto: Provided, That all motions and causes submitted, and all causes and proceedings, both civil and criminal, including proceedings in bankruptcy, now pending in said judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judge of the judicial district of Kentucky as heretofore constituted, or taken in whole or in part and submitted and passed upon by the said district judge, shall be proceeded with and disposed of in said western judicial district of Kentucky as constituted by this act.

SEC. 9. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Kentucky shall be held at the following times and places, namely: At Louisville, beginning on the third Monday in May and the first Monday in December in each year; at Owensboro, beginning on the fourth Monday in January and the first Monday in June in each year; at Paducah, beginning on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in November in each year; at Bowling Green, beginning on the third Monday in April and the second Monday in October in each year.

That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Kentucky shall be held at the following times and places, namely: At Frankfort, beginning on the first Monday in January and the second Monday in June in each year; at Ashland, beginning on the first Monday in October and the second Monday in April in each year; at Covington, beginning on the second Monday in May and the first Monday in December in each year; at Richmond, beginning on the second Monday in September and the fourth Monday in March in each year; at London, beginning on the fourth Monday in January and the fourth Monday in June in each year.

SEC. 10. That the terms of said courts shall not be limited to any particular number of days nor shall it be necessary to adjourn by reason of the intervention of a term elsewhere; but the court intervening may be adjourned until the business of the court in session is concluded.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal section 578 of the revised statutes or the act of August 8, 1888, entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the district of Kentucky at Owensboro, in said district, and for other purposes."

SEC. 12. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts shall be cognizable within the district in which committed, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses committed before the passage of this act in which indictments have not been found or proceedings instituted shall be cognizable within the district as hereby constituted in which such crimes or offenses were committed.

SEC. 13. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1901.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman if he will consider a second as ordered?

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to the second being considered as ordered.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed by this bill to divide the State of Kentucky into two judicial districts. Kentucky was the first State admitted into the Union—June 1, 1792—with then a population not exceeding 100,000 people. For more than one hundred years that State has been compelled to be contented with one judicial district, while every State that touches its border, with the exception of West Virginia (long since formed into a State) has at least two judicial districts, and one—the State of Tennessee—three districts.

The average population to a judicial district, taking the entire Union, is less than 1,000,000 people. In Kentucky, by the recent census, there are 2,147,174 people. From its extreme northeastern point to its extreme southwestern border the State is about 500 miles long, and the average width is something near 100 miles, constituting an area of about 40,000 square miles. The eastern one-third of that State is a mountainous region, rich in timber and mineral resources. Foreign capital has gone to that section, various kinds of improvement companies have been organized there, and there is a systematic development going on all through that section of the State. In eastern Kentucky there is perhaps the finest coal that is to be found anywhere within the Union. Certainly its timbers are not excelled anywhere in any of the States.

Many of the land titles there are held under grants from the State of Virginia, and this of necessity brings about litigation which is cognizable in the Federal courts. An examination of the Attorney-General's report—the last one I have been able to get hold of, that of June 30, 1899—shows the fact to be that the district judges in Kentucky have been very energetic upon the bench. As many cases have been disposed of there by the one court as in many of the States that have two or three judicial districts; yet, with all that, there are as many cases pending now upon the dockets of the various courts of that State as are found in most of the States that have two or three judicial districts. Such an examination shows that Kentucky, with its one judicial district, has more civil cases pending upon its dockets than Alabama, with two districts; as many almost as Arkansas, with two districts; more than Florida, with two districts; more than Iowa, with two districts; more than Mississippi, with two districts; as many as Missouri, with two districts; as many as Tennessee, with its three districts and two judges, and almost as many as Virginia and Wisconsin.

The total number of cases, criminal and civil, make an equally favorable showing for the proposition to divide the State into two districts; and candor requires me to say that, considering the present condition of the dockets in that State, I do not believe it will be possible for one judge ever to work the docket to the point that cases brought in the Federal court can be determined within any reasonable time after they are instituted.

As I said a while ago, all our neighboring States have two districts. Kentucky is in the sixth circuit, I believe, and every State in that circuit except Kentucky has now two judicial districts. We feel that there is a pressing necessity for an additional judicial district in that State; hence we come and ask Congress to divide the State into two districts, as provided in this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have before me a table (being a part of a report prepared upon another bill) showing the number of criminal cases on the docket in each district of the United States. By this report it appears that in the State of Kentucky for the year 1897 there were 50 criminal cases on the docket; in 1896, 99 cases; in 1895, 109; and in 1894, 82. It would not seem that the criminal business there requires two judges to take care of it.

I understand that the present judge down there thinks that he can do all the business, although while he was a member of Congress he submitted a statement or brief in favor of having two districts in Kentucky. I think that the sensible way in all these matters would be to divide a judicial district into subdivisions as we do in respect to our State courts.

In many States where a district embraces a number of counties the judge goes around, holding court in each county for the cases arising there. In this way witnesses have only a short distance to travel from their homes in order to attend court; thus there is no great expense in that respect. The same thing should be done in regard to the business of our United States courts, so that instead of dragging a party or witness or attorney, at great expense, from one end of the State of Kentucky to the other, or from one end to the other of any large district, cases might be tried within the locality where they originated. Of course if we are to continue our present clumsy system, it is asking a good deal of litigants to take the witnesses from one end of a large State to the other, especially if it is a mountainous State. I have a great deal of sympathy for parties so situated, and would be glad to see the expense and annoyance in such cases reduced.

Mr. WHEELER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has suggested a point to which I wish to direct his particular attention. There is in connection with this matter an evil which Congress should remedy at the first opportunity. A number of our district and circuit judges on the Federal bench are in the habit of going to the place where they are required to hold court, and then, after calling the docket, they put the papers in their pockets and go back to their homes, requiring the lawyers and witnesses to go there, traveling perhaps three or four hundred miles, in order to take part in the hearing of the cause. I am very glad the gentleman from New York has touched upon this point. I should like to hear what he thinks of such a practice.

Mr. PAYNE. My remedy would be what I have already indicated—to divide the State into subdistricts and have each case tried in the subdivision in which it arises. Under this arrangement the judge might hold court in the vicinity where the case originates.

Mr. WHEELER. And the gentleman would require him to stay there to try the case and render his decision?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly, just as is required in the States. There need be no difficulty about that. The judge in the State court goes to the subdistrict and hears there the cases that are ready.

I simply throw out this suggestion. I am aware it is useless to oppose any measure of this kind. While I am strongly opposed in general to these propositions for dividing judicial districts, I realize there is much pressure for it. I have no doubt that in this case, as in every other reported by the Judiciary Committee in favor of additional courts and judges, the proposition will go through the House. But I think, Mr. Speaker, the system is all wrong, and I hope the Judiciary Committee will be able to give my suggestion some attention, so as to devise, if possible, some better way of accomplishing the purpose contemplated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I move to reconsider the vote just taken——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that is not necessary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10834. An act granting a pension to Michael Dempsey;

H. J. Res. 281. Joint resolution to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1900, on the 20th day of said month; and

H. R. 8487. An act for the relief of Col. B. Dougherty and other members of the Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the bill H. R. 953 and suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read to which the gentleman from New Jersey refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 953) dividing the State of West Virginia into two judicial districts.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 531 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by striking therefrom the words "West Virginia."

SEC. 2. That the State of West Virginia is divided into two judicial districts, which shall be called the northern and southern judicial districts of the State of West Virginia. The northern district includes the counties of Hancock, Brooke, Ohio, Marshall, Tyler, Pleasants, Wood, Wirt, Ritchie, Doddridge, Wetzel, Monongalia, Marion, Harrison, Lewis, Gilmer, Calhoun, Upshur, Barbour, Taylor, Preston, Tucker, Randolph, Pendleton, Hardy, Grant, Mineral, Hampshire, Morgan, Berkeley, and Jefferson, with the waters thereof; the southern district includes the residue of said State of West Virginia, with the waters thereof.

SEC. 3. That the district judge of the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted and in office at the time this act takes effect shall be the district judge for the northern judicial district of West Virginia as constituted by this act; that the clerk of the circuit court and the clerk of the district court in said judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted and in office at the time this act takes effect shall be the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the northern judicial district of West Virginia, respectively, as hereby constituted, until their successors, respectively, shall be appointed and qualified.

SEC. 4. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a marshal and district attorney for the northern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted, who shall, within their respective jurisdictions, possess and exercise all the powers conferred by existing law upon the marshals and district attorneys of the United States, respectively. All other officers residing within said northern district as hereby constituted shall continue to be and act as such officers within their respective jurisdictions in said northern district as hereby constituted until their successors, respectively, are duly appointed and qualified under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 5. That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a district judge for the southern judicial district of West Virginia, who shall possess and exercise all of the powers conferred by existing law upon the judges of the district courts of the United States, and who shall, as to all business and proceedings arising in said southern judicial district as hereby constituted, or transferred thereto, succeed to and possess the same powers and perform the same duties within the said southern judicial district as are now possessed by and performed by the district judge of the district of West Virginia.

SEC. 6. That the marshal and district attorney of the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted and in office at the time this act takes effect shall be the marshal and district attorney, respectively, for the southern judicial district of West Virginia as constituted by this act until the expiration of their respective terms, or until their successors, respectively, shall be appointed and qualified. All other officers residing within said southern district of West Virginia as constituted by this act shall continue as such officers until the expiration of their respective terms and until their successors, respectively, shall be duly appointed and qualified. The clerk of the circuit and district courts in the southern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted shall be appointed under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 7. That the salaries, pay, fees, and allowances of the judges, district attorneys, marshals, clerks, and other officers in said districts, until changed under the provisions of existing law, shall be the same, respectively, as now fixed by law for such officers in the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted.

SEC. 8. That all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted, whereof the courts of the northern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and same shall be proceeded with in the northern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said northern judicial district, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto; and all causes and proceedings of every name and nature, civil and criminal, now pending in the courts of the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted, whereof the courts of the southern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted would have had jurisdiction if said district and the courts thereof had been constituted when said causes or proceedings were instituted, shall be, and are hereby, transferred to and same shall be proceeded with in the southern judicial district of West Virginia as hereby constituted, and jurisdiction thereof is hereby transferred to and vested in the courts of said southern judicial district of West Virginia, and the records and proceedings therein and relating to said proceedings and causes shall be certified and transferred thereto: Provided, That all motions and causes submitted and all causes and proceedings, both civil and criminal, including proceedings in bankruptcy now pending in said judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted, in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part before the present district judge of the judicial district of West Virginia as heretofore constituted, or taken in whole or in part and submitted and passed upon by the said district judge, shall be proceeded with and disposed of in said northern judicial district of West Virginia as constituted by this act.

SEC. 9. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern district of West Virginia shall begin at the following times and places in each year: At Wheeling on the first Tuesday of April and third Tuesday of September. At Clarksburg on the third Tuesday of April and first Tuesday of October. At Martinsburg on the third Tuesday of October. And the circuit court shall be held at Parkersburg, beginning on the second Tuesday of January and second Tuesday of June of each year.

That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the southern district of West Virginia shall begin at the following times and places in each year: At Charleston on the first Tuesday of May and second Tuesday of November. At Huntington, in the county of Cabell, on the first Tuesday of April and third Tuesday of September. At Bluefield, in the county of Mercer, on the first Tuesday of June and the first Tuesday of December.

SEC. 10. That the terms of said courts shall not be limited to any particular number of days, nor shall it be necessary to adjourn by reason of the intervention of a term elsewhere; but the court intervening may be adjourned until the business of the court in session is concluded.

SEC. 11. That the provisions of section 584 of the Revised Statutes are hereby extended to said districts hereby created.

SEC. 12. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of said districts shall be cognizable within the district in which committed, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses committed before the passage of this act in which indictments have not been found or proceedings instituted shall be cognizable within the district as hereby constituted in which such crimes or offenses were committed.

SEC. 13. That all laws and parts of laws so far as inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 14. That this act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1901.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on the motion.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not object to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, that a second may be considered as ordered?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to take the floor at this time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, but I would like to have some explanation of the provisions of the bill from the gentleman who introduced it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the State of West Virginia has had a very wonderful growth—a growth of 25 per cent in the last ten years, and has more than doubled its population in the last forty years. This growth has been mostly in the southern part of the State, the part traversed by new railroads, filled up with foreign capital, rich in mines and oil wells, and doing much business which involves litigation, and that part of the State has been practically cut off from the benefits of the United States courts.

Two years ago the arrears of criminal cases in the courts of the State were over 1,000, besides many important civil cases. These arrears have been much diminished since then, but I may say that over 800 nolle prosequis have been needed in order to accomplish that result.

The courts are held in five places, and in order to bring the people to where the courts sit it is necessary to have at least eight places instead of five, and no one judge can perform that duty.

The criminal business has been growing, and besides there is a very heavy civil business, involving questions as to land titles (which are exceedingly unsettled), damage suits, and so forth, in which the foreign owners of property who are sued have been enabled to delay justice by going into the United States courts, where their cases could not be promptly heard.

This bill is urged by both sides of the House and by members of the Senate, irrespective of party. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York, who spoke about our giving some thought to this matter, that the Judiciary Committee have followed the principle of only reporting these bills in cases where the demand is greatest. Although the committee two years ago thought that this legislation was needed, it was postponed because in two other cases relief seemed to be more needed. The very careful report then drafted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] on the subject is embodied in my own report and made a part of it. At this session the committee have reported but three bills, the Kentucky bill, the West Virginia bill, and the act for the appointment of a judge temporarily in a district in Ohio where the judge is absolutely imcompetent to hold court.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Certainly.

Mr. LINNEY. I see in your report here the statement is made that Alabama has three judicial districts and 902 criminal cases on the docket, while West Virginia has but one and has 1,019 criminal cases.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They had that in 1897. Since then that number has been diminished, but by judgments of nolle prosequi.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and, two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 5076), to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the northern district of the State of Ohio.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be in the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio an apditional district judge, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate, and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same power and jurisdiction now prescribed by law in respect to the present district judge therein.

SEC. 2. That no vacancy in the office of the existing district judge of said northern judicial district of Ohio shall be filled by appointment, and in case of such vacancy there shall be thereafter one district judge only for said district.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, the State of Ohio is divided into two judicial districts, the northern and the southern. The district judge in the northern district is permanently incapacitated, mentally and physically, from performing the duties of his office. This condition has existed for three years last past, and the people have been waiting to see if there is any hope of a better condition of things. There is no hope. Business has been running behind, and the public interests have suffered as well as private interests.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is this case similar to the Texas case that came up in the last Congress?

Mr. RAY of New York. This is exactly like the Texas case and like the Kansas case, and this bill is drafted in the same language and has the same purpose as to the northern district of Ohio that those bills had for the districts to which they applied.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the bill provide that at the death of the judge who is incapacitated the two offices shall cease and only one man shall continue to hold?

Mr. RAY of New York. The bill does not provide for two judges permanently, but only until the death of the present judge. Of course, if the one appointed under the authority of this bill should die first, then we should have to pass another bill to provide a judge in his place; but we proceed upon the assumption that the present judge will not outlive the one provided for by this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand it, then, the present judge is incapacitated and can not be retired without his consent, and you have to have some one to hold court.

Mr. RAY of New York. That is the condition exactly. They have been inviting in outside judges from time to time to do the work, but still the business is continually running behind, and now the condition is such in the neighboring States that the northern district of Ohio can not get judges to come in there to help out. Every consideration of public justice as well as of private interest in this district demands that this bill become a law. We have had two similar cases. One arose in Texas and one in Kansas, and we did just this thing. The Judiciary Committee, once when Mr. Culberson was chairman, and again when the present Speaker was chairman, and again now, have studied the situation to see if by any possibility we could frame a law that would provide for the retirement of a judge when in this condition, and we find that probably it can not be done constitutionally. Therefore, this is the only remedy.

I reserve the balance of my time. I do not know any reason for occupying it further.

Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state, for the benefit of this side of the House, that this bill comes from the Judiciary Committee with a unanimous report in its favor, after a full and careful investigation. The facts in the case make its passage imperative. Not only that, but there is ample precedent, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] has stated, and I do hope this bill will pass. It ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed?

The question was taken; and, two-thirds voting in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 12846) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, we desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York reserves all points of order on the bill.

GREER COUNTY.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 2582 with certain amendments proposed by that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report, with the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANHAM. And pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit that this bill has heretofore been fully reported to the House and to some extent discussed. It is somewhat lengthy, and I wish to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, except the title.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; Mr. Speaker, I want the whole bill read. I only regret that the members are not all here to hear the reading.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. LANHAM. I only make the request in the interest of saving time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2582) to provide for the establishment of the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River, to ascertain the amount of taxes collected by the State of Texas in what was formerly known as Greer County and the expenditures made on account of said county by said State, and for other purposes.

Whereas there was a controversy of long standing between the United States and the State of Texas as to the ownership of the territory formerly known as Greer County, Tex., which was finally determined in favor of the United States by decree of the Supreme Court of the United States March 16, 1896, in a suit in equity brought by the United States against the State of Texas in that court; and

Whereas the treaty between the United States and Spain which was ratified February 19, 1821, fixed the boundary between the United States and Spain, and this became the boundary between the United States and the Republic of Texas and the State of Texas, successively; and

Whereas it was provided by said treaty that the boundary line "west of the Mississippi shall begin on the Gulf of Mexico, at the mouth of the river Sabine, in the sea, continuing north along the western bank of that river to the thirty-second degree of latitude; thence by a line due north to the degree of latitude where it strikes the Rio Roxo of Natchitoches, or Red River; then following the course of the Rio Roxo westward to the degree of longitude one hundred west from London and twenty-three from Washington; then crossing the said Red River and running thence by a line due north to the river Arkansas, etc.;" and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States in said cause adjudged that the words of said treaty "then following the course of the Rio Roxo westward to the degree of longitude one hundred west from London and twenty-three from Washington; then crossing the said Red River," referred to the true one hundredth meridian astronomically located; and

Whereas the true intersection of said one hundredth meridian with Red River, or what, prior to said decision, was known sometime as the South Fork of Red River, or Prairie Dog Town Fork, has never been fixed by the United States and the State of Texas, acting together and in the manner provided by said treaty, nor was said true intersection fixed by the decree in said cause; and

Whereas the said territory formerly known as Greer County was formed into a county in 1860, and duly organized as a county in 1886, under the laws of the State of Texas, and continued as such organized county until the decree aforesaid, with all the rights, duties, powers, and privileges of an organized county of said State; and

Whereas during the period of time the State of Texas claimed ownership of and exercised jurisdiction over said territory the said State of Texas patented lands situated in other parts of the State to said Greer County, as one of the counties within the jurisdiction thereof, for school purposes, and which lands said Greer County used and alienated and appropriated the proceeds thereof exclusively for school purposes within its limits; and

Whereas during the period of time the State of Texas claimed ownership of and exercised jurisdiction over said territory the said State of Texas collected taxes from inhabitants of said territory and upon lands and other property situated therein, and expended money for school purposes, the enforcement of law and order, the care of the deaf, dumb, blind, and insane, and generally for the protection of life, liberty, and property therein and the establishment and maintenance of a government for the inhabitants thereof; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States, in the opinion in said cause entitled The United States against The State of Texas (162 U. S., 1, 89-90), said: "It is further said that the State, since it assumed to create Greer County, has expended a large amount of money in providing a public-school system for the inhabitants of that locality. To what extent moneys have been so expended is not clearly shown. Whatever may be the facts touching this point, we do not feel at liberty to give weight to them in this case. The question before us, we repeat, is one of law, and must be determined according to law. What may be fairly and justly demanded by the State on account of moneys expended for the benefit of the inhabitants of the disputed territory is a matter for the consideration of the legislative branch of the National Government.

"In the argument it was suggested that this court ought not to forget how much was added to the power and wealth of this nation when Texas, with its imperial domain, came into the Union and her people became a part of the political community for whom the Constitution of the United States was ordained and established. This fact can not, of course, be forgotten by any American who takes pride in the prestige and greatness of the Republic. But the considerations which it suggests can not affect the decision of legal questions, and must be addressed to another branch of the Government. The supposition is not to be indulged that that department of the Government will fail to recognize any duty imposed upon it by the circumstances arising out of this vexed controversy:" Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be established and fixed the intersection of the true one hundredth meridian with Red River, or what, prior to said decision, was known sometime as the South Fork of Red River, or Prairie Dog Town Fork, by the most accurate and scientific methods, and at said intersection cause a suitable monument to be erected on the ground.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed to inquire and ascertain what lands, if any, the State of Texas has patented to the said Greer County for school purposes; in whom title to said lands is now vested; whether said lands were alienated by said Greer County, and if so, the price paid therefor and what disposition was made thereof; and the present market value of said lands.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed to inquire and ascertain, first, the total taxes collected by the State of Texas for any and all purposes from inhabitants of Greer County, or upon lands or other property located therein, from 1860 to 1896; second, the total amount paid by the State of Texas to said Greer County, or its officers or agents, for school purposes, other than lands, from 1860 to 1896, and the disposition made thereof by said county; and, third, the total of all other expenses incurred by the State of Texas from 1860 to 1896 in the enforcement of law and order, the care of the deaf, dumb, blind, and insane, and generally for the protection of life, liberty, and property in said county, and the establishment and maintenance of a government for the inhabitants thereof, or a fair estimate of the same.

SEC. 4. That to enable him to execute the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to employ such persons and adopt such measures as to him may seem proper and necessary. He is also authorized to receive and consider duly certified copies of patents, deeds, conveyances, transcripts of court records, and certificates from any department of the Government of the United States or the State of Texas, under the seal thereof as to official records therein. He may also receive and consider depositions of witnesses, and in such cases the United States shall be represented by the Attorney-General thereof, or some person designated by him, and the State of Texas shall be represented by the attorney-general thereof, or some person designated by him; and these officials may appear and represent their respective governments before the Secretary of the Interior in all other matters provided for by this act. He may also receive and consider any testimony taken by either party in said cause entitled The United States against The State of Texas, in the Supreme Court of the United States, reported in One hundred and sixty-second United States, page 1, and may receive and consider any testimony which he may consider to be pertinent to the subject of such inquiry.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to properly care for the interests of the United States in making such investigation and in carrying out the purposes of this act; and he shall report in detail to the Congress at the next session, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable: Provided, That the State of Texas shall defray the expenses of presenting its own case and claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on this.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall have to object to that and see if we can not get some members into the Hall of the House.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from New York; and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Texas to act as tellers.

The House divided; and tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 6.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas in support of the bill, and the gentleman from New York in opposition to the bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, this is a Senate bill, and it has been unanimously reported from the Committee on the Judiciary of the House with certain amendments at the close of the bill. Its purpose is to have a definite ascertainment of where the one hundredth meridian crosses the Red River in the State of Texas, and, further, to investigate certain expenses incurred by the State of Texas during the time it occupied that portion of the Territory known as Greer County, east of the one hundredth meridian and between the north and south forks of Red River, up to the point of the confluence of the two streams. This matter is to be investigated by the Secretary of the Interior, and by him reported to Congress in detail for future action. It commits the Government to the payment of no amount; it is all left to Congress for its consideration hereafter. Its present purpose simply is to ascertain the facts.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LANHAM. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I desire to make an inquiry. I notice on page 3 that it is stated that lands have been patented to Greer County in other parts of Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; under the policy of our State government for the benefit of the public schools.

Mr. LACEY. The inquiry I make is that the land is to be patented anywhere, without saying where, so far as the bill goes.

Mr. LANHAM. That is merely the preamble of the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Why is not the bill limited to lands patented for Greer County in counties other than Greer County?

Mr. LANHAM. Under the administration of our land affairs in Texas each county of the State is allowed so many leagues of land for school purposes. During the time that Texas exercised jurisdiction over this county there were patented, I believe, four leagues of land—I can not recall in what county situated—for the benefit of the educational interests of Greer County. The facts are all recited in the preamble, and that is sufficiently explanatory of the bill, I think. I desire now to yield ten minutes, or so much as he may require, to my friend the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. RAY of New York].

Mr. FLYNN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas before he takes his seat if in this proposed accounting there is to be taken into consideration the sum, whatever it may have been, that the State of Texas received for lands sold within the limits of Greer County?

Mr. LANHAM. It is, as I stated, to be fully investigated by the Secretary. If the gentleman heard the reading of the bill, he doubtless noticed in detail what is proposed to be done by the Secretary of the Interior and the facts to be ascertained by him.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does this involve those lands in Greer County?

Mr. LANHAM. Not in the slightest, because the decision of the Supreme Court has held that the whole of this land in Greer County belongs to the United States or to Oklahoma as a part of the United States, and there is no purpose to interfere with that decision. It is simply to ascertain the expenses that Texas incurred during the time she exercised jurisdiction over this territory known as Greer County.

Mr. FLYNN. This bill is precisely the same as the other one that was up before?

Mr. LANHAM. Precisely the same.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve my time until we can hear the opposition, if any, to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill, and the only object of it, is to establish a basis for a claim against the United States where no claim in law or in equity exists. That is the object of the bill.

Now, gentlemen from the Judiciary Committee will go around and tell the members of the House that this bill does not establish any claim; that this bill has as its object to get at certain facts, but every member of the House who has had any experience knows that if this bill passes and the Secretary of the Interior reports, these gentlemen from Texas, who are friends of mine, and whom I respect very highly and who are naturally entitled to influence socially, will go around to the different members of the House and say, "Here is a little claim of Greer County, or for the State of Texas in regard to Greer County; the House has passed upon it and has recognized the equity of the claim."

Why, it was only a short time ago that the whole State of Pennsylvania was here trying to get recognition for a claim for the destruction and loss of property at the Gettysburg battle and the invasion of Pennsylvania. We beat that bill on the threshold, and I do not believe it will ever be heard of again; but if we had started in, Pennsylvania would have collected from the United States that claim.

Greer County was deemed to belong to Texas, and by the authority of Texas the land, largely public land, was disposed of. Texas had all the public lands within her border. She was different from any other State or Territory ever annexed to the United States; she had all of the public lands. Greer County began to be settled, and the State of Texas sold and issued patents to the inhabitants of various acres and sections at the price of $2 an acre, which she put in her treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. That is a mistake.

Mr. PAYNE. I am informed that that is a fact, and a fact not to be inquired into by this bill. The people settled there, and by and by they wanted schoolhouses, court-houses, and jails, and the State of Texas levied taxes upon the people of Greer County, and with the proceeds of these taxes, as well as the sale of the public lands in Greer County and outside of Greer County, built the jails and the court-houses and the schoolhouses in Greer County. But it was subsequently discovered that Greer County was not a part of the State of Texas, and finally so decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. And now here comes the great State of Texas and asks——

Mr. GROSVENOR. To whom did it belong?

Mr. PAYNE. To Oklahoma, and it was decided that the lands belonged to the United States. The United States opened up the public lands for settlement and gave them to the people who came there to settle, and it gave the court-houses and school-houses to the county of Greer, and the people enjoyed them and have enjoyed them from that day to this. Now they come in and ask—what? In the first place they want it settled by some United States surveyor, where it is that the parallel of latitude strikes Red River, in order that they may ascertain where Greer County is located.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has the gentleman any desire whatever to conform to the facts in regard to this matter? If so——

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from New York wants to ask a question, let him do it, and not try to insult a man under pretense of asking a question.

Mr. RAY of New York. But I do not want the gentleman to insult the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. I decline to be interrupted in this way. If the gentleman has a question, let him ask it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama state the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the House may be in order so that we can hear the controversy going on on the other side.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PAYNE. For a question, yes.

Mr. RAY of New York. If the gentleman is not willing to listen——

Mr. PAYNE. I am; but I can not give my time to the gentleman for debate. If he wants to ask a question, let him do so; my time is running now.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, well; go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Thank you. Now, Mr. Speaker, they come in and want to establish the line, as though any surveyor in the United States could not establish this line and there was any difficulty about it. That is an excuse to get the bill in here. Then they go further and ask that the Secretary of the Interior shall find out how much public land the State of Texas gave Greer County for school purposes while Greer County was a county in the State of Texas.

Mr. TERRY. I want to say to the gentleman from New York——

Mr. PAYNE. I can not be interrupted; I have only twenty minutes.

Mr. TERRY. I supposed the gentleman wanted the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, the bill has been read here, and every fact I am stating is found in the bill. If I am wrong, the members of the House will know it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York declines to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. I simply wanted to suggest to the gentleman that if the claim was brought in here——

Mr. PAYNE. I hope this is not coming out of my time.

The SPEAKER. It is coming out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. TERRY. Oh, well, if the gentleman from New York wants to be discourteous he can exercise his usual privilege.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, in addition, they want the Secretary of the Interior to report the cost of the buildings, the jails, the court-houses, and the schoolhouses which have been built there by the State of Texas, and then how much taxes have been raised and paid in by Greer County, and still they are very careful to say on the floor of the House that this does not involve any claim against the United States.

I would like to have some gentleman on the Judiciary Committee inform the House what this inquiry is for—what this statement of account is for—unless there is some claim made. If these parties think they have any claim against the United States, why do they not come before the House in a manly fashion and state that they have or think they have such a claim? Why, Mr. Speaker, is it to be established that every time the United States Supreme Court decides a controversy between two parties, the party losing the suit is to come to Congress to be reimbursed for the money he thinks he has lost, but which the Supreme Court say he never had a title to? Is there any justice or equity in that? Is there any reason for a claim against the United States?

Mr. LANHAM. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in the decision of the Supreme Court the very course outlined in this bill is suggested, and the court itself has said that we would have to go to the legislative department of the Government in order to determine what these expenses were? Will the gentleman allow me to quote for one moment from that decision?

Mr. PAYNE. No, I can not give my time for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. PAYNE. I will answer the gentleman's question. I am aware that it was claimed before the Supreme Court, as I have learned from the opinion which is quoted, as I believe, in the bill as well as in the report—I am aware it was claimed before the Supreme Court that because Texas incurred certain expenses in Greer County therefore the State should not be ousted from that county—that such a consideration should influence the decision of the United States in determining whether the county belonged to the State of Texas or to the Indian Territory. I am aware that the Supreme Court, in making its decision and delivering the opinion, did say that if there were any claim of that kind it should go before Congress, that it should be left to the legislative branch of the Government.

I am stating the facts as they are stated in the bill itself. I insisted upon having the bill read to the House in order that these questions and the facts connected with them might be fully understood by the House. My knowledge of the facts has been obtained from the reading of the bill as it came up first upon a request for unanimous consent and as it comes up now. Those facts are stated in the bill by way of preamble before the enacting clause, with the idea of setting up some shadow of a claim against the United States, in order that after this report is made gentlemen may come before the Committee on Claims, or before members of the House, and say, "Why, the Fifty-sixth Congress has already decided in favor of this equity."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to apologize to my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] for having interrupted him at all and for having intimated by way of interrogation that he was not stating the facts exactly as they exist. I did not mean to insinuate—I would not do so—that in any matter which he understands he would misstate a single fact. I know he would not. I know that he does not intend to do so in this case. But I know, too, in my own heart—and I suppose I shall be privileged to say this—that he does not oppose this bill because there is any real ground for opposition to it, but because he, the leader of the House, charged with the responsibility of keeping down expenditures, keeping out everything that might by possibility bring a charge against the Treasury of the United States—feels it his duty to oppose everything that does or might involve the payment of a dollar by the Government.

If he had studied this case as I have, or as members of the Judiciary Committee have, I do not think he would for a single moment take the ground that he has taken, because even if the bill should lay the basis for a claim in the future against the Government of the United States, if that claim is well founded in law, in equity, and in justice, then the Government of the United States, like any other debtor, ought to be made to walk up and pay it and all just and honest claims. Unless some one can disprove the facts found, if they establish a just claim, it ought to be recognized as just and proper. It is certainly just and proper to allow this matter to be presented to the Secretary of the Interior and investigated by him. That Department is competent to protect this Government.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a Senate bill. It passed the Senate of the United States unanimously. It ran the gantlet of the Judiciary Committee of that body. Senator HOAR presented it in the Senate in an able and lucid manner, and no one can justly raise a question against it. The Committee on the Judiciary of this House examined it. We have examined the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States relating to this contention, which is open to the reading of any gentleman; and we are but following the course suggested by the Supreme Court, and by the Senate, and by the Secretary of the Interior (who certainly will look out for the interests of this Government), when we say it is proper to do—what? To establish a boundary line between Texas, the Territory of Oklahoma, and the United States by the concurrent action of the United States and the State of Texas. That is all we ask in the first place. Then let the Secretary of the Interior ascertain certain other facts and report them to the Congress of the United States if he sees fit. The bill simply appropriates $7,500 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to look after and take care of the interests of the Government. This is provided for by our amendments.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does not the gentleman think that in any adjustment that may be made or contemplated the State of Texas should be charged with that portion of the public domain that is a part of Greer County, and was disposed of by the State of Texas?

Mr. RAY of New York. Certainly; if there were any such lands. But, Mr. Speaker, there were no such lands.

Mr. PAYNE. How did the settlers get title?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Gratuitously from the State by patent.

Mr. HEPBURN. But in giving those lands gratuitously the State undertook to dispose of lands of the United States. Now, I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. RAY of New York. But they received nothing for those lands; and those settlers are now citizens of the United States, living on the same lands, but within the jurisdiction of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the fact still remains that Texas disposed of the lands of the Government of the United States as Texas proposed to do.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And never received a dollar for one acre of it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am strongly of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that if this bill should pass it should contain a provision to ascertain the exact quantity and value of the land, and the present value of the improvements.

Mr. RAY of New York. There is no necessity whatever for any such provision. Texas did not sell these lands.

Mr. LANHAM. She never charges for her public lands.

Mr. RAY of New York. But simply allowed men to go and settle upon them; and every citizen who took land there and became a settler is now a citizen of the United States and living in a Territory of the United States. If there had been any claim or any facts to base the claim on that Texas has sold any of these lands and received compensation for them, we would vote for a provision such as the gentleman has suggested; but we have examined the matter and know we think that there are no such grounds. My friend must also understand that we do not here recognize any claim on the part of Texas whatever. We do not recognize that she has any claims to the land of the Government or school houses erected by the Government or to compensation for the matters referred to in this bill.

We simply authorize the Secretary of the Interior, without creating any new office, first, to establish the boundary line, Texas paying the expense of the same, and the Secretary of the Interior standing there to guard the interests of the United States; and, second, to inquire as to the facts to which the bill refers, and discover what of their own lands were donated to Greer County, and after that is ascertained to present the facts to the Government, so that hereafter if a person or the State of Texas claims anything from the Government of the United States, either in the Court of Claims or here, members of the House will have the testimony and facts before them, and will be prepared to defend the interests of the Government. When that is done, we will be able to take care of our interests and to protect the interests of the people. But it is unjust, it is unfair, even if a claim should be lodged before the House by anybody on this account—it is unfair for members of this body to stand up and say we will not allow the facts to be presented to Congress. We ought not to be afraid to know the truth in these matters. It is our duty to ascertain the truth and then act honestly, and having knowledge, act intelligently.

Is the Government of the United States, Mr. Speaker, is the Congress of the United States, so powerless, so utterly helpless, that it can not take care of itself—of the pecuniary interests of the people? Mr. Speaker, when this investigation is made, and the facts appear here, is Congress such a baby that it will deny the truth or repudiate liability, if liable? Will it deny either to a citizen or to a State the right to have the head of one of the departments of the Government investigate certain facts and report them to the House of Representatives simply for its information, the other party being put to all the expense in its own behalf of doing it? The Congress having information will, in the future, meet the case wisely, and can be trusted to do justice.

Mr. Speaker, in all of my legislative experience I have never favored any law or advocated any bill that I did not think had merit and justice behind it. The Judiciary Committee may not be competent to discharge its duties properly, but it thinks it is. It has investigated the facts in this case. We believe that justice and right demand that the bill pass with the amendments we have suggested and made, and that committee, after full and fair deliberation and consideration, unanimously reports it to the House for its action. By your verdict, gentlemen of the House, the Judiciary Committee is willing to abide.

Texas may and may not have a claim. With that question we are not now dealing. We want the facts, and when the full truth is known we will determine the liability. There is no danger in the truth. There is always danger in suppressing the truth. In this case I want the facts, and then we will determine the other questions that may arise.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, says that that committee has investigated this matter and that the House practically ought to be bound by this investigation.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, no.

Mr. LACEY. I would agree with him if it were not for the fact that an investigation by another committee has disclosed a precisely opposite state of facts, in some respects, from what he claims to exist, as brought out in the hearing before the Judiciary Committee. That is, it is claimed that the lands which were contracted by the State of Texas in the county of Greer were not sold at all, but that they were donated in some way. When the Greer County bill came up in this House, the hearing before the Public Lands Committee showed this state of facts: Judge Brown, of Texas, appeared for the settlers. He informed the committee that the settlers had contracted to pay the State of Texas $2 an acre for all that land, and I understood that a portion of the payments had been made, and that they were required to pay the balance.

I reported a bill to the House from the Committee on the Public Lands requiring that the settlers should pay the balance due to the State of Texas into the Treasury of the United States provided that the free homes in Oklahoma should not become law, but that if Oklahoma should have free homes, then Greer County should share in the free homes. The Delegate from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] was absent at the time the bill was reported. He came back from Oklahoma, and at once objected to the requirement of payment, and said he was in favor of free homes everywhere. He said he was in favor of free homes for the whole Territory, but that if Greer County alone could get them, then Greer County must have them. He moved an amendment in the House that the Greer County settlers should be relieved from paying the remainder of the $2 an acre that they had agreed to pay to the State of Texas, and that they should then and there have free homes. That motion prevailed, and Greer County got free homes, and that was the first free-home victory. It did not seem to do the gentleman from Oklahoma very much good, though, because every man he got a free home for voted against him.

Mr. FLYNN. Oh, no; not all of them.

Mr. LACEY. Not every one of them, but most of them. There was no controversy then but that these men had agreed to pay $2 an acre to the State of Texas. This bill ought to provide for finding out how much Texas got out of this land——

Mr. HEPBURN. And the present value.

Mr. LACEY. And the present value, if we are going to discuss the question of present value. So that here is one vital and very essential part of this measure that is entirely omitted in the bill. There is no attempt to require Greer County to account for the money received by Greer County for the land ceded by Texas to Greer County.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the very good reason that there was none.

Mr. LACEY. I am only telling you what occurred in the Committee on the Public Lands. A committee came from Texas representing the settlers and claiming that the settlers of Greer County had contracted and agreed to pay $2 an acre for this land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They never paid it, though.

Mr. LACEY. If anything was paid, the amount ought to be ascertained. If none of it has been paid, that ought to be embraced in this report, so that Congress can act intelligently.

Mr. LANHAM. The bill requires that everything must be reported in detail.

Mr. LACEY. Unfortunately, it does not require anything of this kind.

Mr. LANHAM. It says that the Secretary of the Interior shall report in detail to Congress.

Mr. LACEY. Report what?

Mr. LANHAM. Whatever he is required to report.

Mr. LACEY. But this is not required to be reported. I think that this bill should be amended, and that the other proposition ought to be included. It may be true, as gentlemen state, that this land was not any portion of it paid for, but there ought to be an investigation of the matter.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This bill provides for an inquiry as to lands patented by the State of Texas to Greer County for school purposes, etc., and then it also provides for an inquiry whether said lands were alienated by said Greer County, and if so, the price paid and the disposition made of them. Now, is the gentleman quite certain that these patents of which he is speaking were not made by Greer County to the residents of Greer County and not by the State of Texas?

Mr. LACEY. That is an entirely different proposition. There were 4 leagues of land outside of the county given for school purposes to Greer County, and the preamble so recites; but when you come to the body of the bill, it provides that the Secretary shall ascertain what lands, if any, the State of Texas has patented to Greer County for school purposes, without saying whether they are in Greer County or outside of Greer County; so that does not clear the matter up.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is true.

Mr. LACEY. The way I understand this proposition, there are a great many thousands of acres of land that Texas has sold in Greer County, and there is no provision in this bill for any statement of the amount received.

I only get my information from Judge Brown, of Texas, the judge in whose judicial district the land was situated when it was attached to the State of Texas. He appeared for the settlers. He is a clear-headed gentleman.

We spent two weeks in the consideration of that bill. It was submitted to all the members from Texas, and it is surprising to me to learn now, after the efforts made to relieve the settlers from paying for these lands, that there was no intention that they should pay for them. Why that contest over the free homes in Greer County if that land had been freely given by Texas? Texas had given some Confederate soldiers land and patented some lands in Greer County. We confirmed that title by the Greer County bill. It is only in regard to the other land, which was sold under a contract, that the other bill——

Mr. RAY of New York. Do you claim for a single moment that the State of Texas ever sold for a consideration any land in Greer County?

Mr. LACEY. Thousands of acres.

Mr. RAY of New York. Where is the evidence?

Mr. LACEY. The evidence was given before the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. LANHAM. My friend is certainly mistaken about that.

Mr. LACEY. There was no such evidence before the Committee on the Judiciary, but there was before the Committee on the Public Lands. If they have any evidence, let them say that is not true.

Mr. RAY of New York. If you have that evidence, I would ask you to produce it.

Mr. LACEY. We had a full hearing. Furnish your evidence to us.

Mr. RAY of New York. The facts were presented before the committee.

Mr. LANHAM. Now I state, in perfect fairness, if there is anything in the contention of the gentleman from Iowa, I would be entirely willing, with the consent of the House, for him to put in an amendment. I do not think there is the slightest occasion for it, but if you can frame it in a few lines I would have no earthly objection that they may investigate that also.

Mr. RAY of New York. Has the gentleman any more time?

Mr. LANHAM. I have about four minutes.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from Iowa says that we are compelled here to show that his mere allegation is not true. Now, if the gentleman has that evidence, I call upon him to produce it. I say we had an investigation of the facts, and we found nothing of the kind alleged had ever been done; and now the gentleman comes in here upon a mere statement of his recollection and contradicts. If he has such evidence, let him produce it. But it is entirely immaterial to the question, because it will all come out in the investigation by the Secretary of the Interior; and if he should find that the State of Texas has sold any of this land for a consideration, do you think, Mr. Speaker, that it will not be reported with the other facts to this House?

Are we to assume that the Secretary of the Interior will not do his duty to the Government fully? Are we afraid that he will not take care of the interests of the United States? I for one am not.

The bill says he shall. But the gentleman from Iowa is mistaken; that is all. He has had so much to do with public lands here, there, and everywhere that he has mixed up the facts of this case with other cases. This bill was up once in the first session of this Congress and the attention of the gentleman was called to the bill. Why has he not provided himself with the evidence, which he says he has somewhere, to sustain his contention. Justice demands the passage of this Senate bill and I trust two-thirds will be ready to support it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I, of course, have nothing to say about this controversy between the chairmen of the two committees. I am making no fight against the Committee on the Judiciary, and there is no occasion for its chairman getting so much excited here on this bill. What are the facts? Texas claims to have paid some money to build schoolhouses, court-houses, etc., in Greer County. If Greer County had remained a part of the State of Texas, these schoolhouses and public buildings would remain as a part of it, and the property of Greer County. They say by decision of the United States Supreme Court it was decided that the title to Greer County was in the United States; but the United States has already given the title to the schoolhouses and public buildings to Greer County.

The buildings belong to Greer County just as much as though the Supreme Court had never made a decision that Greer County was a part of the United States and not a part of Texas. Texas has not lost a farthing by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am unwilling that this Congress should put it in the power of gentlemen to come to other Congresses and say that this Congress had recognized a claim of this character. They say the bill does not make a claim. Why is that long preamble, full of a claim in favor of Texas and against the United States, if you do not mean to make a claim? They say the whole of it is to be investigated by the Secretary of the Interior. Why is it sent to him to investigate? Why did not the Committee on the Judiciary, when they considered this bill, fully investigate it and report the facts to the House? Why send it to the Secretary of the Interior, at an expense of $7,500, and call upon the State of Texas to appear?

There is no other object in this bill except to make a claim against the Treasury of the United States. My friend says that I seem to think it my duty to fight all the claims that come before the House. Every member of the House knows that he is mistaken about that; but it is my duty, as a member of the House, when I see a claim that is only a shadow of a claim come up against the United States—I do not care where it comes from—to be against that, and I intend to fight it. I hope that this bill will not pass, and that we will throttle it at the very start, just as we did the claim of the State of Pennsylvania in regard to the invasion of the Confederates during the war of 1863. Let us stop these matters at the beginning. By and by, in the process of time, when they get stale, and when members of the House forget the facts, they allow claims without merit. That is the reason why many honest claimants can not get their fair dues, because these claims without foundation are constantly pressed upon the Treasury and the House of Representatives. I hope the bill will be defeated.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have a moment or two, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to state that Texas does not want anything but what is right, what is just, what is honest and fair, and the object of this bill is to give her, in effect, a day in court for the investigation of certain facts subsequently to be reported to Congress, and to be determined in the wisdom of Congress whether or not this is a meritorious claim. Now, to show that we wish to be entirely fair in the premises, I am quite willing, if the House will give unanimous consent for that purpose, to have inserted at the end of line 5, page 5, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, although I do not regard it as necessary. I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the insertion of the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5, page 5, insert "and to ascertain the sum received from the sale, if any, of any public lands in Greer County by the State of Texas."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that insertion?

Mr. PAYNE. That does not alter the character of the bill. I do not object to it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, it seems to me there ought to be a provision for ascertaining the present market value of the land.

Mr. LANHAM. It says just above this amendment "the present market value of the land shall be ascertained."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Add that right to this proposed amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. I am willing to put that at the end of the proposed amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think there should be a further amendment. It refers to the lands disposed of by the State of Texas instead of lands sold.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Put it "sold or disposed of."

Mr. HEPBURN. Let the words "disposed of" go in.

Mr. LANHAM. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The additional suggested amendment will be made by the Clerk, and then the matter submitted to the House. The Clerk will now report the suggested amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5, page 5, insert "and to ascertain the sums received from lands sold or disposed of, if any, and the present market value of said lands, in Greer County, by the State of Texas."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that unanimous consent be given for the insertion of this amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and this amendment will stand as a part of the original motion.

Mr. LANHAM. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am ready for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill pass with the amendment?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were 110 ayes and 36 noes.

The SPEAKER. Two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the bill is passed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

EDWARD G. GARNER.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6676) for the relief of Edward G. Garner.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to amend the record of said Edward G. Garner, and issue to him an honorable discharge, to date from the date of muster out of his company and regiment.

The amendment recommended by the committee is as follows:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EMMA L. DU BOIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2462) granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Du Bois.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma L. Du Bois, widow of Wilbur F. Du Bois, late of Company A, Twentieth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company F, One hundred and eighth Regiment United States Colored Troops, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE G. KEMP.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1226) granting an increase of pension to George G. Kemp.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George G. Kemp, late of Company K, Forty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Militia Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVA J. BAKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10784) granting an increase of pension to Oliva J. Baker.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Oliva J. Baker, widow of Julian G. Baker, late quartermaster, United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $25 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving on certificate No. 13425.

The committee amendments were as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line strike out "five" after the word "twenty."

In lines 7, 8, and 9 strike out the words "on certificate numbered thirteen thousand four hundred and twenty-five."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LUCINDA D. DOW.

The next business was the bill (S. 3306) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda D. Dow.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda D. Dow, widow of Simon B. Dow, late of Company C, Twenty-seventh Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, with $2 per month additional on account of her minor child.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY JANE M'LAUGHLIN.

The next business was the bill (S. 244) granting a pension to Mary Jane McLaughlin.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Jane McLaughlin, invalid and dependent daughter of Michael McLaughlin, late of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

ANDREW E. DUNHAM.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8535) granting an increase of pension to Andrew E. Dunham.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew E. Dunham, late acting ensign, in the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

In line 6 strike out the words "in the."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ERMINE D. CABBELL.

The next business was the bill (S. 2831) granting an increase of pension to Ermine D. Cabbell.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ermine D. Cabbell, widow of James A. Cabbell, late of Company C, Eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Adolphus N. Cabbell, invalid and dependent son of said James A. Cabbell, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY R. DEAN.

The next business was the bill (S. 2218) granting a pension to Mary R. Dean.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary R. Dean, former widow of Amos G. Thomas, late captain Company G, Eleventh Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Infantry, and first lieutenant Company E, Third Regiment Rhode Island Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH BEESLEY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5643) granting a pension to Elizabeth Beesley.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Beesley, widow of Florello M. Kelsey, late of Company A, Ninth Regiment of Iowa Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 a month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, after the word "late," insert the word "Captain."

In line 7 strike out the word "of;" in the same line, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "per."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CLARA E. COLBATH.

The next business was the bill (S. 3880) granting an increase of pension to Clara E. Colbath.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Clara E. Colbath, widow of George S. Colbath, late captain Company I, Ninth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OLIVE W. LAY.

The next business was the bill (S. 2152) granting a pension to Olive W. Lay.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Olive W. Lay, former widow of Nathan Paine, late major First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MAE PEARMAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10725) granting a pension to Mae Pearman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Mae Pearman, widow of John T. Pearman, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Volunteer Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN ERB.

The next business was the bill (S. 2985) granting a pension to John Erb.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Erb, dependent father of John Erb, jr., late of Company H, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY G. BIGELOW.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4356) granting an increase of pension to Henry G. Bigelow.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Henry C. Bigelow, late lieutenant in Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, upon the pension roll, and to grant him a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act, the same to be in lieu of any pension now drawn.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

Strike out all after the word "he," in line 3, and all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry G. Bigelow, late of Company C, Fifteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $45 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

AGNES B. HOFFMAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3609) to grant pension to Agnes B. Hoffman, as widow of William G. Hoffman, late first lieutenant, Third United States Cavalry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Agnes B. Hoffman, of No. 15 E street NW., Washington, D. C., widow of William G. Hoffman, deceased, formerly first lieutenant, Third United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension of $12 per month, as widow of her said husband, from the 1st day of January, 1899.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "roll" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Agnes B. Hoffman, widow of William G. Hoffman, late first lieutenant, Third United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Agnes B. Hoffman."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Bidwell, widow of William E. Bidwell, late of Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

LULA M. JONES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8263) to pension Lula M. Jones, reported with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $25 per month, subject to the provisions and regulations of the general pension laws, the name of Lula M. Jones, the daughter of Samuel T. Jones, late of Company A, Eightieth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "roll" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lula M. Jones, helpless daughter of Samuel T. Jones, late captain Company A, Eightieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Lula M. Jones."

The amendments recommended by the committee were considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J. Wilson, late of Company F, Fifty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

JAMES H. CALDWELL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9266) granting an increase of pension to James H. Caldwell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Caldwell, late of Company G, First Regiment Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Insert after "Missouri," in seventh line, the words "State Militia;" and strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so it will read $24 per month.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to know the reason for giving $24 per month in the case of a militiaman. I wish some one would explain.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill was introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who does not seem to be present.

Mr. STEELE. Let it go over until we get some explanation for giving a militiaman $24 a month.

Mr. GIBSON. I will give the gentleman from Indiana the information which he desires.

This man has a good Army record. In the first place, he served from the 26th of February, 1862, to March 15, 1865—over three years. He is very much diseased. His sight is almost entirely gone, and his general physical condition is of the most distressing character.

Mr. STEELE. That being the case, why does he not get a pension under the general law?

Mr. GIBSON. For the reason that the Pension Bureau is not satisfied that this cancer trouble originated in the service; but the man is blind all the same. The question is, whether he shall go down to his grave blind and in his pitiable condition, drawing $12 a month, or whether his pension shall be increased. The man is extremely poor, and the case is one of the most meritorious that has been before the committee.

Mr. STEELE. I see the gentleman is reading from the report.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. On that information I will not require any further statement.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM R. MILLER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8027) to pension William R. Miller.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of William R. Miller, of Company A, Fourth Tennessee Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5, after the word "Miller," insert the word "late;" in the same line, after the word "Fourth," insert the word "Regiment;" in the same line, after the word "Tennessee," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 6 strike out the word "Volunteers."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to William R. Miller."

Mr. STEELE. Let us have the report in that case read?

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The Clerk began the reading of the report.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman in charge of the bill explain how the committee determined that this man was in the service after the War Department had found that he was not in the service?

Mr. GIBSON. The testimony of the enlisting officer of the United States shows that he was enlisted in the United States service. But while on his way to join his command he was captured by the Confederates, and his leg was so injured that amputation was necessary. For that reason they would not receive him in the regiment. As a result of that he never was mustered in in the ordinary way, and never having been mustered, his name does not appear on the roll. Those are the facts, all the same.

The further reading of the report was dispensed with.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN F. HUTCHISON.

The next business was the bill (S. 3466) granting an increase of pension to John F. Hutchison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John F. Hutchison, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROSALIA TEJIDOR BRINCKERHOFF.

The next business was the bill (S. 3470) granting a pension to Rosalia Tejidor Brinckerhoff.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rosalia Tejidor Brinckerhoff, widow of George L. Brinckerhoff, late captain Company B, Tenth Regiment New York Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SARAH E. TATE.

The next business was the bill (S. 218) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Tate.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Tate, widow of Samuel A. Tate, late of Company I, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Florence Tate, the helpless and dependent child of said Samuel A. Tate, the additional pension herein granted on account of such child shall cease and determine.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDWIN CULVER.

The next business was the bill (S. 3505) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Culver.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edwin Culver, late of Company E, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have some reason why this fifty-dollar pension should be granted, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the report is very brief, and if the gentleman will get it he can see.

Mr. STEELE. Let the report be read.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I hope the gentleman will hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Kansas.

The report (by Mr. GRAFF) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3505) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Culver, have examined the same and adopt the Senate report thereon and recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 1017, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3505) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Culver, have examined the same and report:

This bill proposes to increase from $36 to $50 per month the pension of Edwin Culver, of Token, Wis., late of Company E, First Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Cavalry.

Edwin Culver enlisted in Company G, First Regiment Wisconsin Cavalry, September 21, 1861, and was discharged for disability March 23, 1863. The surgeon's certificate of disability states he was discharged "because of exposure to malaria at Helena, Ark., in August, 1862, in consequence of which intermittent fever and camp diarrhea, which last continues and is incurable. He has also severe diabetes."

He enlisted in Company E, First Wisconsin Cavalry, January 4, 1864, and was discharged July 19, 1865. He received five wounds from a cavalry charge near Salem, Ala., April 14, 1865.

The hospital records show him treated March 23, 1863, for intermittent fever, and from April to July, 1865, for wound of left arm and left iliac region.

The claimant, who is now 73 years of age, was originally pensioned for chronic diarrhea at the rate of $2 per month from December 11, 1863, the date of his first discharge, to January 4, 1864, the date of his second enlistment.

During the reading of the report,

Mr. STEELE. I do not care for any further reading of the report, on account of the man's age.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES E., TERESA, AND ANNA ARVIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4080) granting a pension to James E. Arvin, Teresa Arvin, and Anna Arvin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the names of James E. Arvin, Teresa Arvin, and Anna Arvin, indigent and feeble-minded children of George W. Arvin, deceased, late a member of Company A, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay to each one of them a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

SEC. 2. That whereas an emergency exists for the immediate taking effect of this act, therefore it shall be in force from and after its passage.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "roll" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of James E. Arvin, Teresa Arvin, and Anna Arvin, the helpless and dependent children of George W. Arvin, late of Company A, Forty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay them each a pension at the rate of $10 per month."

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments were agreed to.

WILLIAM ALLEN AND ISAAC GARMAN.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5, before the word "scouts," insert the word "late."

In line 7 strike out the word "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the word twelve;" in the same line strike out the word "a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "per."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BYRON KURTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2540) granting an increase of pension to Byron Kurtz.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Byron Kurtz, late of Company I, Seventy-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

A. Northrop, late of Company H, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and of Company K, Eighteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA STILLMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1348) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Stillman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza M. Stillman, widow of Thomas J. Stillman, late first lieutenant Company B, Tenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Jones, late of Company E, Thirteenth Regiment Maine Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. FINFROCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2472) to correct the military record of John H. Finfrock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dismissing from the military service of the United States John H. Finfrock as a captain of the Sixty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and to issue an honorable discharge for him, to date from the 22d day of January, 1863: Provided, however, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have some explanation of this charge.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The report is quite lengthy, but I ask that the first page be read, which, I think, will satisfy the gentleman.

The first page of the report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2472) to correct the military record of John H. Finfrock, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

This is a bill to revoke an order of dismissal of Captain Finfrock, Sixty-fourth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and issue an honorable discharge, dated January 22, 1863, with proviso against pay, bounty, etc., as usual.

He was dismissed for alleged desertion, which the War Department has officially determined did not take place.

The committee adopt the report made on a similar bill in the Fifty-fourth Congress, hereto annexed.

[House Report No. 2632, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4676) entitled "A bill to correct the military record of John H. Finfrock," having had the same under consideration, report it back favorably, and recommend its passage with an amendment.

Attached hereto is the report of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department in reference to this case, which gives in detail the circumstances attending the dismissal of Captain Finfrock from the United States service, and states that the charge of desertion appearing against him in the orders in which he was dishonorably dismissed the service is erroneous, and that a notation to that effect has been placed upon the official records; but that, "notwithstanding this action, the order of dismissal in the case of this officer having been carried into execution, it is beyond the power of an executive officer to revoke or modify it, or to set it aside, however unmerited or injurious that order may be deemed to have been."

Amend by adding as follows:

"Provided, however, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this bill has no place on the Calendar this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The case is one of dismissal for desertion.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And I think it has a place on the Calendar.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the first page of the report.

Mr. STEELE. I have nothing further to request, if the War Department is satisfied with it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The War Department recommends the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN FAULDS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3047) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Faulds, Company G, Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Faulds, late a private in Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of the 23d day of January, 1863.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Provided, That no pay or allowance shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to know why that man should be discharged. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. ESCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3047) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John Faulds, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report thereon:

It is shown by the records of the War Department that John Faulds was enrolled December 2 and mustered into service December 24, 1862, as a private in Company G, Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, to serve three years, and that he deserted on January 23, 1863, from Camp Utley, Racine, Wis., never thereafter returning to his command, which remained in service until July 8, 1865; also that he enlisted November 10, 1864, as a private in Company F, Seventh West Virginia Cavalry Volunteers, in violation of the twenty-second (now fiftieth) article of war, and appears to have served faithfully under this enlistment until August 1, 1865, when he was mustered out of service and honorably discharged.

The War Department report further shows that in an application for removal of the charge of desertion as of Company G, Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, Faulds testified May 15, 1890, as follows: That he was drafted into the United States military service in the autumn of 1862; reported at Madison, Wis., where he was examined and passed for muster and was solicited by Captain Rogers, the United States recruiting officer, to enlist in the volunteer service, which he did; that he thereafter reported for service at Racine, Wis., where said Captain Rogers requested him to sign his father's name to some paper or record, to legalize, as he understood it, his said enlistment, he being then a minor, which he refused to do.

That while yet at Racine in said service he was listed as a member of Company G, Thirty-first Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers; that about the 20th of December, 1862, with John Dannser, a member of said company, he was granted a furlough and came home to the town of Glencoe, Buffalo County, Wis., to his father's farm and home; that shortly afterwards, and while said furlough was yet in force, the soldier became sick, and at the time of the expiration of his furlough was wholly unfitted and unable to return to Racine and said service; that while his said furlough was in force his father, James Faulds, sought counsel of one Edward Lees, a lawyer residing at Fountain City, Wis., and at time district attorney of said Buffalo County, to get the soldier discharged from the service and released from his enlistment on the grounds of his being a minor, and for the further reason of sickness and ill health; that at said time there resided in said Fountain City a man known as Dr. Colb, who claimed to be a United States examining surgeon, before whom Faulds was taken for examination, and said Dr. Colb examined him and had him sign some papers believed to be an application for a discharge.

That on the advice of said Lees and Dr. Colb, Faulds returned to his home, leaving the matter in their hands, having been assured by them that no harm could or would come to him by his not reporting to said company before the expiration of said furlough; that he was in poor health during the winter months of 1863, and on such advice remained at home with his father; that he in no way attempted to secrete himself or hide away from the public; that no effort was made by the Government to take him back to the service or to punish him for his said absence, nor was he ever notified to return to said service; nor was any inquiry whatever, so far as he knows, made by the Government concerning his said absence from the service up to the fall of 1863, when he went to Illinois, and in the spring of 1864 went to Cannelton, W. Va., where he remained until he enlisted at Charleston, W. Va., on the 10th day of November, 1864, in said Company F, Seventh Regiment West Virginia Cavalry; that at the time of his last enlistment in said Seventh West Virginia Cavalry he informed Major Blonden, of said regiment, of all the material facts herein stated; that his service in said West Virginia regiment was in the name of John Falls instead of John Faulds, which was wholly due to an error of the official who made and kept the record, and that the soldier was not aware of such error until given his discharge in 1865.

The affidavit filed in the War Department is supplemented by another affidavit of the soldier made on the same date and filed with the committee, and sets forth substantially the same state of facts, and showing also that he was born in Scotland, November 27, 1844, and came to the United States in 1848; lived for a time in Pennsylvania, Maryland, West Virginia, and thence removed to the town of Glencoe, Buffalo County, Wis.; also a third affidavit, sworn to on June 1, 1896, in which his age is stated at 18 years when drafted; that he did not preserve the furlough; that James Faulds (his father), Judge Lees, Dr. Colb, and Major Blonden, of the Seventh Regiment West Virginia Cavalry, are dead; that the only bounty, local or otherwise, received by him on his last enlistment was $25 paid at the time and $50 thereafter, and that he received no other money consideration or inducement for his second enlistment, which he made in good faith and was not induced by the offer of payment of any bounty or money.

It appears from the affidavits filed with the committee and made by the following witnesses that they all knew John Faulds prior, during, and since the war, viz: Thomas Courteney, Robert D. Burt, Robert Burt, John Hill, William Henry, Clarissa Mulyck, Engelhart Doelle, Walter Jackson, John Dannser, Margaret Cowie, James R. Faulds, and William Milan. Said Courteney's affidavit, made May 15, 1896, filed in the War Department, corroborates the soldier's statements as to his enlistment, his coming home on furlough, his sickness, and the consultation between his father and the attorney, Edward Lees, about getting soldier out of the service, and that his father had talked with witness about it at the time, and then told witness that the attorney assured him that the soldier need not return to the service and that he would get him released for the reason that he was a minor. Witness knew that soldier's father was very anxious to have him out of the service, at home with him, as he was the only help he had; that soldier made no effort to conceal his identity nor to secrete himself; that witness heard of no effort being made by the authorities to get the soldier back into the service by arrest or otherwise. This witness repeated the same facts in an affidavit made on the same day and filed with the committee.

The affidavit of said Robert D. Burt, filed in the War Department, corroborates the soldier's statement as to his enlistment with John Dannser into the military service in the fall of 1862; the return of the soldier to his father's home on furlough, as the witness was at the time informed, about January 1, 1863; also as to his illness and as to his having applied for the discharge from the service, and that the soldier did not conceal himself, and that it was generally understood that he was discharged.

This witness also testified to the same state of facts in a second affidavit, made May 16, 1896.

The affidavit of Robert Burt, filed in the War Department, is in corroboration of the foregoing statements of the soldier and the other affidavits. In a supplemental affidavit, made May 16, 1896, and filed with the committee, this witness testified to a like state of facts.

The foregoing statements are also corroborated by the following affidavits of John Hill, now of Winona, Minn., age, 64 years, who testified June 4, 1896; William Henry, of Arcadia, Wis., 50 years of age, who testified June 19, 1896; Clarissa A. Mulyck, of Glencoe, Wis., 55 years of age, who testified July 14, 1896; Engelhart Doelle, of the town of Cross, Wis., 55 years of age, affidavit made July 6, 1896; Walter Jackson, of Glencoe, Wis., 65 years of age, affidavit made August 8, 1896, and John Dannser, of said town of Cross, 55 years of age, affidavit made June 6, 1896, stating also that he was a member of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers; enlisted at same time as John Faulds; that they, with others, were granted furloughs; that date of furlough was about December 20, 1862, for eight days; that witness saw the furlough granted John Faulds, and knows of his own knowledge that Faulds had a furlough; that witness and Faulds went from Racine, Wis., together to their homes in Buffalo County, Wis.; that witness returned to his company and regiment at expiration of furlough; that Faulds did not return, and that witness remembers conversation he had with Capt. George D. Rogers several weeks after his return, in January, 1863, and remembers well of asking the captain if said John Faulds was coming back to the company, and the captain answered him at the time that Faulds was sick or claimed to be sick.

The statements of the soldier, as contained in his affidavits in regard to his visits to the office of said Edward Lees and to see Dr. Colb, and as to the assurance of said Lees that the soldier had been discharged or released from the military service, or would be, and that they need not trouble themselves any further about it, are corroborated by the affidavits of the following witnesses, filed with the committee, each of the witnesses testifying to being present in the office of said Lees and Dr. Colb with the soldier and his father when the arrangements were made for getting the soldier out of the service, viz, Margaret Cowie, of Arcadia, Wis., 64 years of age and a sister of the soldier, affidavit made November 30, 1897; James R. Faulds, a resident of Stevensville, Mont., 44 years of age, affidavit made December 4, 1897, and William Milan, of Glencoe, aforesaid, 52 years of age, affidavit made December 15, 1897.

Your committee are of the opinion that the soldier had no intention of deserting, but that he believed the steps taken by the lawyer, Edward Lees, and Dr. Colb released him from military service in said Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

"Provided, That no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act."

Mr. STEELE. I understand there is no bounty paid on account of the reenlistment and that he was a young boy 18 years of age.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLIAM O. EAGLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2204) for the relief of William O. Eagle.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to amend and correct the records and muster rolls of the late war of the rebellion in his office so as to show that William O. Eagle, late a private of Company C, One hundred and thirty-second Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, was duly mustered into the service of the United States and served therein as a member of said company and regiment for the period of one hundred days, and was duly and honorably discharged therefrom at the expiration of his term of service.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FRANK BLAIR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10472) granting an increase of pension to Frank Blair.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Frank Blair, now pensioned by certificate No. 3932, and receiving the sum of $12 per month, as a Mexican war veteran, and that his present pension be raised to $16 per month.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Strike out all in the bill after the word "Blair," in line 5, and substitute therefor the following: "late private in Capt. S. H. Walker's company of Texas Mounted Volunteers, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $16 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH E. HENDRICKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2386) granting a pension to Joseph E. Hendrickson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph E. Hendrickson, late of Company F, First Regiment District of Columbia Volunteer Infantry, war with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, let us have some reason why we should pass this bill. Let us have the report read.

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that probably no pension bill that has ever been before the House has received a more careful consideration than has this bill. I want to say that I took this bill under consideration, as a subcommittee on pensions, with a prejudice against the allowance of the pension in this case. The circumstances that attended the loss of sight of this party were peculiar. The testimony in the case was that he suffered with malaria, had an attack of sunstroke, and almost immediately afterwards lost his eyesight.

Mr. STEELE. Both eyes?

Mr. BROMWELL. Both eyes. He is totally blind.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman need go no further; I am satisfied.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PHEBE TATE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10892) granting an increase of pension to Phebe Tate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phebe Tate, widow of Thomas Tate, late captain of Company F, Fifth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "captain" and insert in lieu thereof the words "first lieutenant."

In line 7 strike out the letter "F" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "I."

In the same line strike out the word "Fifth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Third."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventeen."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Phebe Tate."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PATRICK H. HURLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5,085) granting a pension to Patrick H. Hurley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick H. Hurley, late lieutenant, Company L, Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 6, after the letter "L," insert the word "Thirteenth."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word

"twelve." In the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Patrick H. Hurley."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ROBERT A. REID.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10183) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Reid.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert A. Reid, late of Company G, Forty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

In line 7, before the word "Infantry," insert the word "Volunteer;" in the same line, after the word "pension," insert the words "at the rate;" in the same line strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

LUCINDA MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7745) granting a pension to Lucinda Miller.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the laws and restrictions of the Pension Office, the name of Lucinda Miller, of Rices Landing, Greene County, Pa., widow of David Miller, late of Company B, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, war of the rebellion, from and after the passage of this act, at the rate of $12 per month.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "place" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Miller, widow of David Miller, late of Company B, Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN KINSIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10570) granting an increase of pension to John Kinsie.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Kinsie, late a member of Company B, Forty-fifth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and pay him $25 per month in lieu of any pension which may now be paid to him.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 6, 7, 8, and 9 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of John Kinsey, late of Company B, Forty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to John Kinsey."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MELVINA GREENAWALT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3491) granting a pension to Melvina Greenawalt, widow of Abraham Greenawalt.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Melvina Greenawalt, widow of Abraham Greenawalt, deceased, late of the city of Reading, Pa., who was in the service of the United States at Nashville, Tenn., as a carpenter and a private during the late rebellion, at the rate of $12 per month.

The following amendments recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on."

In line 6 strike out the syllable "de-" and all of lines 7, 8, 9, and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the words "late of the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as read: "A bill granting a pension to Melvina Greenawalt."

Mr. STEELE. I do not understand the amendment proposed. This man seems to have been in the service of the Quartermaster's Department.

Mr. GIBSON. It appeared before the committee that while this man was employed in the Quartermaster's Department he engaged in the defense of the city of Nashville as a soldier, and while so engaged he contracted on account of exposure a sickness from which he died. The committee thought that under these circumstances the widow ought to be pensioned.

Mr. STEELE. What military status do you give for this man?

Mr. GIBSON. Not any. We simply give the wife a pension because her husband died as a result of military service. Although under no legal compulsion to do so, he served in the defense of the city of Nashville, and, as a result, contracted disease that terminated in his death.

Mr. STEELE. How much pension do you grant the widow?

Mr. GIBSON. Twelve dollars a month.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CATHERINE BROUGHTON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3658) granting a pension to Catherine Broughton, dependent mother.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Catherine Broughton, mother of William Broughton, deceased, late a member of Company F, Second West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $8 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 3 strike out all after the word "be" and all of lines 4, 5, 6, and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Broughton, dependent mother of William Broughton, late of Company F, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Catherine Broughton."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GABRIEL M. FUNK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4199) granting a pension to Gabriel M. Funk.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Gabriel M. Funk, late of Company F, Ninety-first Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6, before the word "Illinois," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 7 strike out the word "to."

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN F. SHOTT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 154) to increase the pension of Benjamin F. Schott.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Benjamin F. Schott, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-ninth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay to him a pension at the rate of $30 a month in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out the word "upon" and insert in lieu thereof the word "on." In the same line, after the word "roll," insert the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5 strike out the word "Schott" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Shott."

In line 6, before the word "Indiana," insert the word "Regiment."

In line 7, before the word "him," strike out the word "to." In the same line stike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four." In the same line strike out the word "a" and insert in lieu thereof the word "per."

In line 8 strike out the word "which."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Shott."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

EDWARD HOUNSOM.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3133) for the relief of Edward Hounsom, of Glenwood, Mo.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Hounsom, late a private of Company E of the Twenty-ninth Regiment of Enrolled Missouri Militia, at the rate of $24 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out the words "a private;" in the same line strike out the words "of the."

In line 7 strike out the word "of;" in the same line, after the word "Militia," insert the words "and pay him a pension."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Edward Hounsom."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

OLIE HEATON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9269) to pension Miss Olie Heaton, dependent daughter.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the Government the name of Olie Heaton, crippled daughter of William Heaton, deceased, late private in Company C, First Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension of $24 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 3 strike out the word "is;" in the same line, before the word "hereby," insert the word "is."

In line 4 strike out all after the word "roll" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Olie Heaton, the dependent and helpless daughter of William Heaton, late of Company C, First Regiment West Virginia Veteran Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Olie Heaton."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

FRANKLIN I. GILBERT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 3660) granting a pension to Franklin I. Gilbert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, at the rate of $30 per month, the name of Franklin I. Gilbert, late of Company D, One hundred and and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and now a resident of Salem, Ohio.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 4 strike out all after the word "roll" and all of lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Franklin I. Gilbert, late of Company D, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Franklin I. Gilbert."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MICHAEL RYAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4231) to grant a pension to Maechel Ryan, alias Kennedy, Company F, One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Infantry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Maechel Ryan, alias Kennedy, late of Company F, One hundred and eighty-seventh New York Infantry, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, were read:

In line 6 strike out the words "private and musician" and insert in lieu thereof the word "of."

In line 7 strike out the word "volunteers;" and in the same line, before the word "infantry," insert the word "volunteer."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty;" in the same line, after the word "month," insert the words "in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ERNST PITSCHNER.

The next business was the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Ernst Pitschner.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ernst Pitschner, late of Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably.

JOSEPH ZIMMERMAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 9981) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Zimmerman.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Zimmerman, late a sergeant of Company I, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, at the increase rate of $24 per month.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Zimmerman, late of Company I, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

GORTON BROWN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 11198) granting an increase of pension to Gorton Brown.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Gorton Brown, late of Company C, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $72 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the adoption of the following amendment:

In line 8 strike out the word "seventy-two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Before that, Mr. Chairman, let us have some explanation of this bill or let us have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. GIBSON. I will state to the House, for the purpose of saving time, that this soldier is now absolutely helpless, being paralyzed in every extremity and can not move any part of his body.

Mr. STEELE. I do not care about anything more. If he is paralyzed in every extremity, he ought to have the pension.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported favorably.

DAVID R. ELLIS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4887) to increase the pension of David R. Ellis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of David R. Ellis, late an engineer's yeoman on the steamship Monitor in the United States Navy, and afterwards on steamship Sassacus in same service during the war of the rebellion, and that he receive a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that which he now receives.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the adoption of the following amendments:

In line 3 strike out all after the word "be" and all of lines 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of David R. Ellis, late of the U. S. steamships Monitor, Tunxis, and Sassacus, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to David R. Ellis."

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask why in this man's case he is allowed $40 a month, as it is not shown that he is paralyzed in every extremity, while the other one, who is so paralyzed, gets only thirty?

Mr. GIBSON. I can say, if the gentleman will allow me, that the committee endeavor to draw a distinction in accordance with the probability of the disability being incurred in the service. Where there is a strong probability that it is of service origin we give him a higher rate than where there is no such probability. That is where we draw the line.

Now, the Bureau of Pensions requires that it shall be proven beyond reasonable doubt that the disability was incurred in the service. The committee was satisfied by reasonable evidence that this was the case, and where there is reasonable evidence we divide the pension allowed by law in what we regard to be an equitable manner as developed by the evidence. Of course, if the evidence was conclusive the whole pension would be granted. For instance, if this man, whose disability is total, suffered that disability in the service, he would get $72. But where the evidence is not conclusive we stop at fifty, and where there is no such probability we stop sometimes at thirty or forty, according to the necessities of the man and poverty of himself and family, and endeavor to make as fair a distinction as we can, with a view of equalizing pensions to all of these people.

Now, here is a man who served for all of these years, beginning February 4, 1862, down to May 13, 1865. We look at the length of a soldier's service and give a soldier who has had a long and honorable service, with a certain disability, a greater rate of pension than a soldier with the same disability but with a short term of service.

In the case before the committee this soldier served a long time. He is exceedingly poor, and has a wife and five children dependent upon him for support.

Taking these things into consideration, the committee were content to give him the rate of $40 a month.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HARRIET A. WILSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 7912) granting a pension to Harriett A. Wilson, widow of Col. Lewis Wilson.

Swearer, widow of John Swearer, late a mechanic of the Engineer Department, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $8 per month."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know why this poor woman is put in here at $8 a month, when the one just before this was given $30 a month?

Mr. GIBSON. The woman just before this was the wife of a colonel of the regiment. We were satisfied that his death resulted from causes in the service, and that would be the amount she would be entitled to under the general law.

Mr. STEELE. Well, if they were entitled to it under the general law, they can get it in the Pension Office. Now, here you cut this poor woman down——

Mr. GIBSON. We do not cut her down, at all.

Mr. STEELE. Well, you do not cut her up, then. [Laughter.] I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend by making it $12 a month.

Mr. GIBSON. The committee has given her what the law would give her.

Mr. STEELE. The law does not give them anything in these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Strike out "eight" and insert "twelve."

The question on the amendment to the amendment was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEELE) there were 31 ayes and no noes.

In line 8 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Julia A. Gilpin."

Mr. STEELE. How is it that we are proposing to pension home guards at $30 a month?

Mr. GIBSON. The husband of this lady was a lieutenant-colonel of the Third Potomac Home Guard Maryland Volunteers, in the service of the United States. He served from September 8, 1862, to June 2, 1865.

Mr. STEELE. Was it home-guard service or service of the United States?

Mr. GIBSON. "Home Guard" is the name of the organization. This lady was married to this officer in 1848. She is a war widow. If his death were directly attributable to his Army service, she would be entitled to a pension of $30 a month. While the proof does not clearly show that the officer's death was attributable to Army service, we have given her the benefit of the doubt. She is a very old woman, and very poor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

REBECCA HARVEY.

The next business was the bill (S. 1984) granting a pension to Rebecca Harvey.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GIBSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

LOUIS HEBEL.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee is about to move that the committee do now rise. Before that is done I should like to call the attention of the committee to Calendar No. 1251 (H. R. 11552), granting an increase of pension to Louis Hebel. This is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL]. The case presents a very pitiable condition. This man is Mr. BOUTELL'S close neighbor. It is very evident that the bill can not be reached in its regular order today. It will cause no one any inconvenience, as we are about to rise anyway. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered before the committee rises.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take up Calendar No. 1251. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill (H. R. 11552) granting an increase of pension to Louis Hebel was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name Louis Hebel, late of Company

E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment was read:

In line 8 strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve."

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope that amendment will not be carried. If necessary, a statement can be made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] showing why it should not be carried. The evidence that has come to me lately makes it very plain that the man ought to have $24 a month instead of $12. So I hope the amendment will be voted down without taking the time of the House.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move now that the committee rise and report to the House the several bills as to which there has been a favorable recommendation, some with and some without amendments, and that the bills do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry private bills and had directed him to report the same back to the House, some with and some without amendments, and with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GIBSON. I move the previous question on each and all the several bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves the previous question on each and all the bills and amendments to final passage. This motion will have to be put by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the motion?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The following House bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 11159. A bill granting a pension to John W. Phillips;

H. R. 2472. A bill to correct the military record of John H. Finfrock;

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9043. An act granting an increase of pension to David S. Snyder.

CHARLES A. BOUTELLE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

House joint resolution 277, to appoint Charles A. Boutelle a captain on the retired list of the Navy, was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint upon the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of captain, Charles A. Boutelle, formerly a volunteer lieutenant on the active list of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JETT. Mr. Speaker, I am of opinion that this measure ought to be considered in a full House. I am not desirous of objecting, but I would like to ask my friend from Maine to let this matter go over and be considered some time in a full House. This is in a manner a deviation, I suppose. So far as I am informed, at least, there has been no legislation of this character heretofore, and for that reason I believe the matter ought to be considered in a full House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will state for the information of the gentleman from Illinois that while there are no cases precisely parallel in every particular with this, there are at least eight precedents for practically similar action, none of which, I apprehend, will be considered, perhaps, as meritorious as this. The friends of Mr. BOUTELLE are very anxious to have the matter passed upon as speedily as possible. Of course there are other complications involved in the matter which perhaps will very readily be understood. For that reason I have been requested to call it up several times before, but this is the first opportunity I have had.

Mr. JETT. Do you say there are precedents similar to this?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There are at least eight instances in which men have been placed upon the retired list of the Navy by special acts of Congress. There is no instance where a man so placed on the retired list of the Navy performed the public service that Captain BOUTELLE did in addition to his service performed while in the Navy, so that the precedents are not in line with this case to a certain extent; they are not precedents so far as the circumstances are concerned.

Mr. JETT. I was not desirous of making objection. I know something about the circumstances.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. I would like to inquire if Mr. BOUTELLE was reelected to the next Congress?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; but there is no question but that it will be absolutely impossible for him to serve. His physical condition has changed in some degree, and the conditions have changed somewhat from the time when he was elected.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. He is still a member of the present Congress?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; he is.

Mr. JAMES R. WILLIAMS. And he is reelected to the next Congress?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But he will undoubtedly resign as a member of the next Congress.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will allow me a moment, before the request for unanimous consent is put, I desire to state that, having served here with Mr. BOUTELLE, and knowing his estimable character, I would dislike to interfere with the passage of the bill by making an objection, but I do not believe it is right in principle. I believe it is the beginning of a civil-service pension list, although he goes on the retired list of the Navy, instead of the civil service.

As there is no opportunity for a roll call to-night without developing the fact that there is no quorum here, and therefore defeating the passage of the gentleman's bill, I merely want to take this time to say that I am opposed to the bill and expect to vote against it, so that the record when the gentleman brings it up may show that individually at least I was opposed to the passage of the bill. I do not wish to interfere with the business of the House.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment striking out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was passed.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

G. W. CLARK & SON.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTLETT obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of G. W. Clark & Son, Fifty-fifth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CITY OF MACON.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BARTLETT obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of the city of Macon, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GAMBLE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. TALBERT, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation under the Bureau of Yards and Docks—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for pay of a director of physical training at Annapolis, Md.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1900.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 2955) providing for the resurvey of township No. 8 of range No. 30 west of the sixth principal meridian, in Frontier County, State of Nebraska; which had previously been signed on May 21, 1900, by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION AT WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, relative to the expenses incurred by the governors of the States and Territories in attending the anniversary celebration of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia.

The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine to this communication. It relates to the question of the expenses of the governors of the several States coming to the centennial anniversary. That committee is still in existence?

Mr. HALE. There are some things in the way of settling these very questions on which the committee will have to meet, and I think the communication had better be sent to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the communication will be referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Establishment of the Seat of Government in Washington.

Mr. HALE subsequently said: On reflection, as the question relates to an item in the appropriation bill touching the centennial celebration, I ask that the reference be changed and that the communication go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair wishes that the Senator from Maine would read the communication when he has leisure.

Mr. HALE. I shall take occasion to do so very soon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may require legislation and not an appropriation.

DISPOSAL OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, certain information relative to the accumulation of useless papers of no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting authority to destroy such papers from time to time in the future whenever they shall have been on the files of the commission at least five years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTES OF PENNSYLVANIA AND GEORGIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the States of Pennsylvania and Georgia at the election held therein on the 6th day of November, 1900; which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the Progress Report of Cooperative Investigation by the United States Geological Survey and the California Water and Forest Association during the year 1900.

TREATY WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not in his judgment incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate all information and copies of all correspondence between this Government and the Government of Colombia, showing the steps, if any, that have been taken by this Government to secure a treaty between the two Governments or a modification by Colombia of existing treaties or concessions with the view of securing to the United States the right to construct a canal over the territory of Colombia between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that is executive business, and I move that the Senate now go into executive session.

Mr. GALLINGER. Pending the motion, I rise to make a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw his motion?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, and for formal business.

CONSIDERATION OF THE PENSION CALENDAR.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I request that to-morrow morning, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, thirty minutes be devoted to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, after the completion of the routine morning business, thirty minutes be given to the consideration of unobjected pension cases. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATUS OF TENNESSEE ENROLLED MILITIA.

Mr. TURLEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the claims of the officers and enlisted men of the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Regiments of the enrolled militia, which constituted a part of the garrison of Memphis and of the western district of Tennessee, for pay and other compensation while in the service of the United States as a part of its Army organization, and to report to the Senate by what authority these forces were organized, the approximate number of officers and enlisted men enlisted, the kind and duration of service done, whether or not these forces have received any pay from the Government, if not, why they were not paid, and the approximate amount of money which would be required if the scale of pay and allowances then applicable to the soldiers of the United States Army were applied to the above-named organizations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 18, 1900.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SOUTHERN DIVISION OF THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12447) to amend an act approved June 1, A. D. 1900, entitled "An act to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is simply local in its character and provides for a change in the term of courts in the division of the district court for the southern district of Iowa, and provides for the transfer of cases that have been begun in other divisions that should have been begun in this to this division. That is all there is of it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this has been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. HEPBURN. It has been reported by the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will complete the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of said act be amended by striking out the words "on the third Monday of May and the fourth Monday of September of each year" and inserting in lieu thereof the following words, to wit: "on the fourth Tuesday in March and the third Tuesday in October of each year."

SEC. 2. That section 2 of said act is amended by adding to the said section 2 the words "and all civil suits now pending in other divisions of said circuit court for said southern district which, if commenced after the passage hereof, would be brought in said southern division shall, upon the application of either party, be removed for trial, judgment, or decree to said southern division."

The following amendment was proposed by the committee:

In line 3 strike out the word "said" and insert in lieu thereof the word "an;" and in the same line, after the word "act," insert "entitled 'An act to create the southern division of the southern district of Iowa for judicial purposes, and to fix the time and place for holding court therein,' approved June 1, 1900."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT DUBUQUE, IOWA.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5053) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Dubuque, Iowa, approved March 6, 1900, is hereby amended by striking out the words "two hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and seventy-five."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5076. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in the northern judicial district of the State of Ohio.

J. L. PEARCY.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri offers the following report from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 317.

Resolved, That J. L. Pearcy, of Tennessee, be appointed as special messenger to serve in the room assigned the minority side of the House, under the direction of the Doorkeeper, at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund until otherwise provided.

With the following amendments recommended by the committee:

After the word "serve," in line 2, insert the words "during the present session of Congress."

After the word "salary," in line 4, insert the words "at the rate of."

In line 5 strike out the words "until otherwise provided for," and insert, after the word "fund," the words "of the House."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MOVING AND CATALOGUING BOOKS AND DOCUMENTS.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged report, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 313.

Resolved, That for the purpose of completing the work of moving, cleaning, and cataloguing the books, documents, and pamphlets in the House and Clerk's document rooms, under the direction of the Select Committee on the Disposition of Documents, the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House for labor and clerical assistance, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was agreed to.

WALTER O. HOFFECKER.

Mr. JOY. Mr. Speaker, I also ask for the present consideration of the following resolution (H. Res. 304), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Walter O. Hoffecker the sum of $53.32, being the amount due him as clerk of the late Representative John H. Hoffecker from June 1 to June 16, 1900, inclusive.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JOY, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the three several resolutions were passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Under agreement, this day has been set apart for the consideration of business reported by the Committee of the District of Columbia. I desire, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to the fact that Senate bill 1929 has by error been placed upon the House Calendar. It should have been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, as it appropriates real estate and other property belonging to the Government or the District.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the transfer to the proper Calendar will be made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of District bills on that Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

GRADE CROSSINGS, ETC., OF BALTIMORE AND POTOMAC RAILROAD.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the present consideration of Senate bill 1929.

The Clerk proceeded to read, as follows, the bill (S. 1929) to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, and requiring the said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, empowered, authorized, and required to revise, change, and improve the alignment and grade of its railroad, and to relocate parts thereof within the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, as hereinafter provided, to wit:

Beginning at a point in its present tunnel under Virginia avenue near the intersection of Eighth street SE., and extending thence by a continuation of said tunnel, with a width sufficient for two tracks, along and under Virginia avenue to the west side of Second street SE.; thence in the open, with a width sufficient for four main tracks, along what would be Virginia avenue if extended through reservation 17, now called Garfield Park, to another section of Virginia avenue as now opened at South Capitol street; thence along said last-mentioned section of Virginia avenue to a connection with its present four main tracks and a right of way near Delaware avenue; thence continuing said four tracks along and on said Virginia avenue and Maryland avenue to the Potomac River; and also from points on said last-described line, that is to say, from east of Sixth street SW.; thence by a curved line with three tracks crossing over Sixth street SW., Maryland avenue, and B street SW., to and upon that portion of the Mall hereinafter described; and from a point west of Seventh street SW. by a curved line, with three tracks over Seventh street SW., Maryland avenue, and B streets SW., to and upon said portion of said Mall, with such grade, and at such elevations, with reference to the streets of said city, and on such locations as are shown on plans and profiles prepared by said railroad company, and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and as hereinafter specified; it being the purpose of this act that the said railroad shall be located under Sixth street SE., Fifth street SE., Fourth street SE., Third street SE., and Second street SE., in a tunnel as aforesaid; that New Jersey avenue shall be carried over said railroad on an iron or steel bridge; and that said railroad shall be carried over South Capitol street, Delaware avenue, First street SW., Second street SW., Third street SW., Four-and-a-half street SW., Sixth street SW., Seventh street SW., Maryland avenue, and B street SW., and that Ninth street SW., Tenth street SW., Eleventh street SW., and Twelfth street SW. shall be carried over said railroad on iron or steel bridges. The railroad shall also be carried over Water street SW.

REMOVAL OF TRACKS FROM SIXTH, K, AND CANAL STREETS.

SEC. 2. That the said Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, required to remove its present eastern connection between its passenger station and its line on Virginia avenue via Sixth street, including all tracks on Sixth street, and its western connection via Maryland avenue, and to change and relocate its tracks connecting with the new terminus contemplated by this act, in the manner authorized and provided by the preceding section hereof, and as shown on the plans and profiles in said section referred to, and also shall remove its tracks from K street and Canal street, east of New Jersey avenue SE.; and said tracks which are to be abandoned shall be removed within sixty days after the new track is ready for use, and the roadway of said Sixth street between B street S. and B street N. shall be provided with a modern pavement at the expense of said railroad company, to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

STATION BUILDING.
